ITALIANS ADVANCING

Force Wedge in the Enemy's Line.

Victor Emmanuel Clearing Way for the Capture of City of Trieste.

New Successes by the French are Reported from South of the Somme.

BY FRED B. PITNEY.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PARIS, Oct. 14.—The Italians have pushed forward their lines in the Gorzia sector and have consolidated all their recently-won positions on the Carso Plateau. Swinging forward on the Sober Ridge, southeast of Gorizia, on which they obtained a grip several days ago, King Victor's troops extended their hold as far as the San Pietro-Prebacina road, immediately north of the Wippach River.

This operation marks another step in the movement of the Italians to drive a wedge between the enemy's positions north and south of the Carso plateau and thus force back the whole line. Apparently the Austrian lines east of Gorizia already are exposed to flank attacks from the Italians to the south. The ultimate aim of the Italians is to compel the enemy to leave unguarded the road to Trieste in the regions of Monfalcone, and then launch the drive on that port in earnest.

Today's Austrian official communication tells of the repulse of Italian attempts to advance beyond the San [illegible] line on the lower Isonzo, and north of the Wippach. The Bersaglieri suffered severe losses in assaults against the Austrian positions north of Locvizza, the statement adds.

WHEAT CROP VERY SHORT.

Canada will do Well this Coming Winter to Feed Herself.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

OTTAWA, Oct. 14.—The wheat crop of Canada for the present year will be only 159,123,000 bushels as compared with 376,303,600 bushels in 1915, according to an official estimate issued today.

GAINS BY THE FRENCH SOUTH OF THE SOMME.

BY ARTHUR S. DRAPER.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, Oct. 14.—The French won fresh successes south of the Somme today. East of Belloy-en-Santerre, Foch's troops captured a first German line on a front of more than a mile. To the southwest of this region they swept forward from Bovent for nearly a mile and seized the hamlet of Genermont, while they also extended their lines near Ablaincourt, winning a strongly defended sugar refinery. Eight hundred Germans were made prisoners in these operations.

Meanwhile powerful counter-attacks southwest of St. Pierre Vaast Wood and north of Chaulnes won for the Germans minor successes. In the former region, according to Berlin, "the advantages gained by the French in former attacks were retaken.

North of Chaulnes Saxon troops by a dashing raid regained the eastern part of Ambos Wood and captured more than 400 French prisoners.

In Ablaincourt, at the tip of the salient held by Foch's troops, north of Chaulnes, a furious attack enabled the Germans to seize several positions and some trenches to the northeast of the village. These they did not

IMPLORES OUR AID.

Briton Urges Us to Make Peace.

Member of Parliament Denies it Would be Impertinence to Intervene.

Lloyd George's Bloody Talk in no Way Represents England, He Says.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK BUREAU OF THE TIMES, Oct. 14.—J. H. Whitehouse, member of the British Parliament and chairman of the Committee on Education in the House of Commons, before more than 200 members of the City Club of New York today, directly contradicted the sentiments recently uttered by David Lloyd George, Secretary of State for War to the effect that peace suggestions from the United States or any other neutral would be unwelcome at this time to Great Britain and her allies.

Mr. Whitehouse said such talk did not represent the true feeling in England.

WANT OUR ASSISTANCE.

"When I hear of Englishmen and English newspapers saying we do not want advice from America, I say these thoughts do not represent liberal England," Mr. Whitehouse said. "We desire your assistance. We want your help. We welcome your advice and friendship, your science, your thought, your philosophy.

"Some people speak of this war going on for many years. I pray that it does not. What is the greatest problem before England, and all the countries of Europe and the United States as well? It is that this shall be the last war, and I pray that the United States in conjunction with England will work toward that end.

"I say to you there will be no impertinence in America proffering her assistance and ending this bloodshed. By reason of her position, the noblest thing for America to do would be to come forward sooner or later with proposals for help—enduring proposals which would bring not temporary, patched-up peace but a permanent peace based on a true international organization of the world. God grant that time may come quickly."

SCENES IN ANTWERP.

Mr. Whitehouse told of being in Antwerp during the shelling of the city, and attending an intercession service in the Antwerp cathedral.

"I shall never forget the faces of the Belgian women in the cathedral," he said. "And then I turn to my own country, and recall that some 5000 or 6000 of the bravest, most promising young men of England are being killed or mutilated every day. Think of it, since breakfast this morning, thousands of our boys have been maimed or killed. And coming as I do, fresh from these scenes, I do not speak lightly of a war of exhaustion. When I see the boys return from the front, mutilated for life, they seem to me more like children that I used to teach only a short while ago.

"And why do I say these things. Simply because from time to time you will see articles from England that no assistance from America is required."

ECONOMICS.

Mr. Whitehouse deplored the economic policy espoused by some of the British statesmen, aimed to cripple commercially the present enemies of the allies after the war.

"I do not believe in a war after this war," said Mr. Whitehouse. "I should regret a trade agreement, hostile toward our present enemies but tending at the same time to antagonize the United Stiaes because it would tend to sever the relations of friendship between two great nations—the English and American nations. I agree in this respect with Lord Bryce, who has the true international spirit, and has always stood for the best in the liberal spirit in England.

"I have heard it said in America that there is a feeling of hostility in England toward this country. Let me speak quite frankly. I do not think these criticisms represent more than a wholly insignificant portion of the British public. I will go further and say that for the most part there is only a feeling of the warmest regard and friendliness in England for the United States.

"We believe that America each day occupies a position of more and more influence with regard to the destinies of the world, and we who claim to be Liberals say that American views must be regarded at the close of the war, whenever that comes."

ANGLO-AMERICAN RELATIONS.

Mr. Whitehouse was billed to speak, following a luncheon, on the subject of the "new social problems arising out of the European war," but the major portion of his address was devoted to a discussion of English-American relations and the propriety of America's offering suggestions for the ending of the bloodshed.

He touched on the human economic waste in English public education before the war, saying that children were turned out of the

COMMENT ON THE SITUATION.

While the U-boat menace appears to be as real as ever no further depredations have been reported. The U-53 is believed to be en route to Germany and a second submarine is thought to be on the way to this side. Lloyd George has been misrepresenting British sentiment as to peace, according to a statement of a prominent member of Parliament, and it is true, Mr. Whitehouse says, that England would welcome a move by the United States to end what he calls a useless war. On the other hand (and also on the same day,) Mr. Wilson iterates and reiterates: "I can't." He says his hands are tied and his lips are glued when it comes to the business of consulting the belligerents on a question of sanity and reason.

The absurd is still true of Mexico. We have a respectable force of troops in Mexico. So has Carranza. Villa is still loose and Mr. Wilson, in a letter to the Governor of New York, protests that the border menace is as real as ever. He denies that the guards are kept there to complete their military training.

MILLIONAIRE CATTLEMAN HENRY MILLER IS DEAD.

Owner of an Estate Twice the Size of Belgium and the Greatest Land Baron in California Passes Away in San Francisco—Came Here Penniless and Began Work as a Butcher's Boy.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN FRANCISCO BUREAU OF THE TIMES, Oct. 14.—Henry Miller, listed among California's most notable men, who rose from the humble job of a butcher boy in San Francisco to a position of millionaire cattle king of the West, died this afternoon in his ninetieth year at the home of his only daughter, Mrs. J. Leroy Nickel, No. 2101 Laguna street.

Miller, who was one of the founders of the famous firm of Miller & Lux, has been confined to his home for two years prior to the end. For two days before death claimed him Miller had been unconscious.

It has been said that the secret of the rise of Henry Miller to the position of millionaire cattle baron was that he possessed a remarkable knowledge of cattle and equally remarkable judgment of men. He owned, at the time of his death, "a western empire twice the size of Belgium."

Take away from California the Miller holdings and one would take away a large-sized portion of the State, and the same statement holds true for Nevada and Oregon.

FIRM KNOWN WORLD OVER.

The firm of Miller & Lux is known from one end of the world to another. Over its broad stretches of land runs the famous "Dirty Plate Route," a course followed by countles hobos, who are assured, at each ranch house, a generous meal or two and a place to stop for the night.

Romance is interwoven in the career of Henry Miller—the romance of a rugged West, of virile pioneers, of fortune wrested from the earth's surface and from beneath.

Miller never knew exactly how much land he held. Several years ago experts estimated approximately 22,717 square miles, or 14,539,200 acres, were under his control, mostly in California, Nevada and Oregon. Miller, it has been said, could drive a herd of cattle from Arizona to Oregon, through the great Central California Valley and each night camp on his own land. A no stage of his trip would he be out of sight of one of his own ranches.

More land was held on the Pacific Coast by Miller than by any other individual. At times, 150,000 cattle and 100,000 sheep grazing on western pastures bore the "M" brand. The firm of Miller & Lux operated a chain of slaughter-houses, banks, stores and hotels, in addition to the ranches and ranges. The managers and clerks were numbered by hundreds and vacueros were paid in scores. Traction engines were bought by the dozen and barb wire fencing and seed by the carload. They reckoned in miles, not acres.

Friends said Henry Miller's policy was always to buy and never to sell. As a boy he had visions of wealth. He bought lanad when the Spanish and American owners sold it cheap, hoarded his property and lived his dream.

CAREER OF MILLER.

Miller was born in Brackenheim, Wurttemberg, July 21, 1827. When 20 years old he emigrated to America, penniless, and worked as a butcher boy in the Washington market in New York City. In 1849 gold was discovered in California and Miller followed the hordes of gold seekers to the Pacific. In 1850 he was still a butcher boy in San Francisco.

In 1851 he launched into business for himself. He met Charles Lux and six years later the two formed the partnership that helped make history on western ranges. Their most active days were when the great sweeps of the California valleys stretched fenceless from the Sierra Nevada foothills to the Coast Range and when the vast land grants were devoted mainly to cattle raising. Gradually they watched the settlers come, and their ranches marked off by barb wire and orchards grow up where cattle had formerly roamed.

Miller married in 1860 Miss Sarah Wilmarth Sheldon. In 1887 Lux died, and the business was incorporated, Miller retaining large interests. In his later years Miller remained in the seclusion of his San Francisco home with his daughter, seldom visiting his many ranches. He was last of the great California land barons. Dismemberment of his domains probably will come soon, for conservation policies, high land taxes and clamoring settlers make the cattle empires of old impossible.

GERMANS APPEAL APPAM DECREE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—German claimants today appealed to the Supreme Court from the decree of the Virginia Federal courts awarding the cargo of the prize ship Appam to British interests. Appeals against the decision awarding the ship to a British line already have been filed. The ship reports $1,250,000 and the cargo $600,000. Both appeals probably will be heard together. The Appam was brought into Newport News a German prize several months ago.

CONVENTION GOES TO KANSAS CITY.

CHURCHES OF CHRIST SELECT NEXT MEETING PLACE.

Inability of Dr. Ira Landrith to Deliver an Address Puts Damper on Gathering at Des Moines. Increased Activity to Prevent Labor Troubles Expected.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

DES MOINES (Iowa) Oct. 14.—The inability of Dr. Ira Landrith, Prohibition candidate for Vice-President, to attend and deliver an address, put a damper on tonight's session of the annual international convention of the Churches of Christ, the closing business session of the meeting Dr. Landrith notified the committee at the last moment that his campaign engagement would not permit him to attend.

Dr. Edgar Blake, of Chicago, secretary of the board of Sunday-schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church, addressed the convention on the importance of the Sunday-school in furnishing a foundation for future church building.

The convention will close tomorrow night.

By unanimous vote Kansas City today was chosen as the meeting place of the 1917 national convention. The date for the meeting will be decided on later.

ELECT JUDGE HAYMAKER.

Judge J. N. Haymaker of Wichita, Kan., was elected president of the general convention, the ruling church body.

The Committee on Resolutions recommended increased activity on the part of the church to prevent labor troubles, pledged the church to do all in its power to bring about closer amicable relations between employers and employees and the ultimate consumer. It also called attention to "settlement of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company strike by personal intervention of John D. Rockefeller, Jr."

Following are the other officers, all of whom were unanimously chosen:

First vice-president, Rev. George A. Campbell, Hannibal, Mo.; second vice-president, E. M. Bowman, Chicago; third vice-president, Mrs. R. S. Latshaw, Kansas City, Mo.; treasurer, Col. F. W. Fleming, Kansas City, Mo.; recording secretary, the Rev. W. E. Crabtree, San Diego, Cal.; corresponding secretary, the Rev. Graham Franklin, Liberty, Mo.

Members of the Executive Committee, elected for four years: C. C. Chapman, Los Angeles, Cal.; the Rev. J. H. Goldner, Cleveland, O.

MESSAGES OF GREETING.

Messages of greeting and expressing hope for advancement of the movement for church unity were received today from the convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church at St. Louis and from the Rev. J. A. Marquis, moderator of the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Cedar Rapids.

Afternoon sessions of the convention were devoted to the National Benevolent Association.

Menace.

ALL ATLANTIC VESSELS MAY BE IN DANGER.

Two Authenticated Reports of Submarine Hovering Off Our Coast.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK BUREAU OF THE TIMES, Oct. 14.—Eighty of the original one hundred and sixty-five cabin passengers booked to sail on the Espagne of the French line, today cancelled their passage at the last moment because of the submarine menace in the North Atlantic. Among those who did sail were twenty-five American college graduates who have enlisted for six months' service in the Norton Harjes Ambulance Corps on the Verdun front in France.

The captain of the White Star freighter Bovic, which arrived here today, reported that he sighted a submarine yesterday about 250 miles east of New York, apparently chasing the Danish steamship Hellig Olav of the Scandinavian-American line. At noon, today however, the local offices of the Scandinavian-American line received a radio message from the Hellig Olav stating that the vessel was 653 miles off the Ambrose lightship and proceeding eastward. The message said nothing about an encounter with a German submarine.

It was the usual midday report which the captain of the liner was required to send as long as he was in touch with New York. It was received a short time after the offices had sent a radio inquiry to the Hellig Olav asking about the report of her pursuit by a submarine. Nothing has been heard of the Hellig Olav since.

Capt. J. J. Jones of the Bovic, when he reached the offices of the White Star line this afternoon declared that he was about sixty miles east of the Nantucket lightship when he distinguished the periscope of the submarine. Through his marine glass it was plainly visible he said.

"It was 8:30 o'clock in the morning and the weather was clear," Capt. Jones added. "There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that what I saw was a periscope. It was moving toward the Danish boat at a good rate of speed."

Capt. Jones said the submarine was in about the same position as when the British steamship Strathdene was sunk last Sunday. "We had passed the Hellig Olav when the submarine made for her," he said. "We saw the Hellig suddenly veer off to the southward and then swerve sharply to the east, as though trying to zigzag away from the submarine." The Hellig Olav sailed from this port on Thursday afternoon with about 350 passengers, thirty-six of whom were in the first cabin. Among them were several Americans. The vessel carried no munitions of war or other contraband cargo, such being contrary to the policy of the line.

Probably the engines of the Bovic never pounded harder than they did for the next few hours after Capt. Jones saw the submarine. Mile after mile of the 250 separating the ship from New York was passed and no further sign of the German boat was seen. The Bovic carried a 4.7 in. naval rifle mounted on her forward deck when she docked at pier 59 North River today, but the weapon was not used against the submarine she sighted yesterday.

RIGHT TO SEARCH MAILS REITERATED BY ALLIES.

In Their Latest Reply to Protest by American Government Against Interference with Our Correspondence French and British Declare They are not Overstepping and will Redress Wrongs.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—In their latest reply to American protests against interference with neutral mails, made public tonight by the State Department, the allied governments reiterate their right to intercept and search all genuine mail found on neutral vessels on the high seas or in allied ports, but they promise to remedy "any faults, abuses or serious mistakes" in censorship that may be brought to their attention. They declare unjustified by facts the American charge that illegal jurisdiction has been gained by diversion of neutral ships from the high seas into the territorial waters of the allies. The next move of the American government has not been determined.

The note, transmitted jointly by the British and French governments, was delivered to the State Department by the embassies last Thursday, but was not made public until tonight. It makes reply to Secretary Lansing's memorandum of May 24, in which the United States declared the allies had been guilty of "lawless practices" in their mail censorship methods and that "only a radical change, restoring to the United States its full rights as a neutral power, will satisfy this government."

OBJECT OF ALLIES.

It is maintained by the allies that they are "sincerely endeavoring to avoid any encroachment on the legitimate exercise of the rights of inoffensive neutral commerce." Delays and annoyances are unavoidable, it is pointed out, in the exercise of full belligerent rights, and a long list of precedents are cited, to support the validity of the allied censorship methods. It is suggested that The Hague convention quoted in the American memorandum is not binding because it has not been ratified by several belligerent powers.

In an informal memorandum submitted some time ago Great Britain pointed out at length the changes made in censorship methods to expedite mail examination. These changes are only referred to briefly in the present communication.

NOTE IS LENGTHY.

The note is nearly 5000 words in length. It argues that the United States and the allies agree that the postal union convention does not apply and that postal packages may be examined to see if they contain contraband. That being so, the note contends it is necessary to open postal bags, and examination cannot take place at sea without delay and inconvenience. Arrangements now have been made to carry on the examination with the least possible delay.

Although The Hague convention of 1907 has not been accepted by some of the belligerents, the note says the allies are prepared to accept the principle in the preamble as to "guarantees due to peaceful commerce and legitimate business," but cannot abandon their right to prevent the fraudulent use by the enemy of neutral mails for belligerent purposes. The case of the Atlanta is cited to show information can be as useful a means of war as ammunition, and the note says information as to military operations and enemy plots in neutral countries, especially the United States, had been discovered in this way.

An examination of precedents is held to show that the great powers have claimed the right to intercept enemy correspondence in neutral mails. The lines of President Lincoln's proclamation of May 12, 1862, which declared things and information as equally contraband of war, and cites the fact that intercepted enemy correspondence was used in the United States courts during the Civil War and laid before Congress.

AS TO MONEY ORDERS.

The contention of the United States, the note argues, that money order lists should be classed as genuine mail and not as merchandise, does not take into consideration that such lists sent from the United States to Germany and Austria by mail correspond to money deposited in this country and serve as a notification to postal authorities of the Teutonic powers to pay out the amounts indicated, increasing the financial resistance of the allies' enemies.

In view of this money-order lists are refused passage.

In connection with the reminder that the United States already has agreed that examination of private postal correspondence to ascertain whether it contains contraband is permissible, the note says:

"It is evident that this examination, which necessarily entails the opening of the covers in order to ascertain their contents, could not be carried on aboard without involving a great deal of confusion, without causing serious delay to the mails, passengers and cargo, and without great risk of error, loss or non-delivery. It was for these reasons that the allies have initiated the removal of the mail bags and their dispatch to points provided, for prompt and regular handling. In all these the allied governments have no other purpose but that of diminishing by all means in their power the inconvenience that the legitimate exercise of their belligerent rights in regard to enemy mail might cause to inoffensive neutral correspondence and to neutral vessels."

After asserting that the United States and the allies are in agreement on principles but differ on application, the note, in reply to Secretary Lansing's declaration that "the allies compel neutral ships without just cause to enter their own ports, thus acquiring by force or unjustifiable means an illegal jurisdiction," says:

"The allied governments have never differentiated between their treatment of mails on board a neutral vessel on the high seas and those on board a neutral vessel compulsorily diverted to an allied port. They have always recognized that visits carried out in a port to which a vessel has been compulsorily diverted must in this respect be as-

Lord Roberts Calls Germany England's Best Friend; War Saves Us from Degeneracy.

Keynote.

OUR SPIRIT AWAKENED, SAYS "BOBS" FROM TOMB

National Tonic Arrived, the General's View, in Posthumous Essay.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK BUREAU OF THE TIMES, Oct. 14.—The following remarkable essay, written by Lord Roberts, commander-in-chief of the English army, about two weeks before he died, and never before published, was made public today by Cosmo Hamilton, the English novelist and dramatist, who was at one time a member of Lord Roberts's staff. Lord Roberts wrote:

"There is one aspect of the great European war with which, so far as I know, no one has had the courage to deal. Many pens have been busy writing of its horrors—its extraordinary developments in science and chemistry—the heroism of its units—the great beauty that has been brought out by it in the way of human sacrifice and the unaccountable number of individual acts of exquisite kindness. It remains to deal with its need.

"I am one of those who hold that this was virtually necessary to all of the nations engaged in it, as well as to those who are standing aside, and, it is hoped, learning lessons. The history of the world makes it very clear that at the moment when countries arrive at over-civilization something must happen, and that something is war.

WHEN DEGENERACY COMES.

"As soon as nations become over-civilized, degeneracy sets in. The first set of persons to be attacked is that which forms the governments of the country. While it is true that governments are never representative and politicians are merely parasites, even under the best conditions, it is astonishing how quickly the example of their dishonest self-seeking and inefficiency runs through the nations which they do not represent.

"It is very natural for a man, let him be British, French, Italian or German, who watches the petty squabbles, the steady and growing pilferings of his government, to become affected and gradually grow out of the habit of straight thinking and honest dealing. A general carelessness sets in, like a blight. It spreads to the younger generation and a diseased country is very quickly brought to the condition when it must either die or be operated upon. It is the inevitable law both of nature and nations. Then comes war. The final test. If a country has any health left in its constitution it revives, gathers itself together, makes the most tremendous sacrifices, puts forth an effort of strength of which no man thought it capable and rises like the phoenix from the flames.

"War places it upon the operating table and cuts out of its body the cancerous growths which are the results of over-civilization. The pendulum swings back again and the convalescent nation makes a new beginning.

FALLACY OF PACIFISM.

"Pacifism and the desire for pacifism shows not only an utter ignorance of history and the psychology of nations, but is itself a proof of the arrival of degeneracy and that curious form of brain anaemia, which is one of the worst diseases that can affect a nation. The moment when a nation has become over-civilized is shown by a sudden outbreak of twisted thought. Directly a country's press becomes full of articles putting forward anti-vivisectionism, a peace at any price, the criminality of corporal punishment and hysterical petitions against the taking of degenerate life, it is time for the wise man to take stock. Anaemia has set in and a tonic is badly needed—iron being the best of them. With anaemia comes the disinclination to look facts in the face and politicians—indicating the policy of the ostrich, commence to hide their heads so that they may not see the approach of troubles. Then, inevitably, the labor market becomes unsettled. Demagogues seize every opportunity to show their strength and labor is organized against capital. Trades unions, finding weaklings against them, commence to bully. All the tendencies of effeteness, pervertism and national carelessness set in one after the other. Politicians demand pay for work which should be patriotically given to the nation, men, women and children sneak out of conforming to the religious observances of a former generation, all men begin to live above their income, a grotesque extravagance in women's dress follows, schoolboys and undergraduates think it necessary to begin where their fathers left off, finally a political corruption begins to be the smart thing. The nation has begun to live for the moment and it refuses to look into the day after tomorrow.

WHAT GERMANY HAS DONE.

"Even at this time, when men are still out of their habit of looking truth in the face, a howl of indignation will be raised from all sides when I have the temerity to assert that Germany is the allies' best friend. But this is true, because Germany has supplied the tonic which England, France and Russia urgently needed. By making war, Germany has forced these countries out of degeneracy and has obliged them to set their houses in order.

"Germany has awakened the national spirit and the sense of patriotism which politicians had almost killed and which over-civilization had covered with a thick veneer of laissez faire. Germany has almost put some semblance of sense and strength into the governments of the allies. And if she has not made every politician honest, at any rate she has forced them to withdraw their heads from the sand.

"It is the insenate Germany, with her lust for power, with her carefully constructed death machines, her fundamental incapability of fighting fair, which has brought back health to the nations arrayed against her with amazing unconsciousness. Germany is at this moment performing a deed which will have its effect upon the future of the world, and paradoxical as it may seem, is rescuing her opponents from suicide.

"Therefore I assert that this war was necessary, that it came at the right psychological moment, that it found the allies unready and demanding of them the most tremendous effort, rescued them from the dire effects of the self-indulgence and has brought out again every good instinct, every fine and simple element, which first of all made these nations great.

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

"History repeats itself with the most monotonous reiteration. The present is the past entered through another gate and war is as inevitable as death. It is not and never was an accident. In every instance from the beginning of time it is a well deserved punishment worked up to and earned. It will come again with the swing of the pendulum. It is salutary, necessary, and is the only national tonic that can be prescribed."

ITALY PLAYING LOYAL WITH ENTENTE ALLIES.

Cadorna's Army in Sight of Trieste, but not Going to Enter at Once.

BY H. G. WELLS.

[SPECIAL FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, Oct. 3.—My first impressions of the Italian war center upon Udine. So far I had had only a visit to Soissons on an exceptionally quiet day and the sound of a Zeppelin one night in Essex for all my experience of actual warfare. But my bedroom at the British mission in Udine roused perhaps extravagant expectations. There were holes in the plaster ceiling and wall, betraying splintered laths—holes that had been caused by a bomb that had burst and killed several people in the little square outside. Such excitements seem to be things of the past now in Udine. Udine keeps itself dark nowadays, and the Austrian seaplanes, which come raiding the Italian coast country at night very much in the same aimless, casually malignant way in which the Zeppelins raid England, apparently because there is nothing else for them to do, find it easier to locate Venice.

My earlier rides in Venetia began always with the level roads of the plain, roads frequently edged by water courses, with plentiful willows beside the road, vines and fields of Indian corn and such like lush crops. Always quite soon one came to some old Austrian boundary posts; almost everywhere the Italians are fighting upon what is technically enemy territory, but nowhere does it seem a whit less Italian than the plain of Lombardy. When at last I motored away from Udine to the northern mountain front I passed through Campo-Formio and saw the white-faced inn at which Napoleon dismembered the ancient republic of Venice and bartered away this essential part of Italy into foreign control. It just gravitates back now—as though there had been no Napoleon.

ENORMOUS EQUIPMENT.

And upon the roads and beside them was the enormous equipment of a modern army advancing. Everywhere I saw new roads being made, railways pushed up, vast store dumps, hospitals; everywhere the villages swarmed with gray soldiers; everywhere our automobile was threading its way and taking astonishing risks among interminable processions of motor lorries, strings of ambulances or of mule carts, wagons and men's gear, wagons with casks, wagons discreetly veiled, columns of infantry, cavalry, batteries en route.

Every wagon that goes up full comes back empty, and many wounded were coming down and prisoners and troops returning to rest. Gorizia had been taken a week or so before my arrival; the Isonzo had been crossed and the Austrians driven back across the Carso for several miles; all the resources of Italy seemed to be crowding up to make good these gains and gather strength for the next thrust. The roads under all this traffic remained wonderful; gangs of men were everywhere repairing the first onset of wear, and Italy is the most fortunate land in the world for road metal; her mountains are solid road metal and in this Venetian plain you need but to scrape through a yard of soil to find gravel.

One traveled through a choking dust under the blue sky, and above the steady incessant dusty succession of lorry, lorry, lorry, lorry that passed one by, one saw, looking up, the tree tops, house roofs, or the solid Venetian campanile of this or that wayside village. Once as we were coming out of the great gray portals of that beautiful old relic of a former school of fortification, Palmanova, the traffic became suddenly bright yellow, and for a kilometer or so we we were passing nothing but Sicilian mule carts loaded with hay.

STRANGE CARTS.

These carts seem as strange among the gray shapes of modern war transport as a Chinese mandarin in painted silk would be. They are the most individual of things, all two-wheeled, all bright yellow, and the same size, it is true, but upon each there are the gayest and little paintings, such paintings as one sees in England at times upon an ice cream barrow. Sometimes the picture will present a scriptural subject, sometimes a scene of opera, sometimes a dream landscape or a trophy of fruits or flowers, and the harness—now much out of repair—is studded with brass. Again and again I have passed strings of these gay carts; all Sicily must be swept of them.

Through the dust I came to Aquileia, which is now but an old cathedral, built upon the remains of a very early basilica, standing in a space in a scattered village. But across this dusty space there was carried the head of the upstart Maximin who murdered Alexander Severus, and later Aquileia brought Attila near to despair. Our party alighted; we inspected a very old mosaic floor which has been uncovered since the Austrian retreat. The Austrian priests have gone, too, and their Italian successors are already tracing out a score of Roman traces that it was the Austrian custom to minimize. Capt. Pirelli refreshed my historical memories; it was rather like leaving a card on Gibbon en route for contemporary history.

By devious routes I went on to certain batteries of big guns which had played their parts in hammering the Austrian left above Monfalcone, across an arm of the Adriatic, and which were now under orders to shift and move up closer. The battery was the most unobstrusive of batteries; its one desire seemed to be to appear a simple piece of woodland in the eye of God and the aeroplane.

NETWORK OF RAILWAYS.

I went about the network of railways and paths under the trees that a modern battery requires. I went on through the wood to a shady observation post high in a tree, into which I clambered with my guide. I was able from this position to get a very good idea of the general lie of the Italian eastern front. I was in the delta of the Isonzo. Directly in front of me were some marshes and the extreme tip of the Adriatic Sea, at the head of which was Monfalcone, now in Italian hands. Behind Monfalcone ran the red ridge of the Carso, of which the Italians had just captured the eastern half. Behind this again rose the mountains to the east of the Isonzo which the Austrians still held.

The Isonzo came toward me from out of the mountains, in a great westward curve. Fifteen or sixteen miles away where it emerged from the mountains lay the pleasant and prosperous town of Gorizia, and at the westward point of the great curve was Sagrado with its broken bridge. The battle of Gorizia was really not fought at Gorizia at all. What happened was the brilliant and bloody storming of Mounts Podgora and Sabotino on the western side of the river above Gorizia, and simultaneously a crossing at Sagrado behind Gorizia and a magnificent rush up to the plateau and across the plateau of the Carso. Gorizia itself was not organized for defense, and the Austrians were so surprised by the rapid storming of the mountains to the northwest of it, and of the Carso to the southeast, that they made no fight in the town itself.

NOT MUCH HURT.

As a consequence, when I visited it I found it very little injured—compared, that is, with such other towns as have been fought through. Here and there the front of a house has been knocked in by an Austrian shell, or a lamp post prostrated. But the road bridge had suffered a good deal; its iron parapet was twisted about by shell bursts and interwoven with young trees and big boughs designed to screen the passer-by from the observation of the Austrian gunners upon Monte Santo. Here and there were huge holes through which one could look down upon the blue trickles of water in the stony river bed below. The driver of our automobile displayed what seemed to me an extreme confidence in the margins of these gaps, but his confidence was justified. At Sagrado the bridge had been much more completely demolished; no effort had been made to restore the horizontal roadway, but one crossed by a sort of timber switchback that followed the ups and downs of the ruins.

It is not in these places that one must look for the real destruction of modern war. The real fight on the left of Gorizia went through the village of Lucinico up the hill of Podgora. Lucinico is nothing more than a heap of gray stones; except for a bit of the church wall and the gable end of a house one cannot even speak of it as ruins. But in one place among the rubble I saw the splintered top and a leg of a grand piano. Podgora Hill, which was no doubt once neatly terraced and cultivated, is like a scrap of landscape from some airless, treeless planet. Still more desolate was the scene upon the Carso to the right (south) of Gorizia. Both San Martino and Doberdo are destroyed beyond the limits of runiation. The Carso itself is a waterless upland with but a few bushy trees; it must always have been a desolate region, but now it is an indescribable wilderness of shell craters, smashed-up Austrian trenches, splintered timber, old iron, rags, and that rusty thorny vileness of man's invention, worse than all the thorns and thickets of nature—barbed wire. There are no dead visible; the wounded have been cleared away; but about the trenches and particularly near some of the dugouts there was a faint, repulsive smell.

IN A WILDERNESS.

Yet into this wilderness the Italians are now thrusting a sort of order. The German is a wonderful worker; they say on the Anglo-French front that he makes trenches by way of resting, but I doubt if he can touch the Italian at certain forms of toil. All the way up to San Martino and beyond swarms of workmen were making one of those carefully graded roads that the Italians make better than any other people. Other swarms were laying water pipes. For upon the Carso there are neither roads nor water, and before the Italians can thrust further both must be brought up to the front.

As we approached San Martino an Austrian aeroplane made its presence felt by dropping a bomb among the little tents of some workmen, in a little scrubby wood on the hillside near at hand. One heard the report and turned to see the fragments flying and the dust. Probably they got some one. And then, after a little pause, the encampment began to spew out men; here, there and everywhere they appeared among the tents, running like rabbits at evening-time, down the hill. Very soon after and probably in connection with this signal Austrian shells began to come over. They do not use shrapnel because the rocky soil of Italy makes that unnecessary. They fire a sort of shell that goes bang and releases a cloud of smoke overhead, and then drops a parcel of high explosive that bursts on the ground. The ground leaps into red dust and smoke. But these things are now to be seen on the cinema. Forthwith the men working on the road about us began to drop their tools and make for the shelter trenches, a long procession down the length of the road going at a steady walk. Then like a blow in the chest came the bang of a big Italian gun somewhere close at hand.

Along about 4000 miles of the various fronts this sort of thing was going on that morning.

ITALIAN OFFENSIVE.

This Carso front is the practicable offensive front of Italy. From the left wing on the Isonzo along the Alpine boundary around to the Swiss boundary there is mountain warfare like nothing else in the world; it is warfare that pushes the boundary backward, but it is mountain warfare that will not, for so long a period that the war will be over first, hold out any hopeful prospects of offensive movements on a large scale against Austria or Germany. It is a short distance as the crow flies from Rovereto to Munich, but not as the big gun travels. The Italians therefore, as their contribution to the

CHECKERBOARD OF WAR ON THE FOOD SHORTAGE

Kaiser Hopes to Make Hunger His Ally to Force Britain to Terms.

BY HARRY CARR.

THE two striking events of the war this week are:

The resumption of submarine activity by the German navy.

The defeat of Rumania and King Ferdinand's yelp for help.

By the use of a great fleet of submarines, the Kaiser hopes to create such a serious shortage of food in England that the British people will insist upon making peace. Or at least will not permit the British government to hold out against reasonable proposals of peace.

It is a mistake to assert that the Germans brought their new type submarines across the ocean as an act of desperation on account of the British victories on the Somme.

This submarine offensive has been in the planning for a long time. It had nothing to do with the land battles anywhere. This particular time was selected by the German War Office for reasons that apply exclusively to wheat.

To the newspaper readers, the submarines off Nantucket have come as a staggering surprise. Navy officers on this side have long expected some such event.

As long ago as last March, some of our navy officers testified before a committee of the House of Representatives that the German navy was known to be building a fleet of huge submarines of a new type that were presumably for transoceanic service.

Longer ago than that—in fact, last November and December—the German War Office was observing with much satisfaction that the world's wheat crop was failing. It was then that this sensational blockade of the allies was planned.

The principal foodstuff in England is wheat; the generally accepted estimate of consumption of it is seven bushels per head a year in normal times as against four and three-quarters bushels per head in the United States. During the war, the consumption of wheat has been larger in England than during normal times, owing to the waste on one hand, and the extra high price of other articles of food.

England produces only a small part of the wheat she consumes. Fifty million bushels is a liberal estimate. Her importations, therefore, equal about 250,000,000 bushels a year, or close to 5,000,000 bushels a week.

France, Italy, England, together with the neutral countries of Europe, call for a wheat importation of about 13,000,000 bushels a week.

This wheat comes from North America, as the leading exporter, with Russia and the other Black Sea countries close seconds; then Argentine, India, Australia, and smaller countries.

Although North America had enormous wheat crops during 1914 and 1915, the outlook this year for wheat is very bad both in the United States and Canada. Women's clubs in various parts of the United States are demanding that an embargo be placed upon the further exportation of wheat to the allies on account

VILLA BANDITS BADLY BEATEN

Carranza Forces Defeat Outlaws at El Carmen.

Threats Against Families Make Men Join Army.

Gen. Trevino is Prepared for Another Attack.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHIHUAHUA CITY (Mex.) Oct. 14.—A report received here today from the Laguna district of Coahuila, near Torreon, states that Gen. Lorenzo Avalos, a former Villa commander, has met and defeated a command of Villa bandits at Tablas and Las Techas, in the Laguna district, killing Florencio Carranza and wounding his brother, Pedro Carranza, both bandit chiefs.

A report received from Western Chihuahua says Villa has divided his force, one command moving toward Madera and the other toward Namiquipa, which is thirty-one miles south of El Valle, the American outpost.

Carranza forces in command of Gen. Arrieta of the Jimenez-Chihuahua garrison, engaged a bandit force at El Carmen, Los [illegible] and San Andres ranches, southeast of Jimenez, killing a number of the bandits, taking several prisoners and capturing saddle horses and ammunition, a report made by Gen. Arrieta to Gen. Jacinto B. Trevino today stated. The command of Gen. Arrieta also has cleared the Florido district, southwest of Jimenez, of bandits.

THREATS BY VILLA.

Villa is forcing men to join his command under threat of burning their families unless they comply with his demand, which a document received at Gen. Trevino's headquarters and signed by Villa shows. The document refers to Reyes Estrada and reads:

"I concede a traveling pass to Reyes Estrada with the object of his joining our forces and with the understanding that if he does not fulfill his promise within ten days he will be considered as an enemy and will expose his family to be burned."

Gen. Trevino is making every preparation for another attack by the Villa soldiers. The hills near the city are being entrenched and cannon placed on the higher points. Outposts are sent out each night to prevent a surprise attack. An infantry division is now en route from Parras, Coahuila, under command of Gen. Jose Santos.

MEXICAN BAND ARRIVES.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

EL PASO (Tex.) Oct. 14.—A Mexican band of eight-two pieces arrived here today from Mexico City to play for the International Products Exposition, which opens here today. The band was sent by order of Gen. Alvaro Obregon, Minister of War, as a compliment to the American people.

Gen. Francisco Gonzales, commander of the Carranza forces in the north, has returned from Casas Grandes, where he made an investigation of the reports of Villa's presence near there. He said he had ordered a column of cavalry sent from Casas Grandes to El Valle, the American outpost.

Col. F. A. Graves of the [illegible] Massachusetts Infantry will tender his resignation at once, it was announced today, and Lieut.-Col. [illegible] Perry is now in command of the regiment. Col. Graves stated this afternoon that he intended to resign at once and go to the Pacific Coast because of an ulcer that had developed upon his eye.

MYSTERY IS SOLVED.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

DOUGLAS (Ariz.) Oct. 14.—Miguel Fontes, the Carranza customs guard, who was shot Thursday at Naco, Sonora, was not shot by an American mule driver, but by one of the other Carranza customs guards, according to evidence reported here to have been obtained by the board of American army officers, which is now investigating the shooting at Naco, Ariz.

Fontes, according to the report, told his relatives that he had been shot by a custom guard with whom he had quarreled. When questioned after being brought here for treatment, Fontes stated that an American mule driver had fired at him. His wound is considered serious.

Indications.

SLENDER HUGHES LEAD IN THE STRAW BALLOT.

President Wilson Makes a Slight Gain in the Voting During the Week.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK BUREAU OF THE TIMES, Oct. 14.—Charles E. Hughes maintains a slender lead in the race for the Presidency. President Wilson has made slight gains. The margin of safety for the Republican ticket has narrowed considerably since the canvass made by the New York Herald, the Los Angeles Times and other leading newspapers of the nation started. The indications as shown by the [illegible] straw votes are, that if an election were held today, the normal Republican strongholds would roll up pluralities just large enough to give Mr. Hughes a majority in the Electoral College.

The changes during the last week were less marked than during the previous week. From all that can be gleaned at this time the Republicans are at a standstill and President Wilson is going ahead slowly. The race is a close one. Nowhere is there a sign of a landslide or anything approaching it. Conditions are such that it would be hazardous, even with the straw vote campaign completed, to make a definite prediction. There are many indications that the mountainous Republican pluralities of McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft years are seriously threatened. On the other hand the President is holding his own with ease in the strictly Democratic territory and is practically certain to carry such States as Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri and Oklahoma, in each of which the Republicans believed a short time ago they had a fighting chance or considerably better.

THE DECIDING VOTE.

The States of New York, Illinois, Ohio and Indiana, will, beyond all question, decide the election. Any one of them may. Straw votes and the inquiries made by correspondents for the Herald indicate at this writing that Mr. Hughes has the better of the situation in New York, Illinois and Indiana and it is a "toss up" in Ohio.

The States mentioned are in doubt. Illinois, which was presumed by the Republicans to be overwhelmingly Republican and considered by the Democrats to be very likely to go strongly for Hughes and Fairbanks, has begun to waver. The women, so far as the straw vote indicates, favor the President because of his peace programme, the male element of the electorate is in large majority for the Republican ticket, but the attitude of the women voters, of whom there are a half-million, injects a distinct note of uncertainty in the situation there.

New York, perhaps, enjoys the limelight more than any other State. Conditions there seem about the same this last week. The President, on present straw vote indications, will have a small plurality—small by comparison—in New York City and Mr. Hughes will have a small—by comparison—plurality up-State. Calculations made from the 18,[illegible] straw votes taken throughout the State, indicate that Mr. Hughes will have the forty-five electoral votes of this, perhaps, vital commonwealth.

In the total of 107,403 votes taken to date Mr. Hughes has a plurality over the President of 4926.

THE STATES.

The Hughes "straw vote" States are California, New Jersey, Delaware, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, North Dakota, [illegible], Oregon, Wyoming, Colorado, [illegible] and New Mexico.

The Wilson States are New York, Connecticut, Maryland, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, West Virginia, Kentucky, Wisconsin, Missouri, Oklahoma, Minnesota, South Dakota, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado and Arizona.

In none of the States, with the exception of California, is there anything like a large margin between the votes for the two nominees. California, out of a total of 11,199 votes, gives Mr. Hughes a plurality of [illegible]. The northern part of the State leans heavily toward the Democracy, while the southern and central parts of the State are overwhelmingly for Hughes and Fairbanks. There seems to be not the slightest doubt that California will roll up a very large plurality for the Republicans, thus assuring the electoral votes of that State to the ticket. In Ohio, out of a total of [illegible] votes, Mr. Hughes leads by the delicate margin of 113. A great part of the Ohio votes have been taken in Cincinnati, which is presumed to lean strongly toward the Republicans, and no votes in Ohio have yet been obtained in Cleveland, which has a distinct leaning toward the President. In whatever way one surveys the situation Ohio is a close State, far too close to warrant a prediction at this time. The President in the straw votes taken since the last publication, has more than held his own and is very evidently stronger there, as he is in a great many other sections of the country, than his party. On the other hand, Mr. Hughes is not proving to be the magnet among the farmers he was expected to be. He was weaker than his party in the State and that, contrasted with the exceptional strength of the President among the workers in the great industrial centers of Cincinnati, Toledo, Cleveland, Dayton, Akron and Youngstown, brings the two nominees very close together.

INDIANA.

In Indiana the surface indications are that Mr. Hughes has considerably the better chance to carry the State. He has a good lead there in the straw vote and the almost complete union of the Republican and the Progressive forces, coupled with the popularity of Mr. Fairbanks, would seem to insure him the fifteen electoral votes of that State. But here, as elsewhere, it is the observation of those who have studied the nation-wide situation, the Hughes strength has touched its high mark and it cannot withstand a very marked slump.

Figuring on the straw votes in their aggregate the President during the last week just maintained his position, and Mr. Hughes lost slightly. The tender margin of gain was made by the Socialistic nominee, Mr. Benson, who is polling many votes in the Far West and making steady but unimportant gains in some Eastern States.

Since the beginning of the taking of the straw vote the President has gained approximately 1 per cent. and Mr. Hughes has lost roughly 1½ per cent.

In the total drift of Progressives to the two nominees, the President gained approximately 1 per cent. and Mr. Hughes suffered a loss of about 1 per cent. Likewise the President made a slight gain in the number of Taft (1912) voters who are shifting to him, while Mr. Hughes suffered a slight loss in the number of Wilson (1912) voters, who are switching to him.

THE SHIFTS.

In the net shifts or gains from all sources Mr. Hughes leads by about three to one. In the shifts from Roosevelt he leads by not a little more than three to one. Should this percentage of shifts be carried out in the voting on November 7 it would mean that the total popular vote of the two nominees would be very close together. The manner in which this changed vote is distributed would decide the contest.

The straw vote cannot yet be used as a basis for final calculation for the reason that it has not been equally distributed over the different sections of the important States, as it will be in the next two weeks. All the information which reached the Herald, and in fact which reaches the managers of both campaigns, shows that Massachusetts will be Republican, although the very meager straw vote taken in the Bay State up to date shows a majority for the President. In South Dakota, also where only sixty-eight votes have been gathered, the swing is to the Republican, but in no measure so strong as might be expected by the Republicans in an ironclad Republican State.

Minnesota likewise has not yet been properly canvassed, but will be. The votes taken in Minneapolis show a decided drift toward the President, while the country districts, which as yet have been practically untouched, show a swing toward the Republican ticket.

In Wyoming, which shows a Republican current, and in Colorado, which swings toward the President, the vote is not yet sufficiently representative to justify a calculation. The reports from these States are that both are in doubt, with the women inclined to be with the President and the Republicans much concerned.

NEW ENGLAND.

All of New England will, from all that can be learned, swing into line as of old for the Republican ticket, but there seems to be a certainty that the Republican pluralities will be very materially cut down.

From the ordinarily-immovable Republican bulwarks such as Washington and Oregon come indications that the States are in doubt. In Seattle, in the straw votes, the President leads, while Mr. Hughes has the lead in other parts of the State. In the entire straw vote of the State, which numbers 2590, the President leads by sixty-two.

In Oregon out of a total of 313 votes Mr. Hughes leads by seventeen votes. In Idaho and Montana, out of very small votes, the Republican ticket is slightly in the lead.

From the fact that in the straw vote President Wilson gains one 1912 Progressive where Mr. Hughes gains two, and that there is a larger swing from Taft to Wilson than from Wilson (1912) to Hughes, it would appear to be a safe statement that all these States, normally Republican, are in the balance, with the indications favoring the Republicans, but with the Democracy making dangerous inroads upon the Hughes strength.

Wisconsin continues to be one of the puzzle grounds of the campaign. There 3778 test votes have been taken and the President leads by 318. His lead grew during the week. Milwaukee has a strong leaning toward the Democracy. The rural sections have not yet been thoroughly gone into. The La Follette influence in this State is said to be working great injury to the Republican ticket.

The best information to be had concerning the situation in Illinois comes from the Herald's correspondent in charge of the straw vote campaign there. He says the President is making very marked gains, chiefly among the women voters, but is hardly likely to overcome the big handicap with which he started.

ILLINOIS.

Illinois is ordinarily Republican by an overwhelming plurality, and from all that can be learned it would this year be safe for the ticket were it not for the uncertainty concerning the women, who for the first time cast ballots for President.

Chicago will apparently roll up a good-sized plurality for the President. The down-State section will muster a substantial plurality for the Republicans. Of 1000 women polled in several cities, the President has a majority of 245. It has been believed by the campaign leaders that the women of Illinois would follow the lead of their husbands, but the straw votes thus far taken indicate that they will do no such thing. In so far as they have been canvassed to date they express great admiration for the President for keeping the country out of war and indicate an intention of supporting him in large numbers at the polls next month.

Because of the attitude of the women, Illinois must for the present be placed in the doubtful column. With its twenty-nine electoral votes it is enough in itself to decide an election as close as that soon to take place now promises to be.

Connecticut and New Jersey must be placed in the doubtful columns despite the roseate predictions of the Republicans. Connecticut has an unmistakable swing toward the President in all the populous centers and the country districts, where the Republican strength is always recruited, are apathetic. The Herald's straw vote from that State now gives the President a plurality of 779 out of a total vote of 3361. The latest returns from the Nutmeg State show the Hughes strength growing, but it would seem that the result there will be close and that it would be idle to make a prediction at this time.

NEW JERSEY.

New Jersey is likewise a State filled with doubt. Upwards of 3500 tests votes have been taken there. The Republicans lead by the slender margin of 132. The factory centers in New Jersey have a very marked drift toward Wilson and Marshall. The Republicans appear to have lost many of their followers to the President on the peace issue, while as again on this, a very large number of business men, who were formerly Democrats, have switched over to the Republican side of the fence. From all that can be ascertained at this time, New Jersey is more likely to be Republican, and Connecticut is just as liable to go one way as the other.

Missouri has not yet "found herself," but the drift is toward the President in the straw vote. Out of 4309 straw votes cast, the President leads by twenty-eight. There is a very strong swing toward the Republicans in parts of St. Louis, but in the part of Missouri that has always been Democratic—and that includes the largest part territorially—the tendency is to support the President. The odds in Missouri now appear to be in the President's favor.

In Maryland out of 1962 votes taken the President leads by the narrow margin of ninety-eight. Reports from Maryland say that the conservative element of both parties will support the Republican ticket, thereby assuring the State to Mr. Hughes, but all the indications in the straw vote are the other way. Maryland should be set down as doubtful.

West Virginia has a decided Wilson swing. The Republican expectation of capturing the eight electoral votes of that State would hardly seem justified from the straw vote taken up to this time.

The campaign has entered upon its most important stage. In a contest so desperately waged and so patently close, it is conceded by both sides that the whole tide might be changed in the last week or ten days. Up to the present time the gain has been on the side of the Democrats. The Republicans made a short spurt, as indicated by the straw vote campaign of the Herald, and then stopped. The Democrats have hung almost on a dead center for the last week. The Republicans, it would appear from the votes taken in the straw vote campaign, must hold their own to be assured of victory, while the Democrats must make continued gains to achieve victory for themselves.

It is conceded by the Republicans that a great majority of the union labor vote of the country is going for the President unless there is a change between now and election. The Democrats estimate they will receive 85 per cent. of the total labor vote of the country. The Republicans figure that, as things now, the Democrats are in a position to get upward of 65 per cent. of this vote. The Herald's straw vote campaign shows that wherever there is a large factory population the sentiment is very strongly for the President. This, added to the following he is accumulating from the advocates of peace and the women supporters, make him a vastly more formidable nominee than the Republicans believed him to be at the outset of the campaign.

On the other hand the business element of the country is for Mr. Hughes. This apparently applies to the small as well as the big business man. There is an indication that the big manufacturing interests of the country are swinging to the Republican ticket also on the tariff issue. The voters of German extraction are generally for the Republican ticket, though in Milwaukee, where the population is mostly of German extraction the swing is just in the opposite direction.

The attitude of the farmer has not been established either by the straw vote or inquiry made by correspondents. They are usually Republican. There are indications in some sections that they are inclined to swing to the President because they like peace and because they are getting larger prices than ever before for the crops, but in other sections there are indications that they are pretty well set for the Republican ticket.

Baldness

—Is rapidly increasing — says Prof. John H. Austin, Chicago's bacteriologist, hair and scalp specialist of 37 years' practice—and is in many, many cases directly or indirectly caused by——A very common scalp trouble.

Alopecia Pityrodes—

—It starts with a scaling of the scalp, sometimes slight, called "dandruff," sometimes abundant — producing thick, grayish-white, dry or greasy scales—which leads to falling of the hair.

—At first, when the hair starts to fall, it is hardly noticeable, but as this ailment, "Alopecia Pityrodes," becomes more deeply seated, and the germs multiply, as they always do, the falling of the hair increases rapidly, and in time the top of head becomes entirely bald. Both men and women of all ages of life are subject to Alopecia Pityrodes, but particularly those between the ages of 20 and 35 years.

—Prof. Austin, who is now at Hamburger's, says that people who are at all troubled with any kind of hair and scalp trouble, such as

—Itching Scalp —Falling Hair
—Excessively Oily Hair
—Dry and Brittle Hair
—Dandruff
—Split Hair
—Gray or Faded Hair

—Should have their hair examined at once under his powerful microscope.

—Professor Austin says that the use of mange cures, dandruff cures, hair tonics, vaseline and elixirs is like taking medicine without knowing what you are trying to cure.

—During the past twenty-two months Prof. Austin has made thousands of free microscopic examinations of the hair and scalp of Hamburger's patrons—and they enthusiastically appreciate this service.

—Prof. Austin invites both men and women to take advantage of the FREE MICROSCOPIC EXAMINATIONS of the hair and scalp this week in his private office on the Second Floor of Hamburger's. Hours: 10 to 12 and 2 to 4 daily.

Millions of men and women today know that it is needless to have a bad stomach. A little Diapepsin occasionally keeps this delicate organ regulated and they eat their favorite foods without fear.

common effort, are thrusting rather eastwardly toward the line of the Julian Alps through Carinthia and Carniola.

From my observation post in the tree near Monfalcone I saw Trieste away along the coast to my right. It looked scarcely as distant as Folkestone from Dungeness. The Italian advanced line is indeed scarcely ten miles from Trieste. But the Italians are not, I think, going to Trieste just yet. That is not the real game now. They are playing loyally with the allies for the complete defeat of the central powers, and that is to be achieved by striking home into Austria. Meanwhile there is no sense in knocking Trieste to pieces, or using Italians instead of Austrian soldiers to garrison it.

TEUTON ARMY CONTINUES DASH IN TRANSYLVANIA.

Rumanians Have been Driven from the Upper Alt and Maros Valleys into Frontier Mountains — Germans Deny British Charge that Aeroplanes Have Dropped Poisoned Sweets and Cholera Bacilli.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

VIENNA, Friday, Oct. 13 (via London, Oct. 14.)—The Teutonic advance in Transylvania is continuing and the Rumanians have been driven from the upper Alt and Maros valleys into the frontier mountains, says today's War Office statement. Progress is also being made against the Rumanian forces in the Kronstadt region. The statement follows:

"Fighting in the region of Kronstadt is taking a course favorable to us. Yesterday one Rumanian officer, 170 men and two guns were captured.

"On the eastern Transylvania frontier we drove the enemy from the valleys of the upper Alt and the upper Maros to the frontier mountains.

"North of Kirilibaba (Carpathians) a Russian advance was repulsed after hand grenade fighting."

GERMANS DENY CHARGE.

[BY WIRELESS AND A. P.]

BERLIN (via Sayville) Oct. 14.—"The British wireless service states that German seaplanes which attacked Constanza, Rumania, recently dropped poisoned sweets and bombs infected with cholera bacilli," says the Overseas News Agency. "The shamelessness and meanness of such statements can be surpassed only by the credulity and stupidity which the British attribute to their allies."

The statement referred to evidently is an official Russian announcement of October 12, which said that aeroplanes which attacked Constanza dropped poisoned sweets and garlic infected with cholera bacilli.

FERDINAND IN COMMAND.

[BY WIRELESS AND A. P.]

BUCHAREST (via London) Oct. 14.—King Ferdinand of Rumania, it was announced today, will personally take supreme command of the Russian and Rumanian armies.

Considerable Russian reinforcements are expected to arrive in Rumania. A mission of French officers which will include Gen. Berthelot, a well-known military strategist, also is coming to Bucharest.

Rumanian troops in Transylvania have not only made successful stands against the Teutonic armies, but have recaptured previously lost ground in some sectors, the War Office announces.

A total of more than 15,000 prisoners has been taken by the Rumanians on the various fronts in their war operations to date, the statement adds.

On the eastern Transylvania frontier the Rumanians recaptured the village of Dolijan-Sarata (Scosmezo) in the Cites Valley, twelve miles southeast of Orna.

"In the Jiul region Mt. Siguiello, six miles northwest of Petroseny, and the frontier town of Muncelumare have been taken by assault. The Teutonic forces are declared to have suffered great losses and to have withdrawn in disorder.

WILSON AND ADAMSON LAW SCORED BY ROOSEVELT

Declares President Yielded Ignominiously to Demands of Union Labor Leaders and the Public Must Now Pay the Bill—Insists Great Mistake was Made in Taking Snap Judgment.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WILKESBARRE (Pa.) Oct. 14.—Discussing the Adamson law in an address here tonight Theodore Roosevelt upheld the principle of arbitration in the settlement of all labor controversies, criticised President Wilson for what was termed the sacrifice of that principle and declared in favor of the eight-hour day law in principle. Col. Roosevelt also discussed the Mexican policy of the administration and condemned what he termed an "international alliance" between Messrs. Wilson, Gompers and Carranza.

The present condition of national prosperity was described as the artificial result of the European war which would end with that conflict.

"If a public servant will do wrong to please any particular class," said Mr. Roosevelt in conclusion, "it may be taken as absolutely certain that he will do wrong against the interest of that particular class whenever it becomes to his own profit to do so."

In opening his address, Col. Roosevelt reviewed the anthracite coal strike in Pennsylvania fourteen years ago, explaining how he had settled the controversy by arbitration. President Wilson, in his action on the Adamson law, Col. Roosevelt said, "had destroyed the principle of arbitration in the settlement of industrial disputes and put a premium on securing this settlement by threat and duress."

FROM THE SPEECH.

Continuing, Col. Roosevelt said: "President Wilson in his speeches of August 29 and September 23 has furnished his own condemnation out of his own mouth. In them he explicitly condemns exactly what he has done and actually demands legislation which will make impossible the repetition of such a proceeding. This is so extraordinary an attitude that I quote his own words. He said he wished 'to provide' against 'the recurrence of such unhappy situations in the future' by securing 'the calm and fair arbitration of all industrial disputes in the days to come.' This is an explicit assertion that arbitration of all industrial disputes is the right method of action; and therefore that he had adopted the wrong method of action—although in the case of the anthracite coal strike he had an exact precedent in point, by following which he would have enforced the right method.

"Mr. Wilson has adroitly maintained that the question at issue was the eight-hour day. This is not all fact. The question at issue was the question of wages. The law does not say there shall be an eight-hour day. It says that eights hours shall 'be made the measure of a day's work for the purpose of receiving compensation.' In other words, it was primarily an increase of wages and not a diminution of hours that was aimed at.

"I heartily believe in a proper limitation by law of hours of work in the railroad service and I recommended legislation to that effect when I was President. I believes in the wages in any industry being just as high as it is possible to make them without injustice to the capital invested and to the public which is served. But it is a mere truism to say that it is impossible to get this ideal achieved unless an honest and dispassionated effort is first made by the proper commission to ascertain the full facts in the particular case. As regards the railroads, we have to consider the wages paid to the different classes of employees, the interest on the investment, the earning power of the road, and the kind of service that must be rendered to the public. It is impossible to secure a proper solution of the problem unless all these factors are considered. Mr. Wilson absolutely declined to consider any of them.

LACK OF INFORMATION.

"We have not at this moment one particular of trustworthy information which will enable us to decide whether the demands of the men were just or not. I wish it distinctly understood that I am not trying to pass judgment upon the justice of the case. I regard the engineers, firemen and enginemen and trainmen generally as doing peculiarly responsible and arduous work, and entitled to particular consideration as regards both hours of labor and pay. I hope they are fully entitled as a matter of justice to what they will receive under the Adamson bill and if it so appears I shall heartily support it. But I protest against the far-reaching evil of the precedent set in the method which has been followed. We are denied knowledge. We see Congress forced to act under threats. I protest against any law passed under such duress.

"Remember, it is the public that in the end will pay. You do not have to take my assertion for this. Take the assertion of Mr. Wilson's master in this matter. The union leaders, through their chairman, Mr. Garretson, announced that 'they would steadily refuse to arbitrate and that in their action they were supported by the President of the United States.' They stated their case in a nutshell as follows: 'In times like this, men go back to primal instinct—to the day of the caveman with his half-gnawed bone, snarling at the other caveman who wanted to take his bone away. We leaders are fighting for our men. The railroads are fighting for their stockholders, and the shippers for themselves. And the public will pay.' Mr. Garretson is right—the public will pay. And it will pay without having had the chance know whether it ought or ought not to pay. Mr. Wilson betrayed the public when he refused to insist that the contest should be decided on principles of justice and when he permitted it to be decided in deference to greed and fear. If President Wilson had stood by the honor and the interests of the United States in this matter, if he had insisted upon a full investigation before action, if he had insisted upon arbitration and had announced that if there was any attempt to tie up the traffic of the United States he would use the entire power of the United States to keep the arteries of traffic open, I would have applauded him and supported him. What President Wilson did was to permit the overriding of justice by appeals to brute force.

"I champion Mr. Hughes as against Mr. Wilson because in every such crisis Mr. Wilson, by his public acts, has shown that he will yield to fear, that he will not yield to justice, whereas the public acts of Mr. Hughes have proved him to be incapable of yielding in such a crisis to any threat, whether made by politicians, corporations or labor leaders."

Right to Search.

similated to visits on the high seas and the criticism put forward by the United States government does not, therefore, appear to them to be justified."

RIGHT OF SEARCH.

Defending the practice of exercising jurisdiction and the right of search over a merchant vessel calling of its own accord at an allied port, the note says:

"When a neutral merchant vessel enters an allied port it is legitimate for the authorities of the allied governments, before giving her clearance, to satisfy themselves that the vessel is carrying nothing hostile to the interests of their national defense.

"It must be added that the German custom of abusing neutral mails and of forwarding enemy correspondence, even official correspondence bearing upon hostilities, under apparently inoffensive covers, sent from one neutral to another, has rendered necessary the supervision of mails in transit to or from countries adjacent to Germany exactly as in the case of mails in transit to or from Germany itself. But it need hardly be said that in the case of correspondence between neutrals, which is not used as a cloak for such abuses, there are no grounds for apprehension."

Contending that the practice followed by the powers in former wars establishes the general rule of the right to examine mails outside of territorial waters, the note amplifies that argument in the following terms:

ON THE HIGH SEAS.

"On the high seas, according to international law, it is for the belligerents to search for and prevent operations of transport or other services by which neutral vessels can give co-operation and assistance to the hostile operations of the enemy. A few lines of a letter conveyed to the enemy may be as useful or more useful to his warlike operations than a cargo of arms and ammunitions. Experience in the course of the present war has, in fact, demonstrated the truth of this observation. Hostile acts have failed which had been planned through the mails. Dangerous plots, which the enemy does not even spare neutral countries, have been detected in the mails and foiled."

IN CONCLUSION.

The note concludes:

"The American memorandum lays great stress on the view that the rights of neutrals and of belligerents are equally sacred and must be strictly observed. The allied governments for their part entirely spare this view. They are sincerely endeavoring to avoid any encroachment on the legitimate exercise of the rights of inoffensive neutral commerce through the exercise of their own belligerent rights. But they consider that they are within their belligerent rights in exercising on the high seas the control recognized by international law as accorded to them, in order to prevent all transport destined to furnish assistance to their enemy in the conduct of the war and to maintain his resistance.

"The rights of the United States, as a neutrality power, cannot, in their opinion, include that of protection given by the Federal government in dispatches, parcels, correspondence, or communication of whatever nature they may be, which have a hostile character, manifest or disguised, and a hostile destination, direct or indirect. Such communication can only be carried on by private American citizens at their proper risk and peril. This is the very principle which has been expressly cited by the President of the United States in his proclamations of neutrality.

"Finally, if any faults, abuses or serious mistakes, alleged to have been committed by the allied authorities responsible for the examination of mails, are brought to the attention of the governments of France and Great Britain, the latter will be prepared, as they have always been, to determine the responsibility and take the requisite measures in conformity with the principles of law and justice from which it is not and never has been their intention to depart."

HELD FOR ROBBERY OF A MAIL CAR.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

ALBUQUERQUE (N. M.) Oct. 14.—Meredith Rowe, arrested here as a vagrant, was turned over to the Federal authorities today on a warrant charging robbery of the mails. The charge against Rowe is participation in the robbery several months ago of a mail car on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, when a large sum of money was stolen between Syracuse and Dodge City, Kan. A negro who gave the name of Savage is being held in Denver in connection with the same robbery.

SHIP JOINERS DEMAND MORE PAY.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

PORTLAND (Or.) Oct. 14.—Ship carpenters and joiners employed in yards where wooden ships are building here notified their employers today that after November 15 a wage scale of $5 for an eight-hour day must be granted. They are now receiving $4.50 for an eight-hour day. Employers are quoted as saying that to grant the increase would be to pay higher wages than any port on the Pacific Coast.

Metal workers in the steel shipbuilding plants and boiler shops have been summoned to a mass meeting here tonight. It was stated that they are to discuss the question of demanding increased pay.

LARK WRECKED; NINE INJURED.

Scores Thrown from Berths when Cars are Ditched.

Running Forty Miles an Hour to Make up its Time.

Engine Tender Jumps Track Near Watsonville.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN FRANCISCO BUREAU OF THE TIMES, Oct. 14.—Nine persons were injured, one of them seriously and scores of others were thrown from their berths or chairs when the Lark, the Southern Pacific's passenger train de luxe bound to this city from Los Angeles, was wrecked six miles north of Watsonville Junction at 7:30 o'clock this morning when a locomotive tender jumped the track on a curve.

The train, which was running at a speed of forty miles an hour when it struck the curve, was twenty minutes behind schedule, and the wreck is believed to have been due to the engineer's efforts to make up lost time.

The injured are:

Mrs. Alice Battalio, of No. [illegible] Lombard street, San Francisco, back sprained and two ribs broken.

Mrs. J. A. Hutchinson, No. [illegible] Kingsley avenue, Palo Alto, back sprained.

Peter Floss, aged 3, No. [illegible] Steiner street, San Francisco, chin bruised.

William F. Corder, railway mail clerk, San Jose, shoulder sprained.

Ralph Decker, railway mail clerk, No. 1184 Fifty-third street, Oakland, chest injured.

William Miller, dining car cook, No. 1430 West Thirty-fifth street, Los Angeles, scalded.

J. G. Hooper, express messenger, left leg bruised.

——— Pugh, baggageman, general bruises.

PLUNGES OVER TIES.

The heavy train, consisting of four Pullman sleeping cars, an observation car, diner, mail, express and dynamo-baggage car, plunged along the ties, tearing up rails and plowing into the earth for fully [illegible] yards before the breaks brought it to a stop. The tender and mail car turned over and the remaining cars were derailed excepting the observation car and one Pullman. The locomotive came to rest on an overturned rail which evidently sprang ahead of it.

Scenes of wild confusion reigned in the sleepers and dining car until it was seen that the passengers had not only miraculously escaped death but that a majority were uninjured. Men and women in all stages of dishabille were thrown into the aisles of the Pullmans. In the diner some fifteen passengers in the midst of breakfast were thrown about from their chairs, and many of them were deluged with mush, coffee, syrup, and eggs that had left the stove in various forms, but were up scrambled.

Mrs. Alice Battalio, whose injuries proved the most serious of any of the passengers was eating breakfast when the shock of the wreck threw her first against the table and then across a chair. She sustained a sprained back and two of her ribs are believed to have been broken. She was placed on a stretcher and brought to this city in the baggage car in the relief train and taken to the home of her mother, Mrs. [illegible] Mazella, by a Southern Pacific ambulance. She is under the care of a physician. The other injured were able to proceed here or to their homes without assistance.

According to the story of William A. Corder, a railway mail clerk on the wrecked train, the Lark was exceeding safe speed when the wreck occurred.

MAIL CLERK'S STORY.

"We were twenty minutes late and running forty miles an hour to make up time," he said. "I have noticed several times lately that the Lark, on which the Southern Pacific is using new and very powerful locomotives, has been running too fast, particularly on curves."

The road foreman of engines was on board the Lark, and had clocked it as forty miles an hour just before the wreck, according to J. [illegible] O'Donnell, of Los Angeles, whose watch registered 7:30 when the train left the rails.

"The wreck was caused by spreading rails, and not by the tender jumping the track," said O'Donnell. "I heard the engineer say his schedule allowed him to do [illegible] miles an hour along there and he was doing only forty. I noticed the ties seemed to be soft and soaked and there is no doubt that when the heavy engine struck the curve the rails gave enough to let the tender trucks onto the ties."

Southern Pacific officials took immediate relief measures when news of the wreck reach here. The [illegible] south bound which was [illegible] the scene, was ordered to pick up the passengers, mail and baggage and return here. It arrived at [illegible] p.m., and was met by Assistant [illegible] E. R. Anthony, who, after questioning Engineer Robert [illegible], Conductor George Utley, [illegible] Foster and Brakemen [illegible] Murray, announced that while he was unable to say positively what caused the wreck, he believed it was due to spreading rails.

"It was an inside wreck," said Anthony. "If the train had been going at greater speed, the cars would have been thrown to the outside of the curve."

Supt. Thomas Ahearn went to the scene and directed the work of the wrecking crew in constructing a "Shoo-fly" around the wreck, which was opened for traffic tonight.

VICTIMS TELL OF SWINDLES.

Federal Farm Loan Board Now Hearing Reports.

Organization of Land Banks Cause of Trouble.

Much Money is Paid Out to the Stock Promoters.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The Federal Farm Loan Board's warning to farmers against swindlers seeking to profit by organization of land banks has begun to bring in many reports of victims. The board recently announced that it would refuse charters to any banks in whose organization money had gone for promotion purposes.

Jacob J. Blumer of Benchland, Mont., wrote to the board that an agent of a promotion concern pretended to have been employed by the government and got from him a $250 check for ten shares of stock and that he later received notice to pay $750 more.

K. T. Peck of Fishtail, Mont., complained that agents of the same concern told him that to borrow he must become a shareholder of the concern. Peck paid $25 and obligated himself for several more payments.

S. A. Altman of Lincoln, Kan., wrote he had paid $300 on a similar proposition.

The board today issued this supplemental warning:

"Farmers who borrow through the national farm loan associations are not required to pay any advance commissions. So all of these enterprises requiring payments from farmers are declared by the board to be fraudulent and the attention of the Department of Justice has been called to the matter and an attempt will be made to bring the offenders to justice."

PORTLAND CHEERS WOMEN'S SPECIAL.

PARTISAN VERBAL CLASHES ORDER OF THE DAY.

Parades and Counter-parades and Speeches Set Downtown District in Whirl of Excitement. Police Reserves Called Out to Maintain Order.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PORTLAND (Or.) Oct. 14.—More political enthusiasm was crammed within a period of a few hours here today than had expressed itself since the Presidential campaign opened. The situation was precipitated by the arrival of the woman's campaign special for Hughes and the counter demonstrations set in motion by the women supporting President Wilson.

Parades and counter parades, street-corner speeches and counter speeches set the downtown district in a whirl of excitement, brought about verbal clashes between partisans, and resulted in the calling out of the police reserves to maintain order.

In the fashionable shopping district, where Mrs. Katherine Edson of Los Angeles and Miss Elizabeth Freeman, an English suffragette, were speaking for Hughes, it was alleged that women in automobiles disturbed the speakers by driving their automobiles through the crowd and distributing Democratic literature.

At street meetings, the cheers of the crowd on one side drowned out the speakers on the other. Whirling crowds jammed the streets at all points.

With only a few brief stops scheduled between here and San Francisco, the special departed late today, after a busy day of speechmaking had been spent here by the twelve women comprising its campaigning force.

A public meeting at a theater, which was well attended, and at a hotel, where the vistors made their headquarters, were the chief events of the afternoon, following street meetings earlier in the day.

The train was scheduled to make its first stop, after leaving here, at [illegible]

"I CAN'T," SAYS WILSON, IN TALKING OF PEACE.

Reiterates on the Same Day a Member of Parliament Invites Mediation that His Hands are Tied and His Lips Gummed Together when it Comes to Talking Reason and Common Sense with the Belligerents.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

LONG BRANCH (N. J.) Oct. 14.—In a speech before a large delegation of Pennsylvania Democrats, President Wilson declared today that while he is for peace, "America is always ready to fight for things that are American." He summed up his idea of the issues of the present campaign in the words: "America knows that it is faced with this choice: Peace, the continuance of the development of business along the lines which it has now established and developed, and the maintenance of well-known progressive lines of action, on the one hand, or, on the other, a disturbance of policy all along the line, new conditions, new adjustments, undefined alterations of policy, and back of it all invisible government."

The President discussed what he declared was the attitude toward war and peace of different elements of the Republican party.

"I understand from the leaders of the Republican party that nothing has been done right," he said. "They do not say that the thing done was always wrong, but the way in which it was done was always wrong. They do not venture to say, that is, the private counsel does not venture to say, that we wanted anything but peace; but they would have preferred some other way, not disclosed, of obtaining peace. The vocal part says, 'We wanted war.' The silent part intimates that we wanted peace but wanted another kind of peace. They can never get over that fundamental uneasiness, gentlemen, that America is in charge of somebody else than themselves. But America knows that the things that were done did obtain peace, and it does not know that the things that might have been done would have obtained peace."

HE SAYS "I CAN'T."

Mr. Wilson reiterated previous declarations that it is almost impossible to do anything in the field of foreign affairs because foreign nations "have been led to believe that a dominant element in the Republican party is in favor of drawing the United States into the European war and they have been told, with abundant evidence, that it is probable that if the Republicans succeed, we shall enter upon a policy of exploitation of our neighbors in Mexico.

Continuing his discussion of foreign affairs, Mr. Wilson declared that although the leaders of the Republican party demand that the rights of Americans be protected everywhere, on one occasion "the Republican machine was able to compel a majority of its members in the House of Representatives to vote that American citizens had no right to travel on the high seas."

Mr. Wilson reiterated his advocacy of a league of nations to preserve the peace of the world, and attacked the leaders of the Progressive party, who, he said, had betrayed the rank and file. He also declared that the selection of a Congress is just is important as the election of a President, because "the real source of action and the real machinery of obstruction is in Congress."

SOLDIERS ON BORDER LEARN MANY THINGS.

Military Experience of Guardsmen will be Most Valuable to the Future—Mobilization Camps Afford Opportunity for Exercise of "Fads and Fancies" of Individual Troops—Health is Improved.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SAN ANTONIO (Tex.) Oct. 5.—Many things outside of military training are being learned by the 100,000 soldiers who are mobilized upon the Mexican border. They are being broadened in divers ways and there is probably not a man in the service who will not realize later on in life, if he does not now grasp the fact, that he has been benefited materially by the outdoor school of experience that is being conducted in the open spaces of the frontier country. His coming into close contact with nature and his better understanding of the real human attributes that enter into the make-up of himself and associates give him a more tolerant appreciation of life in its varied phases and more thoroughly equip him for whatever duties he may be called upon to perform when he returns to the more or less humdrum worldly affairs that are found outside of the army.

"FADS AND FANCIES.".

The different mobilization camps upon the border afford an excellent opportunity for the free exercise of "fads and fancies" by the soldiers. Men who were dignified and austere in the private walks of life from which they came become boys again. If there ever was an emplification of the saying that "a man is but a boy grown up" it is to be found in the every-day pranks, pleasures and fads in which the host of soldiers indulge as a means of whiling away their leisure time upon the border. It is not all work with the troops; they are given ample time for enjoyment. In the matter of games, the monotony of camp life is enlivened with baseball, polo and social entertainments of various sorts. Even a horse show that would have done credit, it is said, to some of the famous events of that kind in the effete East, was given by the New York regiments at a border camp in the lower Rio Grande Valley

Besides the many enlivening diversions there are many novel things of a practical nature in the border army to claim the attention of the troops themselves, and the visitors to their camps and spectators along the routes of their frequent hikes.

PETS AND MASCOTS.

There is something about the way soldiers adopt pets and take to mascots that would afford an interesting study for psychologists. Men who may have displayed an absolute aversion to any type of pet when at home are often the first to succumb to the desire to possess some kind of animal life over which they can "make over" when in camp. It is probably the lurking feeling of close companionship that actuates the soldiers in adopting pets. This form of diversion is often strange and freakish. Upon the Rio Grande border the practice of the enlisted men in making pets and mascots of rattlesnakes, bob cats, tarantulas and other dangerous denizens of the wilds became so menacing to the troops that an order was issued prohibiting the keeping of those types of captives in the camps.

These more dangerous species of wild life have been largely replaced by the adoption of long-eared Mexican burros, goats, stray dogs and harmless lizzards by great numbers of the soldiers. In every camp during the rest periods each day are to be seen scores of big, brawny men patiently laboring with their special pet animals in efforts to teach them tricks of various kinds. Many lizzards have been domesticated and even taught to go through unique performances by their proud possessors.

RUNS TO DOGS.

When it comes to pets the penchant of most of the soldiers runs to dogs. If there ever was an earthly haven for stray dogs it is in the army of more than 100,000 men upon the Mexican border. No matter how worthless and disreputable a dog may appear to be, the animal is assured of a warm welcome should it enter the confines of any of the army camps. There is great rivalry between the different soldiers and the companies as to which shall capture the most dogs that come within their reach. These animals are royally treated. They are fed abundantly from the scraps of the company mess and are given comfortable places to sleep. No matter how worthless or forlorn a cur the animal may have been in its pre-army days, it is soon transformed into a spirited and affectionate pet.

Some of the dogs which have a roving disposition do not confine their attachments to any particular man or unit, but become the pets of the regiment or perhaps the whole division. They visit around from place to place in the camp and are given a welcome wherever they go. In the big military camp at Camp Wilson, near San Antonio, there is one particular bulldog that not only has the full freedom of the tents of the enlisted men, but is at home in the more luxurious quarters of the regimental and division officers. This animal is fed on the best food that the different messes afford. Where he came from no one seems to know. He put in his appearance upon the camp grounds one day soon after the mobilization of the division. He was taken in charge and formally adopted by an infantry company belonging to one of the Wisconsin regiments and was given the name of "Carranza."

The animal made new acquaintances readily and was soon known by name by practically every one of the 15,000 soldiers in camp. He is absent from the Wisconsin company for days at a time while visiting some other part of the camp. On the long hike which the division made to Austin "Carranza" walked and rode as he pleased. Sometimes he would be given a seat on a battery wagon and ride for several miles; then again he would be picked up by a teamster or perhaps by a motor truck driver and carried more miles on the journey. Sufficient to say, "Carranza" arrived at Austin in prime condition and he made the return journey to San Antonio just as comfortably.

CANINES ON HIKE.

Hundreds of dogs made the trip to Austin and back with the soldiers, and on the 100-mile hike which a division of troops at El Paso made through New Mexico scores of dogs went along. When the canines became tired of walking they were picked up and carried. Often the animals were to be seen lying comfortably upon the saddles of the cavalrymen, others reposed upon the shoulders of the infantrymen, and many others occupied seats upon the army wagons and motor trucks.

In some of the camps in the chaparral region of the lower Rio Grande border are to be seen a number of wild javalins or musk hogs which were captured in the brush and have been domesticated. The javalin is easily tamed if captured when young. The animal is often made to serve the purpose of watchdog upon the more remote ranches. It is taught to guard the premises and to attack strangers. There are thousands of wild javalins in the mesquit-covered territory that lies adjacent to the Rio Grande. They roam through the wilderness in droves of twenty-five to 100, and the knowledge that they are fearless and will attack anything when cornered causes them to be avoided by the average sportsman who invades their habitat.

THE SAND FLEA.

One of the most annoying pests of the border is the sand flea. This little insect makes camp life almost unendurable in some localities. It was left to one of the privates of a New York regiment to utilize a large collection of the fleas in a unique way.

"These pesky things have given me plenty of exercise, now I am going to turn the tables on them and make them do some jumping around," he remarked one day.

That was the foreword to his entry into the pastime of training fleas. With infinite patience he has sought to train a troop of more than 100 sand fleas to do his bidding. He keeps them in a little box, partly filled with cotton, when not putting them through the circus exhibition which he says he has taught them to perform. He says that by the time he is mustered out of service he expects to have several hundred well-trained fleas on hand, and that he will either sell them to some exhibitor or go on the road with them himself

AS A "MULE SKINNER."

Taking a young college graduate and converting him into a mule "skinner" at one fell swoop is a transformation which the army authorities have been able to accomplish in a number of cases. There are many young men, not long out of university, who are filling jobs as teamsters upon the border. In many instances these mule "skinners," as they are universally known in army circles, had no previous experience in handling or driving mules. To each army wagon four mules are required. The teamster practically lives with his mules. He has no other military duty to perform other than to take care of and drive the animals. He sleeps in the wagon, to the wheels of which the mules are tied at night. One of the many and strange customs of military life is that every female army mule is named "Mabel."

"It is an unwritten general order that every mule 'skinner' has got to obey," remarked an officer to a new recruit to the army wagon train.

Many of the wagon drivers are devoted to their mules. There is much rivalry between them as to whose team is the fattest and best workers. The average mule "skinner" will beg, borrow and even steal feed for his mules in excess of the regular army allowance.

CHICAGO POLICE GUARD OFFICES

Part of Stage the Setting in Hoyne's Legal Drive.

Mayor Thompson Subpoenaed as Witness in Court.

State Senator George Harding is Also Summoned.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—In every office in the City Hall today, even that of the smoke inspector, policemen were on guard. It was part of the stage setting in State's Attorney Hoyne's legal drive against Chief of Police Charles C. Healy, whom he accused of conspiracy and malfeasance in office.

In the court of Chief Justice Olson of the Municipal Court politicians and lawyers gathered to be present when Mr. Hoyne appeared to ask for warrants for the arrest of the Chief.

Mayor William H. Thompson was subpoenaed as a witness.

The first witness was Police Capt. William P. O'Brien, who was recently suspended by Chief Healy. Capt. O'Brien named State Senator George F. Harding as the so-called mouthpiece of the city administration in matters pertaining to gambling, saloons and vice. Senator Harding is a Republican, a close friend of Mayor Thompson, and for years represented the Second Ward in the City Council.

Witness said that the Beaux Arts Club opened last month with the avowed purpose of selling liquor twenty-four hours a day, but particularly after the legal closing hour. He wrote Chief Healy, he said, asking that the license be revoked, but received no reply.

Eventually, Sergt. Sullivan was sent to the "club" by Chief Healy and witnessed drinking and dancing orgies participated in by white persons and negroes. Still no action was taken, the witness asserted.

Chief Healy's secretary, Capt. O'Brien said, told him that he should "listen" to Senator Harding with reference to the Beaux Arts Club.

Capt. O'Brien testified that he had been powerless to control vicious resorts in his districts because of intereference from higher officials. His testimony, accompanied by correspondence seized by State's Attorney Hoyne, was given before Chief Justice Olsen of the Municipal Court.

State Senator George F. Harding and Oscar de Priest, negro Alderman of the Second Ward, were implicated as well as Healy, and Luthardt, Healy's secretary, as exercising a restraining hand over the police captain.

The resorts had been allowed to open, O'Brein testified, in spite of his written reports discrediting the character of their owners and urging that licenses be refused.

"I have been in the best farming sections of twenty-two states, and in none of them did I find districts where such crops could be produced as we raise here in Palo Verde Valley. "Previous to locating here I looked up all the best land propositions in California, Oregon, Washington and Arizona—but Palo Verde Valley looked better to me than anything I saw. We have a continuous growing season. I have cut alfalfa here in December. There is no limit to our use of water and the upkeep is very low. R. C. Stevenson.

"No section of the State has a better water system than Palo Verde Valley. The supply is enormous and the cost of maintenance is low. I am raising stock—cattle and hogs—and, believe me, there is no better section for this industry in the West. Here is the place for a farmer to come and make real money." C. C. Welsh.

NO OVERTURES MADE AS YET BY VENIZELOS.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, Oct. 14.—Former Premier Venizelos of Greece, who is now at the head of the provisional government set up in opposition to the policy of King Constantine in regard to the war, is quoted by Reuter's Saloniki correspondent to the effect that no overtures have been made to the King beyond an appeal to him to abandon the path in which he has persisted.

"Nor does the provisional government contemplate any further steps in that direction," the former Premier added. "I have no hope that the King will change his conduct of affairs.

"His Majesty had a splendid opportunity to repudiate his engagements with Germany when the Germans allowed the Bulgarians to violate their solemn undertaking that they would not enter Seres, Kavala or Drama; but that opportunity was allowed to escape, because, forsooth, Constantine was convinced German legions eventually would come to his assistance and rescue him from the hands of the Entente powers."

M. Venizelos is quoted as saying further that he counts on the sympathy and support of Liberal countries, especially England and France, in the struggle between constitutional liberties and a return to a feudal system, "which is what the present issue in Greece amounts to."

DIVORCE CANON IS REJECTE

Six Hours' Spirited De Precedes the Action.

Amendment Now in Abey at Least Three Years.

Fight on Innovation Made Episcopal Session.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 14.—The House of Deputies of the general convention of the Protestant Episcopal church here today rejected the proposal to embody in its canons a provision forbidding its clergymen to solemnize marriages for persons divorced from living spouses.

The six-hours' debate which preceded the action indicated wide difference of opinion among members of the church. The recommendation was contained in the report of a joint committee composed of bishops, five clergymen, and five laymen, appointed three years ago to study matters relating to matrimony. By its action today the house of the convention placed in abeyance for at least three years further consideration of any amendment. The present canon provides that a clergyman of the church may marry the "innocent party" to a divorce granted on statutory grounds.

PROPOSAL PENDING.

The proposal, however, is pending in the House of Bishops, the upper house, and will be brought to a vote next Tuesday. Such action will be merely for the purpose of indicating the attitude of the bishops, for no change in the canons can be made without concurrence of both houses.

Balloting on the amendment was by dioceses and the line between clerical and lay delegates was clearly cut, the clergy voting to adopt the proposal and the lay delegates rejecting it.

While the fight on the floor for the proposed innovation was led by the Rev. Leighton Parks of New York, and opposition headed by the Rev. Dr. E. H. McKim of Washington, perhaps the most spirited objections were voiced by the Rev. John Howard Melish of Brooklyn.

WILL DEFY THE LAW.

"If you pass this law there are men in the church who will defy it and take the consequences," he said. "I should favor this resolution if it were merely a question of luxury for the rich."

Dr. Melish said there are many instances of some women with children abandoned by their husbands who would be driven to extremes for a livelihood unless they could marry.

"It is well for us to draw the robes about us," he added, "and we are going to uphold a standard and shift the responsibility, but such action would conflict with the fundamental tenets of Christianity."

Dr. Parks urged that the passage of the resolution was necessary to protect the children. "In this corrupt and adulterous generation let us go on record as setting the standards of our church in accord with the ideals of Jesus Christ," he said.

MAN OF PEACE, SAYS HUGHES.

Disputes Charge Vote for Him Means Vote for War.

Present Course will Embroil Us, He Tells Audience.

Country Living on Stimulant of European Conflict.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

LINCOLN (Neb.) Oct. 14.—Charles E. Hughes today characterized as "preposterous" the declaration that a vote for him meant a vote for war.

"I am a man of peace," Mr. Hughes said. "Who wants war I don't want war."

Correct policies, Mr. Hughes said, would keep America out of war.

"That sort of thing we have been having will not keep us out of war," he said. "It will embroil us in difficulty."

In the six addresses which marked the opening day of his Presidential campaign in Nebraska, the Republican nominee discussed nearly all the issues of the campaign. He characterized as temporary and abnormal the present prosperity of the country and urged support of the Republican party so that a protective tariff might be enacted to fortify American enterprises in post-bellum days against unequal competition.

LIVING ON STIMULANT.

The country, he said, was living on "the stimulant" of the European war and would not long have the stimulant.

"You might as well talk to a drunken man of the bliss of intoxication," Mr. Hughes said. "Our opponents instead of making political capital out of the present prosperity which came up through the European war ought to be thinking of what they did to the country with their policy, put in force through the Underwood bill. There may be those who enjoy the contemplation of that sort of thing, but they will have a rude awakening."

The nominee assailed the Adamson bill as "a gold brick" handed to labor. This declaration was made before an audience of railroad employees who crowded around his car at Wymore.

In his speech here the nominee went into detail on his views with respect to the international considerations of peace and the organization of peace. At Fairbury he replied to the charge that a vote for him meant a vote for war.

"I have heard it said since I came to Nebraska that somebody has been going through the State saying that a vote for me meant a vote for war," Mr. Hughes said. "Did you ever hear a more preposterous proposition to present to men? I am a man of peace. I have been spending my life in maintaining the institutions of peace. I desire in that way to promote international peace. Who can think without horror of the ravages of war? Who can desire war? I do not desire war. I do not desire petty wars. I do not desire war in Mexico to satisfy a personal vindictiveness against a disliked ruler. I don't like that kind of war.

"I believe in correct policies. They

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA remains loyal to Charles Evans Hughes. The straw vote being conducted by The Times in this locality shows that sentiment is about the same as it was the first week of the canvass. Even in districts populated mostly by the laboring classes the straw vote gives a majority to the Republican standard bearer.

Reports from the North are more or less favorable to the President, due to influences of the labor unions in San Francisco. Other counties above the Tehachepi are reported to be swinging back to Hughes. Despite reports emanating from Democratic strongholds there is no reason to place California in the doubtful column. It should give Mr. Hughes a tremendous majority, if the straw vote can be taken as a criterion.

MAN OF PEACE, SAYS HUGHES.

Deputes Charge Vote for Him Means Vote for War.

Present Course will Embroil Us, He Tells Audience.

Country Living on Stimulant of European Conflict.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

LINCOLN (Neb.) Oct. 14.—Charles E. Hughes today characterized as "preposterous" the declaration that a vote for him meant a vote for war.

"I am a man of peace," Mr. Hughes said. "Who wants war I don't want war."

Correct policies, Mr. Hughes said, would keep America out of war.

"That sort of thing we have been having will not keep us out of war," he said. "It will embroil us in difficulty."

In the six addresses which marked the opening day of his Presidential campaign in Nebraska, the Republican nominee discussed nearly all the issues of the campaign. He characterized as temporary and abnormal the present prosperity of the country and urged support of the Republican party so that a protective tariff might be enacted to fortify American enterprises in post-bellum days against unequal competition.

LIVING ON STIMULANT.

The country, he said, was living on "the stimulant" of the European war and would not long have the stimulant.

"You might as well talk to a drunken man of the bliss of intoxication," Mr. Hughes said. "Our opponents instead of making political capital out of the present prosperity which came up through the European war ought to be thinking of what they did to the country with their policy, put in force through the Underwood bill. There may be those who enjoy the contemplation of that sort of thing, but they will have a rude awakening."

The nominee assailed the Adamson bill as "a gold brick" handed to labor. This declaration was made before an audience of railroad employees who crowded around his car at Wymore.

In his speech here the nominee went into detail on his views with respect to the international conditions of peace and the organization of peace. At Fairbury he referred to the charge that a vote for him meant a vote for war.

"I have heard it said since I came to Nebraska that somebody has been going through the State saying that a vote for me meant a vote for war," Mr. Hughes said. "Did any one hear a more preposterous proposition to present to men? I am a man of peace. I have been spending my life in maintaining the institutions of peace. I desire in every way to promote international peace. Who can think without horror of the ravages of war? Who can desire war? I do not desire war. I do not desire petty wars. I do not desire war in Mexico to satisfy a personal vindictiveness against a disliked ruler. I don't want that kind of war.

"I believe in correct policies. They will keep us out of war. The sort of thing we have been having will not keep us out of war. I will embroil us in difficulty. It did embroil us in difficulty in Mexico.

"We wish well to all people; we desire to have prosperity throughout the world, but we have a particular care here. Unless we take care of our own, we shall never serve humanity. Unless we develop the great opportunities of the United States we will serve no one whatever. I am for America first and America efficient.

"Our friends on the other side seem to think that everybody who disagrees with them wants war. Well, that would be a very cheerful way for a blind man to consider the situation.

NO MONOPOLY ON PEACE.

"Our friends on the other side certainly have not got a monopoly on peace. Let us look a little at the record. They tell us they are so strongly for the preservation of peace that if anyone criticises what they have done, he must be a militarist.

"I maintain that the most important thing for the purpose of safeguarding the peace of the land is correct policies. That is important in this hemisphere. That is important in Latin America. That was very important in Mexico. Instead of having a policy of peace based upon a correct attitude with regard to that unfortunate country, our administration, this present administration, entered into a policy of officious intermeddling with matters which did not concern it, and embroiled this country in actual war. That is the real fact of the case."

AS TO HUERTA.

Mr. Hughes reviewed the administration's policy with respect to Huerta.

"I stand here to say, and I challenge contradiction, that that threat to make war upon that individual and to use whatever force was adequate to put him out of the government, which, whether we recognized it or not, others had recognized, was utterly indefensible in law or in morals," Mr. Hughes declared.

Reverting to the tariff, he said:

"We must equip ourselves to take care of our own vital interests. We can't do that unless we faithfully apply as wisely, as intelligently as we know how, the doctrine of protection of American enterprise and interests. We have had some suggestion on the other side of an appreciation of this situation.

"They have not been very definite about it; they have not told us exactly what they stand for. If they do not stand for a tariff for revenue only, they do not stand for anything at all, so far as I know in connection with the tariff. If they are not for that principle, so far as the tariff is concerned, they are without principle, because they certainly have not declared their faith in any other principle.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

"They have, however, told us that they will give us a tariff commission. I sincerely believe that we should have every possible aid to an understanding of the facts affecting these serious problems. I do not believe in going blind. I have not come to this place of candidacy, leaving the career of which I spoke, for the purpose of parcelling out speical privileges at the expense of the public welfare to any class or to any group.

"I want to see this difficulty and important matter attended to with the utmost care and fairness. It can be done if we get the facts that apply to each situation; and I believe in a tariff commission; but it is perfectly idle for anybody to talk to the American public as if a tariff commission were a solution of tariff difficulties. Tariff commissions don't legislate."

Standing Fast.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA IS LOYAL TO HUGHES.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA remains loyal to Charles Evans Hughes. The straw vote being conducted by The Times in this locality shows that sentiment is about the same as it was the first week of the canvass. Even in districts populated mostly by the laboring classes the straw vote gives a majority to the Republican standard bearer.

Reports from the North are more or less favorable to the President, due to influences of the labor unions in San Francisco. Other sections above the Tehachepi are reported to be swinging back to Hughes. Despite reports emanating from Democratic strongholds there is no reason to place California in the doubtful column. It should give Mr. Hughes a tremendous majority, if the straw vote can be taken as a criterion.

In only one laboring institution have the employees shown themselves to be overwhelmingly for Mr. Wilson. This was the Ford plant where the vote was two to one in favor of the President. The result there was not surprising. That the railroad men who have been counted upon by the Democrats to stand solidly for the President are about equally divided is considered a good sign by Republicans.

The Socialist strength is beginning to show in Nevada where the Socialists are uniting to try to elect a United States Senator. While still running third, Benson is showing stronger in this State, not enough to win but probably, to make a Hughes victory secure. The Socialists are accused of attempting to colonize the whole State of Nevada. But the straw vote indicates that they have not made much of a success of it.

Arizona continues to support Wilson, although he is losing some votes to the Socialists in that State also. The Socialist vote will do much to decide both Arizona and Nevada.

Meager ballots from New Mexico show that Hughes is easily holding his own. Both the Roosevelt and Taft forces in this State have centered on Hughes. In this State the Socialist vote is comparatively light.

RIGHT TO SINK MERCHANT SHIPS AS STATED BY THE GERMANS.

BERLIN, Oct. 14 (via Sayville.)—In answer to the report sent out by the British wireless that the German submarine U-53 "torpedoed in some cases and sunk" ships, a competent German authority, says the Overseas News Agency, makes the following statement:

"The commercial war near the coast of the United States is being carried on according to rules and the German [illegible], which means that a merchantman can be stopped and that after the vessel has been searched and the crew and passengers are in safety the vessel can be sunk under certain conditions.

"These conditions are, for instance, when a hostile steamer or a neutral steamer carrying contraband of war is involved, or when the military situation makes it impossible to bring a steamer, which has been captured, into port as a prize.

"In no case, however, can this be construed to mean that a merchantman may be sunk by a torpedo without previous warning.

"According to further reports from Washington, the American authorities are said to be afraid that very complicated questions of neutrality may arise if the German submarines operate so near the American coast and that such submarine action is equivalent to a blockade.

"To this it is stated that the German sea forces are entitled to carry on a cruiser warfare anywhere in the open sea. Territorial waters of neutral states are carefully respected. A blockade, of course, is out of the question."

of the soaring price of bread in this contry.

SHIPS AND RAINFALL.

The Indian wheat crop will probably be barely sufficient to support the inhabitants of India. England can place no dependence on that source. There was a lack of rainfall during the wheat seeding time all over the country.

The wheat crops of Argentine and Australia are insufficient to make good this shortage. Furthermore, the allies haven't enough ships to carry whatever Australian and Argentine wheat there is available. Wheat in thtse countries is so far distant that the British cannot afford to take ships from the American trade to go after it. Available ships must be kept on the Atlantic, where the return trips can be made quickly enough to keep England from starving.

Recent reports in The Times told how the wheat is rotting on the Australian wharves for lack of bottoms. An American ship captain told how he was refused permission to load a cargo in Australia unless he would consent to take wheat back to England.

Wheat crops in Russia, Bulgaria and Rumania are reported to have been good. The Russian crop, however, has been somewhat reduced on account of a shortage of labor. The general supposition always has been that the Czar had so many men that he didn't know what to do with them. It is a fact, however, that farm labor has been so scarce in Russia that Chinese have been imported through Siberia to reap the crops.

Nevertheless the wheat crops of Russia, Bulgaria and Rumania offer the succor that England needs. It is clear that this was the main reason why Rumania was brought into the war at this particular time.

CALLED IN RUMANIA.

The allies saw the terrible threat of a food shortage looming up. By driving a way down through the Balkans across Rumania they hoped to tap the wheat fields of Southern Russia and Rumania.

As long ago as the winter of 1914-1915 the allies were living in dread of just what now threatens. It is certain that the necessity for opening up a way to Russian wheat was the controlling idea in the English offensive against the Dardanelles. Months before Rumania went into the war the allies contracted for millions of bushels of her wheat to be delivered when a way could be broken through.

The great pressure for wheat undoubtedly induced the allies to bring Rumania into the war before the proper military moment arrived. The Saloniki expedition was not sufficiently developed; the Russian advance into the Carpathians had not gone far enough for Rumania to have made the plunge. The need must have been very dire to have induced the allies to shoot off this nation-in-reserve at half-cock.

It was a great gamble with threatened starvation as the stake. The allies seem to have lost. The Rumanians seem to have been hammered to a crushing defeat in the Transylvanian Alps and are hotfooting it back into their home territory, searching for help as they go.

The result of the campaign in the Dobrudja seems to be less definitely fixed; but there are no cheers heard from Rumania in that quarter, either.

NO PROPER COHESION.

There is some indication that the reason for the failure of the whole Rumanian expedition was a shortage of ammunition at Saloniki. This shortage was no doubt caused by a lack of ships. The shortage of ships was brought about partly by the depredations of the German U-boats; partly by the necessity of ging on longer voyages in the quest for wheat.

At any rate, owing to the lack of shooting material, the Saloniki expedition was unable to do its part in the Rumania campaign. Its part in the Rumania campaign was to have been an attack on the southern flank of the Bulgarian army, delivered with such violence that the Bulgars would be unable to resist the Rumanian attack on the other flank.

As I have set out in other issues of the Checkerboard, the lack of cohesion and collaboration on the part of the allies is a difficulty almost impossible to surmount. There has never been one instance during the whole war in which the allies have acted wholly in concert. There are too many obstacles to be surmounted. It is a comparatively simple matter for the central powers to act together. It is next to impossible for the allies to accomplish a combined military operation.

Several eminent military critics have expressed the opinion, during the past two weeks, that the Balkans are about to become the graveyard of the hopes of the allies. However this may be, it is evident that Germany has pretty definitely closed to the allies the wheat fields of Rumania and Southern Russia, for the coming winter at least.

AMERICA THEIR HOPE.

With the failure of this Russian-Rumanian food line, the allies look to North America as a deep-sea diver looks to the tube that feeds him air from the surface. If North America should be cut off from Englahd, starvation would take place in one-two-three order.

The objective of the submarine fleet now operating off the New England coast is to bring about this state of food shortage.

It has been demonstrated that the allies cannot really destroy the German subs. Allied warships couldn't find or destroy the Deutschland when they knew from which port she was leaving and exactly when she was leaving. It is not reasonable to suppose that they can stop a great under-water fleet whose location or numbers they do not know.

Probably in order to give confidence to the British public, the English Admiralty has "fed up" the world with the idea that a complete defense against submarines has been devised; that the British practically destroyed the German undersea fleet the first year of the war.

The real facts were set forth at the hearings before Congress last spring. The British destroyed probably fifty German submarines. The conditions whereby they wrought this destruction do not seem to offer much chance of destroying the German subs operating off Nantucket.

A lot of cock and bull stories have been told about nets spread out all through the channel and about the German subs running head first into these nets and being held there like catfish until the crews died of suffocation.

HOW THEY DO IT.

According to the secret information that has come to our Navy Department, the real method of catching subs is quite different. The net whereby the British snare the subs is used in quite a different way.

Having detected the presence of a submarine by sensitive under-water sound receivers, two British destroyers steam along in the direction the sub is known to be going. As they steam, they pay out a great net whose meshes are made of heavy steel wires about the size of a lead-pencil. The nets are corked at the top and weighted at the bottom so they make an immense screen reaching down through the sea and across a pathway several miles wide. The German sub steams into this net and can't shake it off. As the net trails along from the submarine's bow, the watre is torn into flurries by the dragging of the great meshes. The wilder the maneuvers of the sub in attempting to shake off the net, the more disturbance of the water. Thereafter the exact location of that sub is evident to everything that floats for miles around.

Now, the weakness of the submarine is it has to come up to recharge its electric batteries. On the surface, it travels by gasoline power. Under water it runs by electricity. It gets the electric power from the energy of its own gasoline engines. It has no way to transmit power from the gasoline engine to the electric batteries without coming to the surface.

Knowing this, the British surround the wildly swirling whirlpool of water with a cordon of boats and wait for the sub to exhaust its batteries and come to the surface to recharge.

That's one system. The other is to take advantage of the fact that a submarine's voyages are limited in length by the large amount of lubricating oil needed for the engines. Room is lacking on the subs for any considerable oil supply. So to avoid the necessity of chasing all the way back to Germany for more, the subs have—or had—oil and fuel staked out in submerged cans off the Irish coast. Sometimes the cans were concealed on shore. The British found out where these hidden caches were located, then waited with concealed fleets of fast armed motor boats. When a sub came nosing up out of the depths to get to her oil, the British boats would swarm out like a nest of hornets and shoot her to death.

THE NEFF SYSTEM.

I have gone into these details in order to show that it will be more difficult to catch the Germans off the American coast than off the Irish coast.

You can see at once that a successful campaign against a fleet of German undersea boats involves the use of a large number of fast small boats—preferably armed motor boats or destroyers. I don't see how the allies can assemble such a fleet off our coast.

It is merely a guess on my part; but it would not be at all surprising if the German navy had adopted such a system as was urged upon Congress last spring by Abner Neff, a Los Angeles attorney, who controls the submarine patents perfected at a Long Beach ship yard.

Would it not be odd if the German navy had based the ultimate of its frightful struggle upon an idea brought forth in Southern California?

Mr. Neff's patent is for a submarine which need not come to the surface to recharge its batteries. It uses gasoline power both on the surface and under water. The exhaust is forced out by compressed air and carried back under the keel to the propeller. This is supposed to cut off the air bubbles which, otherwise, would rise to the surface and betray the location of the undersea boat.

But even so; even with the great increase in size over the type of undersea boats that operated during the first months of the war, and with the consequent increase in steaming radius, it is impossible to imagine the German sub fleet operating off our coasts without a concealed supply of fuel on our shore or a mother ship carrying supplies.

Facing this critical situation, it looks to me as though the eyes of the allies must turn appealingly to Russia. At least twice during the war, the Russian army has saved the allies from complete defeat by the German armies. Perhaps the great white Czar can again come to the rescue.

Yesterday I saw the letter of a British officer who had written to a relative in Los Angeles. He said he had been ordered from a hospital to the front on the Somme. This would seem to indicate a shortage of British line officers, resulting from the dreadful sacrifices made by the allies in that advance. In the letter, he spoke of the ghastly cost of the advance and intimated that he hoped the results would be worth the price.

THE WATCHMAN.

TREND OF CURRENT POLITICAL THOUGHT AND ACTION.

The tremendous registration in Los Angeles county is attracting wide attention. While the total figures have not been officially announced, it is believed to be a safe estimate that approximately 362,000 electors will be eligible to vote on November 7. The grand total may even exceed that number. The significance of it is of decidedly more interest to the State as a whole than its bearing on the "wet" and "dry" election which is generally believed to have been responsible for the great increase.

Los Angeles county can easily control every State election. It has about one-third of the total registration of the commonwealth, nearly 40,000 more than Alameda and San Francisco counties combined. This being true, there seems to be no reasonable excuse for the south surrendering every important bit of political patronage to the grasping office-seekers of the north; and when the people below the Tehachepi fully realize their strength and refuse to be dominated by the unscrupulous Johnson machine Southern California will get the representation it deserves.

The Johnson programme is a bitter dose, but the people must have learned to like his medicine. They say you get used to hangin's in Texas and it looks like Californians are getting used to worse than that. High Ram of course will not admit that he has prepared a double-cross for the south because he needs our votes in his fight for the Senatorship. Keep your ear to the ground following the November election and you may get the inside of that deal, which is designed to wrest the Governorship from the south and give it to Mayor Rolph or some other close friend of Johnsons in the north.

Fortunately the south may have something to say about the gubernatorial situation, and with Johnson out of the State, the machine he has so carefully constructed during the past six years may not be so powerful as it has been. That Johnson is a good vote-getter for himself cannot be disputed. He has demonstrated it, but it has also been proved that when he seeks support for some other fellow he is repudiated. An example was his frantic efforts to elect the United Republican ticket of Presidential electors; also his effort to stem the tide against the referendum and initiative measures which were given approval last spring.

If everything should come out as programmed for the Tenth Congress race everybody would be more or less satisfied. It would assure Southern California of a loyal Republican Congressman for the regular term of two years, and the fact that Stanley Benedict would go to Washington for three months would have little effect upon the political situation. There is a feeling in some quarters, however, that the proposed deal may not be successfully carried out—due to the suspicion that always attaches to the political maneuverings of the Progressive camp. Benedict has publicly announced his willingness to give up the fight for the long term and run exclusively for the unexpired term of W. D. Stephens. In return for this promise Capt. Osborne, the Republican candidate for the regular term, and many other prominent Republicans have given their word that they will support Benedict. To be elected he must receive a majority of the votes that are written in. That he will have opposition is certain, at least three men having announced themselves as candidates for the short term. When the Progressives find that the opposition to Benedict is formidable, will they keep their word in relation to the candidacy of Capt. Osborne and vote solidly for him? Benedict's name will be printed upon the ballot as a candidate for the long term, and whether he seeks the office or not he will receive some votes. No one has ever believed that it is possible for him to defeat Capt. Osborne; but that he will receive a great many votes is the only logical conclusion. Some Progressives are laughing in their sleeves over the possibility of their "hero" being elected to both terms. The opinion of men who have made a study of the situation is that there is no doubt about the election of Capt. Osborne and they feel positive that Benedict will be honored with the short term, but they anticipate a hard fight against him and would not be surprised if the feeling will run so high that intimate friends of Benedict will refuse to take the programme and vote for him for both terms. It will be an interesting scrap to say the least.

Two more aspirants for the short term announced their candidacies yesterday. They are John Wray, veteran newspaper man and politician, and Lucas Luke, a colored man. The latter is appealing almost exclusively to his own race for votes and if he should get them all would pile up a tremendous total. Mr. Wray announced his candidacy last night at the Jeffersonian Club, where he bitterly arraigned the man who would accept the nomination of the Progressives when he was decisively defeated by the Republican candidate.

The campaign waged by Charles W. Bell against Charles H. Randall for Congress in the Ninth District is worrying the latter's friends. They know that Mr. Bell is a vote-getter and that he will thoroughly canvass the district. He is appealing to the Republicans upon the ground that Randall is a Democrat and that the views of the two candidates on prohibition are almost identical. The Randall forces now are endeavoring to compel the Republican organizations to repudiate Mr. Bell. Unless they do the threat is made that "we will vote for Wilson." It is not likely that they will be successful and nothing could be more certain than the fact that Bell will give Randall a "hoss" race.

Bitter campaigns are being waged in the three Supervisor districts. W. E. Hinshaw, the incumbent, in the Fourth District, has received the indorsement of more than a score of leading improvement associations, and his friends believe he will be reelected. R. F. McClellan, his opponent, however, is a big business man who has made a success of his own enterprises and is making a hard fight. In the Fourth District Jonathan S. Dodge and Stephen C. Packer are fighting for every inch of the ground. The wise ones say Mr. Dodge has the edge on the situation. Of course Mark Jones is leading Snorton in the Second District.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK.

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears and after another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Father Haggerty will officiate, and motion-picture friends will attend the services.

JAPS AND SLAVS PROTEST AMERICAN LINE IN CHINA.

Concessions for the Construction of a Railroad by Firm of St. Paul Contractors has Caused Action by the New Allies in the Far East—Tokio Minister Enters His Objection at Peking.

[BY PACIFIC CABLE.]

PEKING, Oct. 14.—Japan and Russia entered protests today against concessions for railway and canal construction in China which have been granted to Americans.

Prince Nicholas Koudacheff, the Russian Minister to China, lodged a protest at the Chinese Foreign Office against the proposed American railroad from Feng Chang, Shansi province, to Lanchow-Fu, in Kansu province, alleging that the Chinese Minister in Petrograd promised verbally eighteen years ago that Russians should have the privilege of building railways in the vicinity of Mongolia.

The disputed line to run for a distance of approximately 400 miles. The agreement entered into between the Siems-Carey Company of St. Paul and the Chinese government empowers the American company to construct equal mileage elsewhere, if the protest holds.

Baron Gonsuke Hayashi, the Japanese Minister to China, today protested to the Chinese Foreign Office against this government's agreement with American contractors for the reconstruction of 200 miles of the grand canal in Shantung province. The Japanese claim, by reason of their conquest of Shantung, all the rights heretofore held by Germany in the development of that Chinese province. The Chinese government contends that Germany must be defeated before such a claim will hold good. The dispute involves the Siems-Carey agreement providing for the construction of the northern half of the grand canal.

NOT OFFICIALLY REPORTED.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The Japanese and Russian protest against the Chinese contract with the American International Corporation for railroad building had not been officially reported to the State Department today but officials expressed deep interest and expected to hear from Minister Reinsch, at Peking.

At present, however, there seems to be no diplomatic issue to involve this government. The American International Corporation as a private American organization secured the contract through a loan to China entirely on its own account and without any communication with the State Department. As an American corporation, however, it will be entitled to the good offices of the government in case it becomes evident that its rights are being actually violated or in case it makes a direct appeal to the State Department for aid.

Contracts for foreign activities in China almost invariably bring forth protests by other governments on the grounds of violation of concessions. Such a contingency was foreseen in the present instance, it is pointed out, by the provision that in case the lines contemplated were protested successfully by another government, equal privileges would be granted elsewhere. Very often negotiations have intervened between the Chinese government and the protesting third government before the full legal rights were cleared up. In many cases, as in the Belgian protest against the British Pukau railroad concession, solution was found by changing the location to another territory.

A SERIOUS MATTER.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—Willard D. Straight, vice-president of the American International Corporation, who has had charge of the negotiations for railway and canal construction in China, said today that until officially advised of the Russian and Japanese protests, the corporation would have no statement to make.

"It is a matter for serious consideration," he said.

PLANS NOT CHANGED.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

ST. PAUL (Minn.) Oct. 14.—No change in plans of the Siems-Carey Company is expected to follow news of the Japanese-Russian protest against the concessions of the company for railroad construction in China, it was said at its offices here today. C. P. Siems, president of the company, is hunting in South Dakota and is not expected home before Monday. The company has let no subcontracts or taken other steps in the matter besides arrangements for preliminary surveys, to make which George A. Kyle has already departed for the Orient. It was not expected that orders countermanding his sailing would be issued. The surveys will take about a year.

REICHSTAG STANDS BY LIEBKNECHT.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

BERLIN (via London) Oct. 14.—The Reichstag Committee today refused to sanction the new proceedings of the court martial at Thorn against Karl Liebknecht. The committee also recommended that the Reichstag demand to see the report of the proceedings before the Berlin courtmartial before finally sanctioning the sentence imposed by that body on the Socialist leader.

In the case of the Socialist deputy Otto Ruehle, the committee refused permission for the continuation of the libel action brought against the deputy on behalf of Gen. Von Bissing, Governor of Belgium, and his staff.

Dr. Liebknecht is at present under sentence of four years and one month imprisonment imposed by the court martial at Berlin for "military treason." Pending his appeal from this sentence, a court martial at Thorn commenced action against him, charging that he attempted to incite the soldiers there to rebellion, through letters.

Herr Ruehle was a follower of his.

He was finally denounced by a Serbian who had known him in New York and who said he was acting for Gerrard Scheffer & Co., No. 300 Broadway, New York, a firm with German affiliations.

STOP MUNITIONS FOR THESSALY.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

ATHENS, Oct. 13 (via London, Oct. 14.)—Greek army officers say that the shipment of war munitions to Thessaly, the stoppage of which was demanded in the note presented to the Greek government yesterday by Admiral du Fournet, commander of the Anglo-French fleet, was merely for the purpose of supplying the soldiers of the fourth army corps, who were not taken to Germany at the time of the Bulgarian occupation of Kavala. The equipment of these soldiers, who were taken to Larissa, fell into the hands of the Bulgarians.

One of the Italian machines was brought down, says the statement.

A CHILD DOESN'T LAUGH AND PLAY IF CONSTIPATED

Look, Mother! Is tongue coated, breath feverish and stomach sour?

"California Syrup of Figs" can't harm tender stomach, liver, bowels.

A laxative today saves a sick child tomorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish; stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child listless, cross feverish, bad breath, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold, or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels and you will have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is ofttimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Look carefully and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

HOTEL ARDEN IS ORDERED CLOSED.

TWENTY - THOUSAND - DOLLAR BOND IS THE ALTERNATIVE.

Red Light Abatement Act is Invoked Against South Hill-street Resort, Notorious for its Immorality, According to the Evidence—Owner Pleads Ignorance.

The Hotel Arden at No. 352 South Hill street was ordered closed for one year by Judge Wellborn yesterday or a bond of $20,000 to be given by the owner of the premises, Herbert Nadeau, to insure that it will be properly conducted. Mr. Nadeau pleaded that he did not know the character of the hotel and had not been given proper notice of the proceedings taken against it under the red-light abatement act.

The testimony presented to the court showed that the hotel was well known in police circles. Twenty-three inmates had been arrested for violating the rooming-house ordinance, for gambling and disorderly conduct. Lillian Bowman, proprietress, was alleged to have been arrested three times.

With the understanding that the hotel would be conducted in an orderly manner, it was allowed to continue some time ago and the rent reduced from $150 to $100 a month. A few days before the complaint was filed through Dr. R. C. Barton, secretary of the Morals Efficiency Committee, Lillian Bowman sold out to another party. The court ordered the furniture sold, the expenses of the prosecution to be paid out of the proceeds and the balance turned over to the successor of Lillian Bowman.

According to the evidence before Judge Wellborn, the Hotel Arden was one of the most notorious places in the city. The numerous arrests covered a period of less than two years.

CORN ESTATE. PETITION IS FILED.

Valuing the household furniture and personal effects at $150, H. O. Cady, a nephew of Mrs. Augusta Corn, who passed away on Thursday, filed a petition for letters of administration on the estate, yesterday. He alleges that he is the next of kin and that his aunt died intestate.

The death of Mrs. Corn makes void the petition of Miss Myrta Fetty of San Diego, said to have been a close friend of Mrs. Corn's, for the appointment of guardian. It is expected that Attorney Barton Darlington, who claims that he is entitled to $8000 which Mrs. Corn agreed to will to him, will contest the statement that she left only $150 worth of effects. Mr. Cady stated that his aunt had deeded the Benton way property to him.

IN AND OUT. ABOUT THE COURTHOUSE.

PARTITION SUIT. Juan B. Bandini and H. J Angell, heirs of Arcadia B. de Baker, sought in a suit filed yesterday to partition a portion of the estate known as the Laguna ranch. Cave J. Couts and many other heirs of the $7,000,000 estate, were named as defendants. They will be required to appear and show what interest they have in the land.

FROST ESTATE. The petition of Howard Frost, the son and executor of the will of Charles H. Frost, owner of the Frost Building, filed for probate yesterday, gives the value of the property as $204,901.66. This includes cash, stocks, bonds, life insurance and personal property worth $137,000, real estate $146,000 and a one-third interest in the estate of Helen I. Frost, $21,701.66. The heirs named in the petition are the son, and Donald and Helen E. Huff, 18 and 17 years respectively, children of the late Lida E. Huff, daughter of Charles H. Frost, and Mrs. Fannie W. Hart, a sister, residing in San Francisco.

EXPERTS DIFFER. The condemnation suit of the city of Los Angeles against Emil Firth and Henry Lopizich for a thirty-foot strip on Oxford Square between Delaware and Algoma streets, for a sewer, brought out in the hearing before Judge Hewitt yesterday a discrepancy in values. The defendants asked a total value of $10,342.45 for the land taken, extending two blocks in length, while the city said the property was not worth more than $2000. The court took the matter under submission.

BATTLE TO COME. The $40,000 alienation of affections suit of Mrs. Josephine J. Cox against Mrs. Madaline J. Merrill was set for trial November 29, before Judge Myers yesterday. William H. Cox, whose affections are alleged to have been won, is a wealthy orange grower near Covina. Artful and persuasive conversations and embraces are asserted by Mrs. Cox to have been employed by Mrs. Merrill. This the latter specifically denies. The Coxes separated about September 1 last.

MUST FILE ANSWER. Jesse D. Burks, director of the municipal efficiency bureau, must file an answer in the $50,000 damage suit of Councilman Foster C. Wright, growing out of an accusation by Mr. Burks in the Council chamber of Mr. Wright's alleged connection with a crooked deal. The suit had its initial battle before Judge Jackson yesterday on a demurrer to the complaint, which the court overruled. Ten days is allowed to file an answer to the charge.

BRITISH RED CROSS.

The Lord Roberts chapter of the Daughters of the British Empire will hold a cabaret dancing card-party on Wednesday evening next at the Hotel Westmore, No. 1000 West Seventh street, when an entertaining programme of amusement and diversion has been arranged. Miss Mabel Cushman will sing, accompanied by Mrs. Clara Barton, and Ernest White will give some recitations. Tickets are to be had at British Red Cross headquarters at 933 South Broadway or of the president of the chapter, Miss Mary D. Walters. The affair is to secure funds for the Red Cross materials which the chapter converts into requirements for the wounded.

CRIB WALL IN ARROYO SECO MUST BE UNDERPINNED.

Board of Public Works Issues Instructions that Los Angeles Rock and Gravel Company Should Immediately Proceed with Task According to Contract.

City Engineer Hamlin yesterday reported to the Board of Public Works that excavations being made in the Arroyo Seco by the Los Angeles Rock and Gravel Company are endangering the safety of the crib wall in the Arroyo Seco between Avenues 36 and 45.

The board passed a resolution ordering the company immediately to proceed with the work of underpinning the wall in a manner satisfactory to the Engineer, according to the terms of its contract with the city.

Commissioner O'Brien said the company has got down to a depth in the middle of the channel which permits the sand to get away from the wall. The company agreed some time ago that it would underpin the wall to such a depth as the City Engineer considers safe.

EFFICIENCY CHANGE. NEW ORDINANCE PASSED.

The ordinance providing for the remodeling of the Efficiency Commision and the retention of the present employees was passed by the Council yesterday. Seven members were present and all voted for it, including Councilman Conwell. The absentees were Councilwoman Lindsey and Councilman Wheeler.

Mayor Woodman signed the ordinance within a few hours of its passage and says he has half a dozen names under consideration for positions on the board. The commission is to be composed of the Mayor and two citizens, neither of whom will be Councilmen. The Mayor says he hopes to get two of the biggest business men in the city to accept the positions.

Married at City Hall.

The first mariage ceremony performed at the City Hall since Mayor Woodman was appointed to office took place yesterday morning in the anteroom to the Mayor's office when the Mayor's secretary, Rev. Glen MacWilliams, united William A. Kirkbride of Seal Beach, aged 25 years, to Irene Edson of Long Beach, aged 18 years. The couple will reside in San Bernardino. The bride's first gift was the pastor's fee of $5 which Rev. MacWilliams handed to her after receiving it from the groom. This makes $135 which the Mayor's secretary has returned in this way since his appointment.

Their Only Salvation.

"Their only salvation in the lower end of the city is a storm sewer and they have voted it down every time," was the comment of Commissioner McAleer yesterday when the Board of Public Works was asked by John H. Meybohm, a property owner on Mettler street, near Slauson avenue, for relief from storm water conditions. Mr. Meybohm's complaint was sent to the City Engineer.

City Hall Notes.

Bids will be received by City Clerk Wilde up to November 1 for a pipe line franchise in the Wilmington district.

The ordinance approving the order of the Harbor Commission granting the North America Tuna Canning Company a permit to construct a fish cannery at the harbor was referred by the Council to its Harbor Commission yesterday.

The Council adopted a resolution authorizing the condemnation of permanent easements and rights of way in the San Fernando Valley and Ivanhoe for power transmission line construction.

WASTE-PAPER DAY.

Schools will Aid the Tuberculosis Society by Collecting Magazines and Newspapers, which are Sold. Money Realized to Help Preventorium.

Next Tuesday will be "waste paper day" No. 2 in more than twenty of the public schools of the city for the benefit of the Los Angeles Society for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. The schools, where paper will be collected, are in the district north of Sixty-second street, east of Normandie avenue, south of Pico street and west of Main street. This district includes Polytechnic and Manual Arts high schools.

Each pupil is requested to carry a few newspapers or magazines to the school, where this material is collected by automobile trucks and sold by the Board of Education to the Economy Paper Company at the rate of $10 per ton. All money realized in this way is turned into the treasury of the tuberculosis society to be used in building a preventorium for the poor children of the city.

The amount realized through the paper collection last week was $54.12. There was over five tons of paper collected in eleven schools at that time.

ANOTHER "LEGIT" THEATER.

Big World's Fair Show to Open Soon at Majestic.

Still another "legitimate" theater is scheduled to add brilliance to the local show world. Arrangements were completed yesterday morning by Oliver Morosco as a result of which Sid Grauman, well-known theatrical manager, producer and playwright, obtains a lease on the Majestic Theater to stage his spectacular productions, it is announced. These have been the vogue in San Francisco and other Coast cities for several seasons.

Mr. Grauman will open the Majestic Theater with his own production, "A Night at the World's Fair," which recently played to packed houses in San Francisco for 103 performances. The company that will arrive here from San Francisco next Saturday is composed of sixty people, and there are two carloads of scenery. The show will open Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Grauman's intention, it is said, is to present to Los Angeles theatergoers a series of beautiful new acts and musical playlets that will be a departure from all others.

Calipatrian Tells Prospects of Glowing Future.

The new branch railroad, to be built from Calipatria to Westmoreland in the Imperial Valley, is now an assured fact and material is daily arriving in carload lots and men and machinery are being assembled to push construction work as soon as possible, according to Carl F. Shader of Calipatria.

Concerning the probable effect of this new railroad on the development of this portion of the valley Mr. Shader said: "The building of this line and its companion branch to the East will have a profound influence on the present conditions, which are excellent, and the future development of this singularly rich region.

"There are fully 100,000 acres of the most productive land in the State tributary to Calipatria, and these branch railroads will have the most beneficial effect on this area. The coming of transportation means increased production, because that is the factor that has served to deter owners of great ranches, situated at a distance from railroad facilities, from putting their land in crop.

"Calipatria is at present enjoying one of the most substantial periods of growth in its history. This growth is due to the fact that its ambition to be the 'long-staple cotton center' of the United States is about to be realized. With the purchase by the Balfour-Guthrie Company of San Francisco of 10,000 acres to be planted to long-staple cotton, in conjunction with Coates and Williamson, also of San Francisco, the possibilities of long-staple cotton development became evident to the ranchers of this section.

RUSH FOR LAND.

"The result of this discovery is that practically every available acre has been cropped to cotton, and leasers, who some months before refused to consider this section, are now scouring the region in search of land to lease or buy. As high as $20 per acre has recently been paid for a lease on land in the district.

"With short-staple cotton selling at 15½ cents per pound and long staple bringing from 20 to 22½ cents and the ground producing a bale or better to the acre, we can see nothing but prosperity of the most substantial kind. It is safe to say there will be at least 50,000 acres in cotton by the end of 1918, which will mean a crop return of at least $500,000 from this article alone.

"Cotton, however, is only one of the resources of the district tributary to Calipatria. There are now being grown, fatted and fed, on the ranches adjacent to this town, 50,000 head of cattle, 50,000 sheep, 40,000 hogs and 65,000 turkeys, besides countless thousands of chickens, ducks and other domestic fowls that have a high market value.

"In addition to the vast wealth represented by the cotton crops, the cattle, sheep, hogs and other live stock, cantaloupes are here produced of high quality and in such abundance that this industry alone represents a huge figure. Of alfalfa it is impossible at this time to give figures that will approximate the value. Then the thousands of head of cattle and sheep that are yearly being driven in for winter pasturage are turning this forage crop into gold. Thousands of acres are yearly being set to alfalfa and before many years this crop will run neck and neck with the other great industries of the region.

LITTLE CITY THRIVES.

"As to Calipatria itself, too much cannot be said of the wonderful prosperity that is everywhere evidenced. New buildings are springing up over night, so to speak, but they are structures of importance. Lots in the business district are rapidly changing hands and handsome profits are being realized by those who are content to take a good price and let the other fellow make something.

"Business is excellent. Stocks are being increased as rapidly as the credit of a new and growing community will permit. The stores are all making improvements, modern fronts and fixtures are being put in and the new buildings reflect the very latest in retail structural store design. Stores are snapped up as fast as built, the mere rumor of a new structure bringing a flock of tenants for the proposed rooms.

"Real estate men report demand for property far in excess of available offerings. One broker reporting the sale of twenty-two lots within six weeks. The demand for ranch property for lease and purchase is so heavy that operators and brokers are at their wits' ends to take care of their clients."

He declares all this is not a bubble flurry that comes once in the history of every town, but a steady demand by substantial buyers who have the money and are willing to exchange it for what they are convinced has real value at present and unlimited future possibilities.

PUT OVER AGAIN.

Hearing of Harlow, Disabled, is Postponed for Two Weeks.

After two physicians had testified that any walking would result in a permanent stiff knee, Fred Harlow was given another two weeks to recover sufficiently to appear in Justice Court for a preliminary hearing on the charge of assaulting T. M. Miller, a private detective, with a deadly weapon.

The two men had an altercation in a Broadway saloon about two weeks ago. Drs. Robert G. Russell and George D. Costigan were in court and explained the nature of the injury suffered by Harlow to Justice Hanby, who came to a conclusion that two weeks should be sufficient to permit of his getting around.

TO SAN FRANCISCO.

United States Commissioner Hammack will make an official business trip to San Francisco this week. During his absence should occasion arise for the presence of a United States Commissioner, a justice of the peace will officiate under the law.

URGE SURVEY FOR HARBOR AND BASE.

VENICE PEOPLE CONFER WITH ARMY ENGINEER.

Tell Maj. Pillsbury of Advantages Nature Offers at Playa del Rey Basin, Declaring Cost of Development Would be Low and Results Good.

Maj. G. B. Pillsbury, Corps of Engineers, U.S.A., conducted a formal hearing yesterday morning on the application of the Venice Chamber of Commerce for a survey for an inner harbor at the Playa del Rey inlet. The hearing was required by law, for the purpose of obtaining such information as possible as to the feasibility of the plan. It was held in the Central Grammar School, Venice, and was attended by representatives of various cities of Santa Monica Bay.

Acting solely as questioner and listener, Maj. Pillsbury had a stenographic record made of the proceedings. He announced later that in about ten days he will make a report to the Board of Engineers, War Department, as to the advisibility of making the survey for the harbor. The decision of the board will probably be made in three months.

Abbot Kinney, on the part of the Venice Chamber of Commerce, presented two reports, one written by himself and one by his engineer, J. B. Griffin. The first gives the history of various harbor plans attempted on Santa Monica Bay and the reasons for asking for a survey for such a harbor. Mr. Kinney, said that "the weak point of the entire Santa Monica bay front is the frequent large wave motion. This often causes inconvenience in loading and unloading ships and in laying ships alongside wharves.

Because of this, he said, an inner, protected harbor is needed; and he added that it could be constructed at a moderate cost because of the close railroad communication with Los Angeles and Santa Monica.

Mr. Griffin gave information relative to Port Ballona (Playa del Rey inlet.) He said the outlet of the harbor is natural, with a drainage area of about 134 square miles, while the area of the tidelands adjoining is about 300 acres, with other lowlands, not covered by water, of about two square miles. He said the location has many advantages for a naval base, and that the entrance would be ample to protect against southeast storms. He declared the cost of dredging for a turning basin, lateral channels and slips would be comparatively small, owing to the low elevation of the land above sea level. He gave the depth of the water in front of the entrance as thirty feet one-quarter mile out and forty-two feet one-half mile out, from mean high tide line. He suggested the building of stone groins to the thirty-foot depth, allowing for a channel 800 feet wide.

ASSAILS EXAMINERS.

Doctors Whose Licenses Were Taken Away by State Board Join Move to Test Validity of Law Under Which Official Body is Acting.

Two physicians who have had their licenses revoked by the State Board of Medical Examiners filed applications yesterday for writs of review of the board's action and others, it is said, will join in what is regarded as an attack on the constitutionality of the law under which the board acts. The applications of yesterday were filed by Dr. R. S. Lanterman and Dr. John K. Suckow. The physicians are charged with having performed illegal operations, the former on Elizabeth Johnson and the latter on Mrs. G. A. Schweiger.

Presiding Judge Houser granted the applications and set the hearings for Department Sixteen on the 26th inst. It is charged that the State board failed to properly conduct the hearings and refused to throw out evidence which had been properly objected to by the attorneys representing the accused.

An attempt will be made to show that the State board acted arbitrarily and exceeded its authority in many instances. It will be contended that the State board is operating under a law which permits a property right to be taken away without giving the defendants the safeguards guaranteed by the constitution. Further, that the law confers on the board judicial powers without authority from the constitution.

COUNT FIFTY! NO NEURALGIA PAIN

Don't suffer! Instant relief follows a rubbing with "St. Jacob's Oil."

Conquers pain—never fails.

Rub soothing, penetrating "St. Jacobs Oil" right on the ache or pain, and out comes the neuralgia misery.

Here's a joyful experiment! Try it! Get a small trial bottle from your druggist; pour a little in your hand and rub it gently on the sore, aching nerves, and before you realize it—in just a moment—all pain and neuralgia disappear. It's almost magical, but the joy is, that the misery doesn't come back. No! The nerves are soothed and congestion is relieved and your neuralgia is overcome.

Stop suffering! It's needless—neuralgia and pain of all kinds, either in the face, head, limbs or any part of the body, is instantly banished. "St. Jacob's Oil" is perfectly harmless and doesn't burn or discolor the skin. In use for half a century.

I CURE PILES FISTULA
and all Rectal Diseases
WITHOUT AN OPERATION

For twenty-five years I have been curing diseases of the rectum and lower bowel. During that time my experience as hospital and railroad surgeon, as college lecturer and professor, has enabled me to develop a method that is superior to others. I cure without surgery and my patients are not confined in bed and seldom lose a moment's time from their business.

My method is not a "home cure" or a "correspondence treatment," but it is an application of skilled treatments administered under the most rigid antiseptic conditions in my office.

I solicit old, severe and obstinate cases of fistula, prolapsus, fissure and ulceration that have heretofore resisted all treatments employed. If you are a sufferer from rectal trouble I invite you to investigate my method thoroughly by talking or writing to any of my cured patients. If you will call at my office I will be pleased to give you the names and addresses of many well-known Los Angeles people I have cured, whom you may interview in regard to my treatment.

Read what a few well-known Southern California people have to say of my method. Many similar letters are on file in my office.

WELL KNOWN SANTA MONICA MINISTER CURED.

This is to certify that Dr. C. H. White has cured me of a distressing hemorrhoidal ailment of 25 years' duration. His method of treatment is effective, but not severe. He has the appliances, the knowledge and the skill born of many years of specialization in this fruitful source of physical disease. He accomplishes all his claims in his advertising, and at reasonable expense.

I take pleasure in heartily commending the man and his methods.

WESLEY K. BEANS, Pastor First Methodist Episcopal Church, Santa Monica, Cal.

HEAD OF WELL KNOWN PRINTING HOUSE CURED.

Esteemed Doctor: I cannot refrain from congratulating you and myself on a complete cure of Hemorrhoids, with which I have been afflicted for more than twenty years, and for the past year have been practically incapacitated from attending to business. The treatment is such that no one need fear, no knife or operation being employed, and the result being certain and positive. I will be pleased to have you refer any one to me and I will never be too busy to answer any inquiry.

hold for long. Showing a surprising ability to rally quickly from the effects of the enemy's charge, the French wave recoiled and swept the Germans completely out of the positions they had gained a foothold in.

The situation in this region was left virtually as it was when the big push last week eliminated the dangerous salient that protruded into the French lines near Vermandovillers. Foch has so strengthened his lines that another week at the most should see the advance of his troops into Chaulnes itself. By taking this strongly fortified town the French will have surmounted their greatest obstacle to their forward movement in the whole region south of Peronne and will have prepared the way for the seizure of the latter stronghold.

The French again attempted to swing their lines through Sailly-Saillisel and into the sector south of Transloy, but in hand-to-hand fighting of the most desperate character they were driven back to their starting points. By their furious resistance in this region the Germans have given notice that they intend to defend the Bethune road to the limit of their resources. That a break in their lines at this point would doom Bapaume is fully appreciated by the German commanders, Von Boehm and Von Garnier, and they are concentrating all their efforts on stemming the allied advance at the boundaries it has now reached.

The Germans confront the French and British along the Bethune road from powerfully fortified intrenchments, which it may take weeks to pierce. But the allies are in possession of all the dominating heights and have perfected their system of communications so that it appears to be only a matter of time before the Germans will be swept back and probably beyond. The activities of the British forces today were limited to raids and reconnaissances on the Somme and distant fronts. German trenches in the neighborhood of the Ypres and Hulloch were penetrated by Anzacs, who inflicted damage on the enemy's works and returned with prisoners.

For the first time in several days no aerial activity was reported on the western fronts, fogs and low-lying clouds precluding reconnaissances on any large scale. For this same reason there was a notable diminution in the fire of the larger artillery due to low visibility.

AMERICANS LEAVE IN FEAR OF RIOS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

DOUGLAS (Ariz.) Oct. 14.—Several Americans living in Cananea have sent their families to Arizona because, it is said, of growing unrest there and the reported gain in strength of Margarito Rios, whose recent election as Mayor of Cananea was set aside by an official proclamation of Adolfo de la Huerta, Governor of Sonora.

Rios left Cananea at the head of 125 armed sympathizers, going to the Ajo Mountains, twenty miles east. He is reported to have been reinforced by deserters from the Carranza army in Sonora, as well as armed civilians. Much uneasiness is also felt in Agua Prieta.

WILLIS H. BOOTH COMMENTS ON THE SITUATION.

Contends that the Work of the Future is not the Acquiring of Settlers, but of Taking Care of the People Who Make this Section Their Home.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

ONTARIO, Oct. 14.—More than 120 business men were present at Hotel Casa Blanca last evening to attend a dinner in honor of the first anniversary of the Ontario Business Men's Association and to greet Willis H. Booth of Los Angeles and Ontario, especial guest of honor and principal speaker of the evening.

At the request of Toastmaster Charles L. Tuttle, H. E. Swan, prominent Ontario banker, introduced the speaker of the evening and when he referred to Mr. Booth as the man whom "one day we will elect United States Senator," the banquet room resounded with a hearty applause which lasted close to five minutes.

Mr. Booth declared Southern California to be the playground of the world and Ontario the center of that playground. The speaker stated that he had traveled pretty much all over the world and had viewed many far-famed avenues, but none, he said, to compare in beauty with Ontario's Euclid avenue.

"Our problem is not how to attract people to Southern California," said Mr. Booth, in part, "but how to take care of them when they do come, for come they surely will.

"Show me a community without a Chamber of Commerce," said the speaker, "and I will show you a dead community. Growth and progress in a city are possible only through concerted community effort and a live commercial organization makes this possible."

Mr. Booth, who was formerly president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, told of some of the accomplishments of that body and urged those present on to greater effort in the interests of Ontario.

COTTON GIN WAR ON WITH PLANTERS.

EL CENTRO, Oct. 14.—Threats of establishing independent cotton gins in El Centro, Imperial and possibly other Imperial Valley towns, owing to increased ginning charges and lowered prices paid for cottonseed, have served to start a price war that may extend throughout the cotton season.

Cotton planters were notified that the charge for ginning had been raised by the valley gins from 60 cents a hundred pounds to $1.60 a hundred, an increase of $5 a bale. At the same time they were told that the market price for cottonseed was to be $30 a ton. At the beginning of the cotton-picking season in September, the valley oil mills offered $20 a ton for cottonseed. J. J. Reynolds, representing a Cisco (Tex.) oil mill, appeared in the valley and offered $25 a ton for seed. The local mills then raised the price to $30. Recently Reynolds bought a large supply of seed for Texas shipment at $35. The prevailing price in Texas and Gulf Coast cotton centers is reported to be from $40 to $50 a ton.

The oil mills in the Imperial Valley informed the planters when the ginning charge was fixed that they could have their cotton ginned at the old price if they agreed to sell their seed to the mills for $30 a ton. Several of the larger planters in the vicinity of El Centro and Imperial refused to accept the terms made by the oil mills and organized an independent gin company. In preparation for the opening of the new gins, the planters interested have [illegible] their cotton and stored it at their homes until it could be ginned by the new company.

A conference is planned for between the independent planters and representatives of the oil mills when a compromise is to be discussed, reducing the ginning charges and raising the price paid for cottonseed. There was no indication today that an amicable arrangement would be reached.

DAILY SAILINGS ON SOUTH COAST

San Francisco and Los Angeles Get New Service.

Pacific Steamship Company has Ambitious Plans.

New Schedule Soon to be Issued for Innovation.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LOS ANGELES HARBOR, Oct. 14.—A definite schedule of daily sailings, under the new management of the Pacific Steamship Company, between San Francisco and Los Angeles, it is stated, will be given out within a few days.

The main question considered is the location of wharves and ticket officers, the wharf matter here not yet having been settled. The Yale and Harvard have always docked on the East San Pedro side, while the Pacific Coast Steamship Company's boats dock on the San Pedro side. The two companies only recently were consolidated.

A general rearrangement is under consideration and R. J. Ringwood, vice-president of the new company, will arrive here early next week to make the final adjustment.

The personnel of the traffic department of the company, so far as the higher offices are concerned, is now named. R. J. Ringwood as vice-president will be at the head of the traffic department, with headquarters in San Francisco. C. D. Dunann will be passenger traffic manager; E. G. McMicklen, general passenger agent; J. E. Wilson, assistant general passenger agent.

In the freight department, H. C. Cantelow will be freight traffic manager, with headquarters in San Francisco; C. E. Flye, general freight agent in Seattle; M. F. Cropley, assistant general freight agent in San Francisco.

Los Angeles headquarters for the Pacific Steamship Company will be located in the former Pacific Coast Steamship Company's offices, 624 South Spring street. A. S. Jones will act as general agent, R. F. Cullen, city ticket agent; William Parris, district freight agent; E. J. Edwards, assistant freight agent.

The commissary department will be in charge of A. R. Gardner, with headquarters in San Francisco. Phillip Ottesen will be port steward in Seattle and F. J. Leonard, formerly with the old Pacific Mail, port steward in San Francisco.

Executive offices of the company will be on the second floor of the Santa Marina Building, No. 112 Market street, San Francisco, and the commissary and operating departments will be divided between the offices at Pier 24 and the present operating offices of the Pacific Coast company at piers 16, 18 and 20.

No decision has yet been made as to the use of the four piers in San Francisco. It is probable that the Yale and Harvard will continue to dock at Pier 24.

STRANGE ACTS OF STUDENTS.

They Rush into Whittier in the Night and Pull off Very Strange Stunts.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WHITTIER, Oct. 14.—This town was thrown into a curious state of wonderment early this evening, when two automobiles, loaded down with young men, one of whom was wearing a plug of ancient vintage, drove into the heart of the business district and stopped. Two of the party seemed to be prisoners. They were ordered to race to the lamp post for half a block. They were then given a pie apiece and a pint of milk and told "to get away with it." The winner evidently was to be rewarded but for what no one knows.

When the performance in the middle of the street was finished the two candidates were blindfolded and pushed into the automobiles and then the others piled in. The hilarious students were last seen through a cloud of dust, every mother's son of them smoking and puffing away at an Egyptian cigarette.

They refused to tell from whence they came but the numbers on the machines were 27076 which is accredited to E. D. Blinn of Pasadena and 46437 credited to James C. Plat of Pasadena. It is believed that the boys belonged to the Pasadena High School.

BABIES SENT TO JUVENILE HOME.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

AZUSA, Oct. 14.—Four little brown babies, ranging from 6 months to 5 years of age, must find their mamma among the matrons of the County Juvenile Home, while their own mother, Mrs. Frank Martinez, serves a sentence in jail.

For several years the authorities of this section have been in a quandary how to stop the bootlegging activities of Mrs. Martinez. With her husband she has been peddling liquor from a half dozen different places.

When Martinez was sentenced to the county chain gang last month Justice Bouldin had a charge placed against the woman. Yesterday he sentenced her to jail and consigned the babies to the Juvenile Home.

AUTO THIEVES TO GET NO LENIENCY.

COURT MAKES POSITION PLAIN IN SENTENCING LAD.

Sends Youth to Reform School and Delivers Lecture, Pointing Out that Stealing a Car is More Reprehensible than Ordinary Burglary, Because Easier.

Judge Willis yesterday announced there will be no letup in the severity of sentences in cases involving the theft of automobiles. This announcement came after a lengthy plea for probation for Leonard Graham, a lad 19 years of age, who received a sentence of two years in the Ione reformatory for the theft of a car belonging to Mrs. R. A. Darling of Long Beach.

The court declared that persons cannot put their motor cars in storage vaults or safety deposit boxes but must allow them to stand on the streets at times so theft of a car is a much easier crime and therefore a more severely punishable crime than ordinary burglary.

If Graham fails to make good at the reform school he may have to serve an additional penitentiary sentence. The court ordered him back as soon as he reaches his majority, for final disposition.

SAME OLD BUNCO.

Corona Man Reports Bewhiskered Swindle Got His Money.

Sam Agnoston of Corona yesterday afternoon asked the local police department to aid him in his search for two alleged bunco operators who, posing as business men, took from him $1000 of his savings. According to his story the old "switch roll" game was used in Central Park, the bunco men posing as business men wishing to give the Corona farmer a chance to make money in a big deal.

The culprits are described as young, well-dressed Italians. One was called "Lodie." Detectives Winn and Boyd are searching for them.

Instant Hair Stain Better Than Slow "Restorers"

Some folks would have you believe that they have discovered some marvelous combination that will "restore" the color to gray, streaked or faded hair, without staining it. No such preparation has ever been discovered.

There is only one preparation so far as we know that is entirely free from sulphur, lead, silver, mercury, zinc, aniline, coal tar products or their derivatives. That preparation is called "Brownatone." It is so easy and safe to apply that the wonder is that anyone ever uses anything else.

"Brownatone" instantly tints the hair to any shade of brown (or black) that may be desired. If the gray shows on your temples or is streaking your hair—if the ends of your hair are lighter than the balance, or if for any reason you wish to stain all or part of your hair—use "Brownatone."

A sample and a booklet will be sent you (from manufacturers only) upon receipt of 10c. Mention shade desired.

All of the leading drug stores sell "Brownatone." Two sizes, 25c and $1.00. Insist on "Brownatone" at your hairdresser's.

Prepared by The Kenton Pharmacal Co., 583 E. Pike St., Covington, Ky.

Sold and guaranteed in Los Angeles by The Owl Drug Co., 21 stores on the Pacific Coast, and other leading dealers.

Outrage.

PILFER HIS TEETH.

Three Chloroformers also Steal a Miner's Cash and Jewelry but He Forgets All That in Mourning for Lost Grinders.

Using a cloth saturated with chloroform, three young men early yesterday morning overpowered Adam Blitzer, a miner of San Bernardino county, and robbed him of $100 in cash, some jewelry and a new set of false teeth. If it had not been for the loss of the false teeth it is doubtful if Mr. Blitzer would have bothered about reporting the matter to the police, as he described the hold-up as partially due to his own carelessness. But the taking of the teeth, recently acquired, made him so angry he told his story early yesterday morning to Detectives James and Greeley and demanded the three strangers be arrested.

According to the miner, he was celebrating the acquisition of the new teeth by enjoying a fine dinner at a downtown cafe. Three affable young men introduced themselves, and as he was lonely, he made friends. Later the trio and Mr. Blitzer left in a taxicab. It was during this ride the chloroform was applied. Mr. Blitzer awoke hours later, on the grass in Eastlake Park, sans money, jewelry and teeth.

Notice to Owners of Paintings of Doubtful Authenticity

THIS WEEK Professor Alfred Chatain will be in Los Angeles with headquarters at the Blanchard Art Galleries (W. P. Barry & Co.) Professor Chatain is one of the world's greatest experts on paintings, and his written opinion over his seal and signature will give your picture, if it is an original, a specific value that your unsupported statement of what you think it is, could never give it. He is known to every museum and gallery in the western world and is retained by most of them to fix the authorship of works they are in doubt about. His terms for experting can be learned from W. P. Why Society Women Wash Their Own Hair.

Few realize how many society women now wash their own hair, not because it is a fad, but because they wish to obtain the greatest possible hair beauty and be sure they are not using anything harmful. The thousands who have found that in washing the hair it is never wise to use a makeshift but is always advisable to use a preparation made for shampooing only, say they get the best results from a simple home-made canthrox mixture. You can enjoy this, the best that is known, for about three cents a shampoo by getting some canthrox from your druggist, and dissolving a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water. Your shampoo is now ready. After its use the hair dries rapidly with uniform color. Dandruff, excess oil and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear. Your hair will be so fluffy that it will look much heavier than it is. Its lustre and softness will also delight you, while the stimulated scalp gains the health which insures hair growth.

MRS. MASSON,

the noted palmist, of London, England, may be consulted at 322 SOUTH SPRING STREET, by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND READINGS, FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn in his investigations along psychological lines that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HIMSELF HAS WRITTEN THAT information.

PALMISTRY HONESTLY PRACTICED WILL NOT tell your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in everyday life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill luck into wide paths of success and prosperity, can all be told you through scientific palmistry, WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

The BELMONT Apts. The BELCAMP Apts.
Figueroa at 10th st. 2407 W. Ninth st.

Several elements enter into the making of one's happiness and content, and one of the most important is one's home and surroundings. That's why we try to make each of our houses, to each of our guests, in every sense of the word,

"the place like home."

For, we reason, if we succeed in making our apartments "homelike" we have gone a long way towards making our guests happy and contented. And in making our guests happy and contented we create a successful business. A selfish reason, perhaps, but the end is good. Be that as it may, however, it's the reason behind our unceasing efforts to satisfy the individual needs and desires of our several guests. "Not how little, but how much we can give our guests," is our motto.

If this appeals to YOU, would it not be worth your time and trouble to call and learn just what we can do for you?

THE QUESTION NINE PEOPLE OUT OF TEN ASK the first time they come in is this:

"Are these USED cars?"

You'll very likely ask it in spite of yourself when YOU come in.

They don't look like used cars, they look like new cars.

Furthermore, with all due respect to some eastern factory paint jobs, we have used cars on our floor that look BETTER than the day they reached Los Angeles.

Furthermore, our shops take care that the mechanical part of the car, the things you can't see, but have to take on faith, are IN AS GOOD SHAPE AS THE EXTERIOR OF THE CAR.

We have no "used car problem."

Our methods have solved it.

Our sales prove it.

We sold forty used cars during September.

No great advertising campaign—just a normal month's business.

We'll sell more this month.

Come in and look over our stock—over 75 cars on hand—and judge for yourself if we haven't the right idea in handling used cars.

WILLYS OVERLAND OF CALIFORNIA—

AUTOMOBILES.

Mr. Used Car Buyer— Los Angeles,
Dear Sir: July 23, 1916.
In buying an automobile that has been driven by some one else, you surely realize you are taking a chance and the cheaper you buy a car (in most cases) the greater risk you are taking.
Just consider this information carefully.
Sometimes it costs dearly to take a chance, especially if you are not well posted on automobile values, mechanical condition, cost of overhauling and repairing.

In buying a used car from the Willys-Overland of California you pay just what we allow for it. The overhauling cost is a loss to our used car department. The loss of course is made up on our new car sales, so we put a car into condition that is absolutely right and are willing to back it up by a guarantee from the largest automobile manufacturers of light cars in the world.

1916 Overland, 7 passenger, ready to be painted. We will put on any color selected, this car is in perfect shape. Total cost $850.

1916 Overland, 5 passenger, model 83T, with seat covers and white wire wheels, looks as good as new. Total cost $650.

1917 Overland, 5 passenger, model 75, run 4000, a very attractive propular little car. Total cost $500.

1915 Overland, "The Famous Model 80." 5 passenger, a real touring car, that will take you anywhere in comfort and safety. Overhauled, painted and guaranteed. Total cost $600.

1915 Overland, model 81, 30 horse-power. The only Overland built that speed was ever claimed for.

1914 Overland 5 passenger with special cowl dash, that's a swell outfit at $400.

In addition to these few advertised, we have any other model of Overland desired.

SPECIAL BARGAINS.

1914 Maxwell, 5-passenger, some bargain at $150.

A Little Flanders touring that is about as cheap to run as you can find, at $150.

1915 Buick touring, model 37, in fine shape, just as it was taken from the owner, at $600.

This car should be the best value in today's paper, as it could not possibly be in better condition were we to ask $100 more, which would be a fair value for such a car. Our business is the sale of new cars and we sell only those used cars taken in trade because we are forced to take a certain percentage of trades. These used cars are sold with the Chandler guarantee and Chandler reputation behind them only after we know positively that these cars are in condition to merit it. If they are not we either sell them to speculators in used cars or put them in good condition. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m. Address 1136 S. OLIVE. Phones: 60895, Main 3459.

FOR SALE—CHANDLER, 5-PASSENGER TOURING car at $800; terms. This is the popular 1915 model, and is in excellent condition. The former owner traded this car in on a four-passenger Chandler roadster and we are selling it below the allowance price, thereby sharing part of our profit in the new car sale with you. You will find that it pays to purchase a used car from such a company as ours. We do not have to make a profit on these used cars, but we do have to maintain our reputation, and, therefore, we see that every used car sold is in first-class condition, or if we cannot do this, we can afford to sell it to the junk man. There are no junk cars for sale to the public at this place. Every car sold is fully guaranteed under the same conditions as if you purchased a new car, and we extend 90 days' service in addition. Read all of our advertisements in today's papers. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m. All cars sold on reasonable terms. Address 1136 S. OLIVE ST. Phones: 60895, Main 3459.

MINING—

COPPER IS KING OF THEM ALL FOR PAYING LARGE DIVIDENDS.

That's why Arizona-Tonopah Mining and Milling Co. is a good buy. This mine has stood the most rigid examination by mining engineers from all over the world and this stock has advanced in nine months from 5½c a share to 45c a share. We know that it is going into the dollars per share SOON. This is worthy of your investigation. Remember, I advised my clients 2 years ago when stock could be bought in both Inspiration and Miami at 10c and 25c a share. Inspiration today is selling at $69 per share and paying $11 per share dividends, with an extra dividend. Miami is quoted at $41 per share, with similar dividends. Arizona-Tonopah will rise in price the same way—that's why I advise buying this stock now.

SUES ALBUQUERQUE PAPER FOR LIBEL.

HOTTEST POLITICS IN NEW MEXICO FOR YEARS.

Holm O. Bursum, the Republican Candidate for Governor, Claims Charges are Unjust—Despite the Fight Supporters Say He will Win Election.

According to advices received here yesterday, a $50,000 damage suit against Daniel G. Grant of No. 437 Commonwealth avenue, this city, was filed at Albuquerque Friday because of alleged libel by Holm O. Bursum, Republican candidate for Governor of New Mexico.

Mr. Grant, who is associate secretary of the Grant Construction Company, with offices in the Grant Building, is the principal owner of the Albuquerque Morning Journal, the leading newspaper of New Mexico. Mr. Bursum charges that the Journal libeled him, and he names Mr. Grant and D. A. MacPherson, who manages the paper, defendants, with the publishing corporation proper.

The libel suit is alleged to be the latest development in the hottest political campaign in New Mexico for years. Mr. Bursum claims that Mr. Grant's newspaper charges him with wrongfully using State funds and with destroying public records, when he (Bursum) was warden of the penitentiary in Territorial days. Mr. Bursum further states that Mr. Grant knows the court vindicated him of the charges and ordered the State to pay the sum of $4333.

Mr. Grant could not be reached up to a late hour last night. The Republicans of New Mexico say that, despite the bitter fight against him, Mr. Bursum will carry the State, and that the State and national tickets will carry in New Mexico by a large majority.

PIER VICTIM DIES.

Never Recovering From Injuries Received in a Beach Disaster Two Years Ago, M. P. McDonald, a Wealthy Rancher Passes Away.

Another name was added to the list of victims of the Long Beach disaster of two years ago, when the pier fell on Empire Day, 1914, by the death yesterday of M. P. McDonald, 75 years old, a wealthy rancher of Compton. Mrs. M. P. McDonald was killed at the disaster and Mr. McDonald received injuries from which he never recovered.

Mr. McDonald was born in Nova Scotia, seventy-five years ago. He moved to the United States in 1876 and came to California shortly afterward. He was a resident of Compton for thirty-one years and took a prominent part in civic and church affairs. A member of the Methodist Church, it was his duty and pleasure to oversee the construction of the present edifice. He was a member of the school board and also held the position of road overseer.

Three children survive, a son and two married daughters. The funeral will be held at the Compton Methodist Church tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock, under the direction of Neel & Towne, undertakers.

HINSHAW'S RECORD MEETS APPROVAL.

SUPERVISOR CANDIDATES BEGIN ACTIVE CAMPAIGN.

Randall Sidesteps Challenge that is Issued by Bell—Independents are Meeting Encouragement and are Prepared for Warm Struggle. Farline Takes Stump for Wets.

Supervisor W. E. Hinshaw, who is a candidate for re-election, renewed his vigorous campaign yesterday when more than a score of field captains began a thorough canvass of the city and bay districts. On Friday night a large crowd of enthusiastic Hinshaw boosters attended a meeting in Blanchard Hall and made plans for assisting their favorite candidate.

Several of the prominent improvement associations of the district were represented at the meeting and they unanimously indorsed Mr. Hinshaw.

Jonathan S. Dodge, candidate in the Fifth District, reports encouragement from all sides. During the past week he was indorsed at a meeting at Palmdale which was held under the auspices of the Chambers of Commerce of the Antelope Valley.

Mark Jones, candidate for Supervisor in the Second District, has received the indorsement of practically all of the leading political organizations east of the river and he is conducting a hard campaign.

Randall Avoids Issue.

During the past week the campaign for Congress in the Ninth District has become unusually bitter. It is the result of a challenge issued by Charles W. Bell to Charles H. Randall, the incumbent, when he asked the latter to take the public rostrum for a discussion of their respective records in Congress. Mr. Randall answered that he would talk about some of the measures upon which he had voted but declined to take up all of the questions included in the challenge.

A committee comprised of three of the most prominent Republicans in the District, namely, Torrey Everett, A. C. Malone and Louis H. Whealton called upon Mr. Randall and made a report. "Mr. Randall refused to accept your challenge and refused to meet you in public debate to discuss his record in Congress," the report said.

It is the contention of Mr. Bell that his opponent is not a Republican and that he voted without exception with the Democrats upon all party measures. Mr. Bell takes the position that he always voted with the Republican party for protection of California industries and when Mr. Randall took the opposite said he dicorced himself from the Republican party.

Another angle of the campaign is the effort being made by Randall supporters to induce the executive committee of the Republican Central Committee to repudiate its indorsement of Mr. Bell. This action was taken by the committee upon the grounds that Mr. Randall has shown by his record in Congress that he is not a Republican.

Speaking for the "Wets."

Attorney McCallum Farline, who has made a study of the liquor problem in California is stumping the Southern part of the State in the interests of the "wets." He is making two or three speeches each evening. Next Tuesday evening he will talk at Blanchard Hall and on Friday to the Rotary Club.

Independents Encouraged.

Having received indorsements from all of the regular Republican organizations in their districts Fred Frank, candidate for the Assembly in the Sixty-fourth and A. A. Weber, candidate in the Sixty-ninth, declared yesterday they are much encouraged over the outlook. Mr. Frank is an orator of no mean ability and is speaking before clubs and other organizations every day. Mr. Weber is making a thorough campaign.

SERVE TWO COURSES.

City Prosecutor Suggests Meals with Liquor Shall Include Sandwich with Soup or Salad, but that Price be Left Out. Hard Problem.

After wrestling with the question of what shall constitute a meal with which liquor can be served, Warren Williams, City Prosecutor, has given an opinion to the Police Commission that it be a meat or cheese sandwich, together with soup or salad, but as to the price he suggests that be left out.

Mayor Woodman passed the problem up to the City Prosecutor recently after cafe men had asked for a change in the present regulations, which do not allow of the service of liquor with certain kinds of food even though the price be above 15 cents, which is the lowest limit at which a sandwich can be sold with liquor.

Prosecutor Williams says the serving of meals and not liquor is the primary object of a restaurant. He also remarks that it is legally impossible to prescribe what would be a bona fide meal within the meaning of the ordinance governing persons holding hotel and restaurant liquor permits.

Secretary of Labor Wilson Waxes Eloquent in Defense Speech Before Temple; Praising the Railroad Legislation, and Everything.

Addressing a medium-size audience at Labor Temple last night, William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, discussed the eight-hour-day legislation and stated that if the constitutionality of the law is attacked and the Supreme Court decides against it, "don't you folks worry, for the railroads are going to be compelled to grant it one way or another."

Mr. Wilson eulogized President Wilson for an hour and fifteen minutes as "the man who has maintained the honor, integrity and dignity of the United States at home and abroad." He cited the President's "firm stand in the recent railroad trouble" as an example, and commended him for refusing to surrender to the railroads.

HEADLONG TO PRISON.

Youth, Once Probationer, Fails to Remember Many Warnings and is Now on Way to Serve Term at San Quentin for Robbing Bus Man.

Repeated warnings for minor misdeeds failed to have any effect on Samuel Jenkins and today he is on his way to San Quentin to start a three-year term, meted out yesterday by Judge Willis.

He had bad companions from the days he was in the Polytechnic High School. Finally he was arrested on a charge of holding up V. E. Westerburg, a jitney-bus driver of No. 514 North Bunker Hill avenue and pleaded guilty several days ago. He was also charged with burglarizing the home of Mrs. J. D. Ross at No. 508 North Berendo street the evening of September 5, but this charge was dropped when he admitted he committed the other crime.

Members of the Jenkins family and a number of friends asked for another chance for the young man. The report of Probation Officer Dodds, however, developed the fact that he had been under arrest and given probation before.

ACTOR ASKS RELIEF IN CHILD SUPPORT.

UNABLE TO PAY FULL AMOUNT, GALBRAITH SAYS.

Leading Man, Who Returns to Local Stage Soon, Serves Summons on Former Wife Just as She is Planning Trip to Orient With the Daughter.

Declaring he had lost property valued at more than $20,000 in the past year and was not able to pay more than $25 a month for the support of his child, Joseph A. Galbraith, leading man at the Burbank Theater, who returns to the Los Angeles stage in the part of Prince Paul in "Heidelberg" soon, yesterday served a summons on his former wife, Mrs. Helen C. Galbraith, and the case will be heard on the 23rd inst.

Mr. Galbraith, who stated in court during the proceeding of a divorce action, brought by his wife, last October, that Mrs. Galbraith had given him $50,000 to leave the stage, was ordered to pay $50 a month toward the support of his 8-year-old child. Mr. Galbraith asks to be relieved of half of this amount.

"I pay $58 a month for the tuition of Allison Rose Galbraith, our child, and in addition must maintain her in clothing and incidental expenses," said Mrs. Galbraith at her apartment, No. 826 South Hope street, yesterday.

"My little girl's birthday is October 23, the same day her father returns to the stage after several years' absence. This summons comes just when I have planned a trip to the Orient, starting October 23. Now I shall have to postpone the trip to force my former husband to provide for the support of the child."

Mrs. Galbraith secured a divorce a year ago on a chargeof extreme cruelty. She alleged in her testimony that she had deeded her husband, $50,000 in property, shortly after her marriage, and later gave him $25,000 additional. Following the granting of the divorce, Mr. Galbraith was sued by his attorney, George E. Whitaker, for $5000, the fee being based on an agreement that the attorney was to receive 25 per cent. of the value of all the property standing in Galbraith's name that was saved to Galbraith in the divorce action.

Elderly, Retired, Wealthy Realty Dealer Found Dead with Bullet in Brain and Revolver at His Side—Suicide is Official Verdict.

Believed to have been overcome by private troubles, Allen D. Butt, 63 years old, wealthy retired real estate dealer, was found dead behind the garage at his residence, No. 1311 South St. Andrews place, yesterday afternoon, a bullet through his brain and a cheap "suicide gun" lying close by his nerveless hand. He had been dead for several hours when found by C. W. Winslow, the caretaker.

Information gathered by Detectives Boyd and Winn indicates Mr. Butt shot himself some time early yesterday morning, after passing a sleepless night. He was last heard from Friday evening when a neighbor called up by telephone and requested Mr. Butt to take dinner with him.

During the past few months Mr. Butt had been living alone at the beautiful St. Adrews place residence. Mrs. Butt and her daughter are in Omaha. They were informed by wire yesterday of the tragedy.

Coroner Hartwell ordered the body removed to the Bresee mortuary. A suicide certificate will be signed without investigation.

NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY CELEBRAT

STATE SOCIETIES PICNIC A SYCAMORE GROVE.

Veterans of G.A.R. Were Guests of Honor at Empire Gathering—Organizations Hear Addresses on Every Interesting Topic of the Present Day.

Notwithstanding the threatening clouds and past performances, things hummed at Sycamore Grove yesterday, for the New York State Society and the New Jersey Society of Southern California conducted picnics.

New Yorkers, 500 strong, gathered to celebrate nothing in particular and, as is the custom, enjoyed themselves immensely while doing so.

Mayor Woodman, who was to have addressed the New York people, was unable to appear, as city business was pressing. He wrote to R. D. Richards, president: "I have on this date a very important meeting with the power companies of the city, and my policy is that my personal engagements must always be subordinated to the city's business."

Veterans of the Civil War were guests of honor at the picnic and a special address for G.A.R. men was given by President Richards. The Veterans' Fife and Drum Corps provided music. Speakers were Dr. Lyman B. Sperry, Mrs. Eva Ross Garrison, Judge Fuller, President R. D. Richards, A. J. Halley and C. E. Parsons.

Former residents of the State, where, it is alleged, the best crop is mosquitoes also celebrated with a picnic yesterday. They listened to addresses, watched foot races, debated about politics, the Civil War, "wets" and "drys," and finally decided that the best picnic is a failure unless it has a liberal supply of basket lunches and a large amount of hot coffee. Robert Taylor presided.

Judge Tests Veracity of Two Men and Spectator is Picked Out by Court Attache—Failure to Appear Causes Fine of Contempt.

L. A. Adams of No. [illegible] Gramercy place was fined [illegible] for contempt of court yesterday by Justice Brown, as the result of his failure to appear on supplemental proceedings following a judgment ordered in favor of H. R. Long. Adams declared he had never received notice.

Nathan Katzer, a process server, had previously informed the court he had served Adams. The court in order to solve the question of veracity of the two men, placed Adams among the spectators of the courtroom and Katzer, who had not seen the man in court, was called from the outside and asked to locate the individual whom he had served present.

"You are the man I served at [illegible] o'clock last Monday morning," said Katzer as he tapped Adams on the shoulder. The court then affirmed the fine, offering the alternative of fifteen days in the County Jail. Adams asked for time to get his fine and was allowed to go on his recognizance until tomorrow morning.

FOR CHILD WELFARE.

Northern Visitors Lecture Before Charities and Corrections Board.

The third quarterly conference of the year for those interested in child welfare work in Southern California was held at the Home of the Guardian Angel, Concord and Washington streets, yesterday, under the auspices of the State Board of Charities and Corrections. The conference opened at 10:30 o'clock with a lecture by Katherine C. Felton, director of the Associated Charities of San Francisco, on "The Need of Specialization in Children's Institutes."

Luncheon was served in the institution, followed by an inspection of the home. The conference reopened about 2:30 o'clock. The feature of the afternoon session was an address by Dr. William Palmer Lucas, professor of pediatrics, University of California, on "Physical Care of the Child." Dr. Peixotto, chairman of the Children's Committee of the State Board of Charities and Corrections, presided over the conference.

DOUBT ABOUT TOPHAM.

Mayor Doesn't Know What He'll Do Anent Those Bonds.

"I do not know what my procedure will be in regard to the plumbing bonds question, but I will do what I think is right," was Mayor Woodman's answer yesterday to a question as to his intentions in the matter of the City Attorney's ruling that Councilman Topham has violated one clause of a section of the charter.

The Mayor has received a formal communication from the City Attorney on the subject, but it merely refers to his already announced ruling. The City Council has also asked for an opinion, and now that Councilman Topham has returned from Visalia, it will be furnished. The City Attorney said the opinion to the Council will be exactly the same as that furnished Mayor Woodman last Saturday week.

FOR HUGHES.

Leading Suffrage Advocate to Speak in His Interest.

Mrs. Inez Milholland Boissevain, one of the leading suffrage advocates in the United States, will speak at Blanchard Hall the 23rd inst., under the auspices of the National Woman's Party, advocating the support of Charles Evans Hughes for President.

Mrs. Boissevain is one of the forceful women orators in the country, and she will have a worth-while message for women.

BICYCLE BREAKS HIP.

J. A. Opp, 60 years of age, living at the Green Hotel, Sixth and Main streets, was painfully injured last night when he was run down at Sixth and Main streets by a bicycle ridden by Adolf Bloom, a messenger boy. The injured man was taken to the Receiving Hospital, suffering from a fracture of the hip. Mr. Opp, according to Bloom, became confused while crossing the street and stepped in front of the bicycle.

Mirthful.

JOY STREAK CONTINUES.

COMEDY IS KING IN THE WEEK'S THEATRICAL OFFERINGS.

Theatrical offerings this week will run largely to comedy, with the exception of "On Trial," which is melodrama in novel dress. Success during the past week has caused the continuance of "Canary Cottage," "Yankee Prince" and "Come Again Smith." While the Little Theater did not open as promised, when the Ordynski forces do present their artistic wares they promise to be something out of the ordinary.

Vaudeville offers some unusually good features, among which are the engagement of Orville Harrold, the famous tenor; a gripping little playlet entitled "The Outpost," in which seven soldiers and two officers of the United States Army take part, and a trio of skaters who perform on ice.

They thrill and amuse.

Bright lights of drama and vaudeville who will shine at the local theaters this week.

Mason.

So great has been the success of "Canary Cottage" at the Mason that the Morosco-Carroll-Harris musical comedy will remain over during the present week. A performance will be given this evening. Trixie Friganza, Herbert Corthell, Charlie Ruggles, Leola Lucey and others of the all-star cast presenting the fascinating music and sparkling comedy are all combining to make "Canary Cottage" one of the greatest successes in the city's theatrical history. The harmonies of "Canary Cottage," including the title song, "I Never Knew," "Orange Day in California," and other are already being whistled, played and sung throughout California. "Canary Cottage" goes to New York following its present engagement. The Winter Garden extravaganza, "A World of Pleasure," will be the attraction following "Canary Cottage."

Orpheum.

Music figures largely in the Orpheum bill which opens tomorrow afternoon. Heading the list of harmonious attractions is America's famous tenor, Orville Harrold, who has never before appeared in vaudeville, but is well known in New York's grand opera world and in Europe. It is said that Harrold is possessed of a most charming stage personality in addition to his beautiful voice.

Other notable musical acts will be furnished by Robert Dore, the eminent baritone, and George Halperin, well-known pianist.

Other acts on the bill will be J. C. Lewis, Jr., a youngster in years, but a full-fledged actor, who will appear with his father, mother and a couple of sisters in what is said to be a very bright little sketch entitled "Billy's Santa Claus;" Deiro, king of piano accordionists, and hold-overs, Allan Dinehart in "The Meanest Man in the World," Bert Kalmer and Jessie Brown in "Nursery Land," Willard, "the man who grows," and Violet Dale in a new list of impersonations.

Morosco.

"On Trial," Elmer Reizenstein's spectacular melodramatic success, is proving one of the biggest hits the Morosco has staged. It will begin its second week this afternoon. The brilliant cast, the unique scenic equipment and the many surprising climaxes in the action have combined to make the play one of the hits of the season.

The story is told backward, in the manner of some of the motion pictures. It begins with the trial of the accused in a murder case, shows the crime itself, then the motive for the crime, then the thing that created the motive, and finally reveals the perpetrator of the crime.

Edmund Lowe, Maude Fealy, Douglas MacLean, William Garwood and the remainder of the cast bring out the idea at just the right tempo.

Burbank.

"The Yankee Prince," the George M. Cohan musical comedy, has scored such a big success at the Burbank that it will be retained during the present week. The youthful Neal Burns is distinguishing himself in the Cohan role, and Burt Wesner, Edith Lyle, Vera Lewis, Warner Baxter, Frank Darien and others are covering themselves with glory.

The big beauty chorus is one of the principle attractions of the pleasing production.

Belasco.

"Come Again Smith," John H. Blackwood's sparkling comedy, gives promise of making its author's fortune. It is the sort of comedy of cheerfulness that everybody enjoys seeing, with its optimistic view on life, its appealing faith in humanity and its brisk and clever dialogue. The piece is being well played, with George B. Howard, Inez Plummer and Harrison Ford in the principal roles.

The second week of "Come Again Smith" will open with this afternoon's performance.

The entire action of the comedy has been quickened, until the piece is now in practically the shape in which it will be given at the Fulton Theater, New York, in the near future.

Hippodrome.

One of the most novel vaudeville acts ever shown in this city will headline the new Hippodrome bill, opening tomorrow. This is an ice-skating act performed by Helaine, Hassett and Romaine, three experts in this line of sport. The turn is made possible by the use of the big Hip tank. The act is said to be staged in a spectacular manner.

Others on the bill will be the Singing Four; Von Dell, versatile musician, who performs on a number of instruments and presents impersonations of famous music masters; Charles A. Loler and company, in "The Night Doctor;" The Millard-Clay Trio, musicians; Mlle. Electrice and company, of whom the former apparently defies death in an electric chair, pulling off several thrilling stunts, and Spissell Brothers and Mack, in "The New Chief."

Little Theater.

While the date of the opening of the Little Theater has been postponed, it is expected to occur within the next two weeks. Richard Ordynski, Max Reinhardt's noted assistant in several theatrical enterprises of note, will have charge of the productions.

Pantages.

In "The Output," which comes to Pantages tomorrow, seven men and two officers of the regular United States Army take part in an act recognized by the government in its policy of preparedness, and which is said to be particularly inspiring and patriotic. Camp scenes and the defense of a border post depict army life in the novel production.

Bertee Beaumonte and Jack Arnold, favorites among Los Angeles theatergoers as musical comedy stars, will return with an act in which they will introduce songs, dances and talk. Pirnikoff and Rose, with their ballet, carry a company of eight people, introducing classic dances, their "Pierrot and Pierrette" and dance of 1830 being among the numbers that are beautifully staged and costumed, while their closing number a "Bacchanale," is said to make the production unusually distinctive. The Lucy Lucier Trio, Garcinetti Brothers, and Holmes and Wells complete the bill, with the opening of the film serial, "The Crimson Stain," in which Maurice Costello takes the lead.

WHAT DID HE MEAN?

Fox Star Thinks Store Clerk May Have been Joking.

June Caprice, star of "The Ragged Princess," which is to follow "The War Bride's Secret" at Miller's Theater, says that the department store clerk may have been taking advantage of her youth and innocence when he answered her as he did once. This was the way it happened. June said:

"These gloves are undressed kid aren't they?"

The clerk said they were.

"Will they shrink if washed?" was Miss Caprice's next query.

"Madam," said the clerk, "have you ever heard of undressed kids which did not shrink from washing?"

PLAYS FOR CHILDREN.

Plan of Local Film Company is Arousing Much Interest.

To produce children's photoplays of superior quality is the purpose of the organizers of the Warrenton Children's Photoplay Company, who met yesterday in the offices of W. H. Crowell, for the purpose of arranging the preliminaries of incorporation. This project has already aroused much interest and offers of studio sites have been received from land owners in Culver City, Lynwood, Lankershim and Monrovia. The head of the organization will be Mrs. Lule Warrenton, who is widely known in the movie world as "Mother Warrenton.'

One of the chief outlets for the production of the company will be children's matinees which are springing up in all parts of the United States and which promise to become a very conspicuous factor in motion picture presentation.

MUSICAL

Virtuoso.

ELMAN WILL THRILL.

NOTED VIOLINIST TO OPEN PHILHARMONIC THIS WEEK.

Mischa Elman, who has ever been a fascination for the concert-going public, is to spend a very busy week in Southern California on his visit which will begin tomorrow. Besides his two recitals at Trinity Auditorium, respectively Tuesday evening and Saturday matinee, he will make several other appearances in this section. He will play before the Amphion Club in San Diego Thursday afternoon, and will open the Long Beach Philharmonic course at the Civic Auditorium in that city Friday. He also is to be the guest of the University of Southern California at a reception at No. 3201 South Figueroa street Wednesday evening.

Accompanied by his father, Sol Elman, and his accompanist, Phillip Gordon, he will reach here tomorrow morning. Unlike many famous artists, Elman does not travel with a retinue of attendants and dozens of pieces of baggage. He is quite like the ordinary individual. Two suit cases and a violin case contain his possessions while he is on tour. Everything is simple but his music.

Elman's art is ever a source of wonderment for the public. It possesses a throb of vitality that is seldom met with. His tone has a remarkable breadth and power that touches the heart of the listener. The appeal of his work reaches far beyond the confines of the musical profession to the lover of the beautiful and the general auditor.

His programmes have that quality of richness and distinction which eminently fits his talents. The two to be given in this city exemplify this, and rare delight is promised in them. The numbers selected for the two events are as follows:

Tuesday evening: Concerto, G Minor (Vivaldi,) Allegro, Adagio, Allegro; Concerto, F-sharp Minor, Op. 23 (Ernst,) Allegro moderato; Variations on a theme by Mozart (Scolero;) Arioso (J. S. Bach,) arranged by Sam Franko; Caprice, E-flat Major (Wieniawski - Kreisler;) "Nuit de mai" (Michiels-Elman;) "Country Dance" (Weber - Elman,) and "Zigeunerweisen" (Sarasate.)

Saturday afternoon: Sonate, D Major (Nardini-David,) Adagio, Allegro con fuoco, Larghetto, Allegretto grazioso; Concerto, D Minor (Spohr,) Allegro, Adagio, Rondo, Allegretto; Poeme, Op. 25 (Chausson;) Etude Melodique (Rode,) piano accompaniment by Elman; Impromptu (Samartini-Chopin;) Valse Macabre (Godowsky;) Etude (Wieniawski,) piano accompaniment by Fritz Kreisler; Elegie (Ernst,) and "Non piu Mesta" (Paganini.)

Godowsky Coming Soon.

The golden tones of Mischa Elman will safely launch the Philharmonic series upon its way this week. Leopold Godowsky, with his mastery of technique, will give life to the matinee series the 28th inst. He is to play a programme of terrific demands, and one that will fully manifest his extraordinary ability.

Godowsky will not be the only pianist to visit the city during the remainder of the year. Artists of the keyboard, in fact, are to be especially in evidence among the musical attractions, and if each may derive a portion of the great triumph which accrued to Paderewski, their own success here will be assured. Percy Grainger, Josef Hofmann and Rudolph Ganz, in joint recital with Albert Spalding, are to appear in the order named during the season.

Choral Club Rehearsing.

The Mendelssohn Choral Club, organized last year, has resumed rehearsals during the past week and plans several interesting concerts during the season. J. Benson Starr has been re-elected director of the organization. Miss Frances Mallory is accompanist. Officers and members of committees chosen include Dr. T. J. O. Volkmann, president; Mrs. Harriet Dinsmore, vice-president; Robert Peebles Sudall of No. 5719 Fayette street, secretary-treasurer; Miss Gertrude Mallory, librarian; Miss Z. McClure, Charles A. White and Charles B. Leffler, Music Committee; Miss Priscilla Butterfield, Miss Nina Robinson, Mrs. L. B. Boreman and George Evans, Voice Committee.

The club is studying a large list of musical numbers for presentation, among them "Woo Thou, Sweet Music" (Elgar,) "Song of the Winds" (Neidlinger,) "The Storm" (Julian Edwards) and "My Love Dwelt in a Northern Land" (Elgar.)

Orpheum Music Features.

The Orpheum bill this week will gain additional grace through the inclusion of several decidedly attractive musical features. Orville Harrold, gifted American tenor, who has sung under Hammerstein and in Century Opera, as well as abroad in Covent Garden, is scheduled to delight appreciators of high-class songs and singing. Mr. Harrold is perhaps even better known abroad than in this country, and his engagement is considered on a par with other notable musical attractions that have been offered at the local vaudeville house.

Besides Mr. Harrold the bill also will have a musical attraction in Robert Dore, a baritone of fine range, the quality of whose voice is said to carry a strong appeal. Assisting Mr. Dore will be George Halperin, piano virtuoso.

Intensifying Appreciation.

While the interest in the Symphony Orchestra is to be intensified over a larger area than ever before this year, it was discovered in the recent campaign that geographically the scope of the orchestra's appeal could hardly be extended. From San Diego several prominent residents travel 125 miles to Los Angeles in order to attend the winter concerts here, it is said. Among this number is Mrs. Max Heinrich, who not only comes up for one concert, but remains over for each pair. Santa Barbara also has its quota of music lovers who are regular patrons of the local Symphony concerts, while Redlands, Riverside, Po-

Fingering Finery.

AMONG THE STORES AND AMID THE SHOPPERS.

BY OLIVE GRAY.

Now is the time to buy:

The hats needed for several occasions. You will find a variety in that sale at the high-class store on upper Broadway—that store where not black hats only are found in the sales which have become so well known as millinery opportunities for those who exact the best, even though prices are for-less.

Shoes for the narrow foot. Such shoes are a specialty in that house on upper Broadway which is planning a removal to the other end of the street. Not at every place can one find AAAs, AAs or even Bs, but in the line carried by that house such widths—or narrows—are a feature.

To try and to buy the spices for your fall pickling and preserving and to try them at "their treat" from the house which sells them. There is a place—and a charming one it is!—where spices, teas and coffees form a part of the almost-for-nothing feast set forth, just to prove to you the worth of the goods.

Cultural in more ways than one are the visits of literary celebrities. Not only do we hasten to see them and to hear them read their productions, but as soon as we learn of their prospective advent we begin to "cram" as if for a month-end exam. Hurriedly, at meal time, en route downtown, anywhere and everywhere, we may be detected—by any who chance to be in the detecting business—reading, reading the works of the writer who is about to appear in tangible shape, knowing the weakness of man and knowning the weakness of man and womankind, spread forth the works of the impending literary genius and we nibble and nibble fast. Then, as we listen to the reading by the aforementioned genius—who doubtless reads his works less well than does anyone else—we assume worshipful attitudes and exclaim with bated breath: "How I have always loved that!" Or: "That is my especial favorite!" A girl in my vicinity, at such an affair recently, who was most exclamatory, happened to have asked me when the genius was first heralded: "What is T—?" And although she was too wise to quite give herself away, I am convinced she believed him to be some new brand of breakfast food, or a new condiment to use with meats.

First of the Season.

Now that one of those famous hat sales is announced, we may feel secure that the season is well under way. I mean a sale at that house on upper Broadway where high-class hats—in fact, first-class millinery—prevail. In the coming sale, if you are there early in the morning you may have a choice of almost every mode demanded by the season. I had a glimpse of some of those hats—and not all are black by any means, although black is most conspicuous in that house. There was a most striking hat of black Lyons velvet, trimmed simply—as all good hats should be—with a big buckle and band of tailless ermine. There was an adorable bonnety affair in dark blue, with a posy of those new hand-made felt flowers in vogue-nouveau. This quaint headpiece had a veil attached just below the inevitable band of fur, and the veil itself owned a band of fur which fastened securely below the chin. Hand-made flowers of either felt or of velvet tipped with fur formed the sole adornment of many of those distinctive hats, all of which were to be placed in the sale for a fraction of their regular worth.

Little Gray Tea Shop.

That it is almost olive gray does not fully account for my affinity for that little shop. Its charm and distinctiveness allures, for it is just an ideal tea shop—the very first one of its kind. High up among that brace of shops where so many places of interest attract, this brand new—brand, mind you (please think that over as you partake)—tea shop is such as to force exclamations of praise from everyone who visits there. First of all, the furniture is of that novel type on square, box-like lines, and best of all there is at every corner of every table a tall dignified candlestick with a blazonry of wondrous red for ornament, and last of all there are touches of that same wondrous red by way of silken window curtains and in medallions upon the table runners and even edging the tea napery. The shop gives upon the broad promenade allowing ingress to the big auditorium where meet many of the women's clubs, and when the tea shop overflows with guests, as it is bound to do directly that women catch a glimpse of it, they will serve upon trays in that garden-like promenade underneath the decorated awnings. In my enthusiasm about the place I am forgetting what is served—the quality of the tea and coffee, the cakes, the bread and condiments—but you must learn that for yourself, as there's no such thing as passing along a taste.

The Silhouette.

This season we must be slim but look fat! No, no! Do not for an instant think that you may properly be fat! It is but your outer clothing which must give the effect. In other words, we must be lost in our clothes. They may distend, but not we within them. The proper silhouette must be that of slenderness swathed in much amplitude of skirt, which at the same time hangs straight and pretends that it is not so full after all, as it may seem.

Colorful.

A departure from the demureness of many of the season's hats are those which break into many colors through the medium of the "magpies" as are called the feathery affairs posed directly at the front of the round shapes. These magpies are in every color which the season owns and the only logical conclusion as to their origin is that the birds, in passing through the sunset, have been dyed with its glorious tints.

From a Feathery Garden.

Despite the saying that "there is nothing new under the sun," I'll warrant that you will see something new, whether under the sun or moon, if you will pay a visit to that darling flower shop where not alone fresh grown flowers are found in greatest profusion, but flowers from fields elysian or otherwise. Anyhow, you can never guess, for even the darling shop man could not say precisely, where those flowers were grown. You look and look, wonder and surmise as to their composition. Under mycroscopic inspection you discover that their delicate fronds and leaves are formed from feathers! You have been the butterfly moth—that link between two winged worlds. The flowers which are almost winged, you have also beheld, but this is running the scale in an opposite direction, and imagination follows a riot in a fancied garden wherein such wonders flower forth.

A Subtle Perfume.

There are subtle distinctions as to the realm which is Bohemia. Some there are who believe that land one of cigarette smoke, beer and elevated feet to an accompaniment of ill-chosen language and battered reputations. Others there are who have confidence in such a Bohemia land as that described by John Boyle O'Reilly. It is, perhaps, in honor of this wondrous land—where "values are true"—that the new and wondrous perfume is named. Fascinating, alluring, satisfying is La Boheime and quite as desirable of attainment as is that true land of Bohemia where are "the laurels gathered in all men's view," "for truth and beauty men's souls have made."

A Must-have.

One of the must-haves for the wardrobe this season is a velvet suit or coat, and with this imperative demand comes opportunity writ large in that well-liked store where "seven" is the magic word you say before leaving Broadway. Yes, their undiminished quality and a price very much diminished is said to you, aloud, by the velvets in that sale.

How She Cleared It.

Evelyn came home from her vacation a "perfect fright" as she said and as we could not but agree, for she had frisked regardless of the importunities of sun and wind and her skin proclaimed the fact. Yesterday I saw her and lo! her complexion was as smooth, clear and creamy as ever. "How, Evelyn, oh, how did you accomplish it?" I asked, and into my waiting ear she whispered her creamy secret.

Old-fashioned Hint.

Aunt Ann uses in the water with which she washes painted wood work a small handful of common baking soda to each gallon of warm water and the work is made easy thereby.

Fashion's Hieroglyphics.

Many of the new toques are without brims.

Softly falling fullness marks the new skirts.

There are all varieties of the bishop sleeve.

The simplest skirts are shirred at the waist line.

Your coat may be belted across the front only.

Evening frocks have long trains on short skirts.

Leg-o'-mutton sleeves have a fair degree of favor.

Flat silk braid is very effective on navy serge.

Entire sleeves of mole fur are seen in rich wraps.

DOUBLE AND TROUBLE.

Case of Mistaken Identity Gives Man Free Ride, However.

William Burress was recently asked to deliver a speech before a suffrage club in Los Angeles. He was hard at work in "Fires of Conscience" at the time, so he sent in his respectful regrets. The call of the grease paint would not allow him to get away, he said.

The afternoon of the meeting the secretary of the club, who had written Mr. Burress and knew him personally, drove to the clubhouse in her machine. On a street corner she saw a man talking excitedly to another. It was Mr. Burress, she knew. So she stopped, alighted from her car and went up to him.

The man paid no attention to her.

"Mr. Burress," she screamed in desperation. "I suppose this is the way the grease paint calls you. I suppose you're too busy this afternoon to talk to us. Well, wait until we ask you again."

She was about to go when the man interrupted her.

"Why, madam, he said, I'd be glad to speak all day to women. I love them. I love to talk. But I'm not Mr. Buress and never will be. I suppose there's been some mistake. However, if you want a talk I'll be glad to go with you and give you my views on baseball or racing. Shall I?"

The woman was rather taken aback, but she still firmly believed she was taking to William Buress.

"You get in this machine," she said, "and I'll investigate."

They both climbed in, and the driver set out for the Fox studios. When the woman arrived they called for Mr. Burress. He came out, grease paint and all, made up for his part. The woman stammered.

"Hello, George," said Burress, "have I been getting you in trouble again?"

"Oh, no, Bill," the other answered. "I've had a good ride here and very good company. You see," he said turning to the woman, "I'm Burress's double and we're often mistaken for each other. I knew the trouble when you came up, but I wouldn't explain, as it would have cheated me out of a ride."

The Laziest Man in the World.

[Buffalo Express:] The life of ease led by Simon Chojecki at the expense of the city came to an abrupt end in the city court yesterday. Chojecki still is living at the city's expense, but this time in the jail.

When arraigned before Judge Maul Chojecki in answer to the court's query as to his means of livelihood replied:

"Why, I don't have to work; the city supports me."

mona and other neighboring cities give an even greater patronage. While it is apparent that the appeal of the Symphony could hardly be extended over a larger area, it is hoped to add greatly to the numbers attending the concerts from these various sections.

Sunday Concert Series.

With a programme of Richard Wagner selections, Dr. Bruce Gordon Kingsley will open his series of Sunday-afternoon concerts at Trinity Auditorium this afternoon. The assisting soloist today will be Miss Ruth Hutchinson, prima donna soprano, whose singing of the "Parsifal" music during anniversary week at the Auditorium made a marked impression.

Each musical number will be prefaced with short interpretative remarks, which will add greatly to the enjoyment of the concerts. The stories of several of the music dramas also will be dwelt on. Dr. Kingsley's recitals last season proved of unusual benefit in stimulating the music appreciation of the public at large, and the news of their continuance will be welcome.

Following is the programme for this afternoon: Organ, overture, "Tannhauser," Dr. Kingsley; vocal, "Elizabeth's Greeting" ("Tannhaustan's Vision," from "Tristan und tan's Vision," from "Tristan and Isolde," Dr. Kingsley; organ, "Dance of the Apprentices," from "Die Meistersinger," Dr. Kingsley; vocal, "Widmung" (dedication,) (Schumann,) and "Spring Song" (Weil,) Miss Hutchinson; organ, Grail Music from "Parsifal," Flower Maidens' Chorus from "Parsifal" and "Huldigungsmarch," Dr. Kingsley.

Pianist in Recital.

Pauline Farquahar, an exceedingly capable young artist pupil of Abby de Avirett of Long Beach, appeared in recital Thursday evening at the Hotel Virginia. Her programme varied between the classic and modern French compositions, in a way to give a good idea of the young lady's perception of the charm of these different composers' work. The smoothness and ease with which she handled the technical difficulties of the Bach-Busoni "Chaconne," Debussy's "L'Isle Jopeuse" and the Chopin and Liszt etudes made a distinctly favorable impression with the interested audience. She reflects the Busoni style in her playing, as Mr. De Avirett himself was at one time a pupil of that distinguished artist.

Federation Contest.

The second local contest for young professional musicians, under a plan started by the National Federation of Musical Clubs two years ago, has been set for November 4, those taking part to be residents of Los Angeles and vicinity, it is announced. A contest will be held about the same time in Oakland and the winners in these two will later take part in another to decide who will be the representatives of California in the district contest. The winners of the district contests are accorded the privilege of appearing on one of the biennial programmes. The winners of the first contest provided one of the most interesting of the biennial festival programmes and the movement has been of such value, it is stated, to those beginning a professional career that its continuance is assured.

The Ebell auditorium will be used for the local competition, the club having kindly donated its use. Mrs. Charles W. Fish will act as hostess. All contests will be open to the public, the admittance fee of 25 cents being used to defray the expense.

The work is in charge of Mrs. A. N. Jamison, vice-president of the National Federation of Musical Clubs. Mrs. Hennion Robinson will assist those taking part in the contest as accompanist.

Long Beach Philharmonic.

Beside Mischa Elman, the Long Beach Philharmonic series is to include recitals by Schumann-Heink and Josef Hofmann. The project gives promise of unusual success, as there is a strong demand for high-class music in the city. The Philharmonic committee has worked with marked results under the direction of Miss Helen Sargent. A large number of assistants gave much of their time to paving the way for the securing of the musical attractions.

The Woman's Music Study Club of Long Beach devoted a portion of its guest evening last week to a study of the Mischa Elman concert programme. Abby de Avirett spoke on musical topics.

Von Stein Recital.

A clear-cut and well-balanced rendition of the Tschaikowsky Symphony in E Minor, in two-piano arrangement, proved a musical feature of the pupils' recital given by the Von Stein Academy last Tuesday evening at Gamut Club auditorium. Misses Payson, Mitchell, Hammerton and Tallman were at the pianos.

An example of unusual maturity and strong magnetism was furnished by Dorsey Whittington, who, though only 16 years of age, held his listeners under a spell by the rendition of the Mozart Concerto in D Minor, with Miss Mitchell at the second piano. Two encores were demanded. Mr. Whittington played the Staccato Etude, by Friml, and the Chopin "Revolutionary."

Other pupils who won much appreciation in solo numbers were Vera Culp, Leonore Rose, Myrtle von Stein, Hubert Tucker, Hazel von Stein, Miss Helen Follette, Miss Laura Tallman, Miss Loretta Payson and Miss Mitchell. The pupils showed the ease and poise which is only possible when the music has been absorbed by the brain as well as by the fingers.

Following the programme there was a presentation of certificates and medals by Director H. von Stein.

Gamut Club.

The series of ladies' night entertainments to be given by the Gamut Club this year was inaugurated last Wednesday. The Temple Baptist choir, under the direction of J. B. Poulin, presented a programme of sacred and secular numbers that carried a ready appeal to the large audience. Solos were given by Alice Lohr-McDaniel, contralto, and George Bemis, bass. Mary Goodrich Read, solo violinist, assisted in a pleasing group of selections. The "Hallelujah Chorus" and Dudley Buck's "Te Deum" were among the choral numbers.

An "American Night" will be the game given to the smoker Wednesday evening at the clubhouse, and a very entertaining programme has been arranged. Dr. Andrew Stewart Lobingier will read a paper on "The Influence of German Philosophy on Music and American Culture." Charles Keeler, California poet, will recite some of his original verses. Among the musical features will be offerings by G. Allan Hancock, with his trio; John J. Broughton, basso; A. Rae Condit, whistler; Homer Simmons, pianist, and the Gamut Club Tri-quartette.

Harmonia Programme.

The Harmonia Club programme to be given Thursday under the leadership of Miss Frances Walling will be devoted to the works of Beethoven and will include the following selections:

"Beethoven, the Composer," talk by Mrs. J. C. Thorner; "Lu Questa Lowba Obscura," Mrs. Carl Johnson; Sonata, Op. 26, No. 12, theme and variations, Mrs. George Simpson; "Kennst Du das Land," Mrs. Glover Stith; First Sonata, Op. 12, for violin and piano, Miss Mary Goodrich Read, violinist, and Mrs. Fred Bacon Reynard, pianist; "Adalaide," Mrs. John David Beal, and Rondo in G, Mrs. Reynard.

Songs at Schubert.

Gloria Mayne-Windsor presented a programme of beautiful songs and arias in English, French, German, Italian and Indian languages last Wednesday afternoon before the Schubert Club. The Indian melodies, rendered with expert taste and finish by Mrs. Windsor, proved especially unique and colorful.

Mrs. Windsor was assisted by Grace Abbie Andrews, accompanist. The Gade Trio, composed of May Orcutt Brooke, pianist; Dr. Paul Wismer, violoncellist, and R. Frederick Grover, violinist, played effectively some lighter chamber music selections.

The Schubert orchestra of thirty-five to forty members is being organized for rehearsals under the direction of Henry Schoenefeld.

Matinee Musical.

An enlightening and significant address on the spoken and silent drama was given by Mrs. Lillian Burkhardt Goldsmith before the Matinee Musical Club last Thursday afternoon. In connection with her lecture she gave interpretations of several plays, including "The Marriage Game," a successful New York comedy; "The High Road" and "Romance," two other prominent dramatic features of recent years.

Mrs. Edgar F. Waite will lecture before the Matinee Musical Club Thursday afternoon on "Color Vibration and its Relation to Music." Mrs. Waite has made a deep study of the science of vibration as related to color and musical tone, and it is believed that her talk will open up new avenues of thought.

Saint Cecilia Club.

Under the leadership of Miss Willy Smyser, the following programme of ultra-modern music will be given at the Saint Cecilia Club meeting tomorrow afternoon:

Voice, "Sleep that Flits on Baby's Eyes" (Carpenter,) and "Song of India" (Rimsky-Korsokof,) Mrs. Charles Lick; voice, "When I Bring to You Colored Toys" (Carpenter,) Mrs. Benjamin Bloser; piano, "Soiree Japonaise" (Cyril Scott,) Mrs. Jesse P. McKnight; voice, "Prelude" (Cyril Scott,) Mrs. Roy Kellogg; violin, "Fernside Farm," "The Barefoot Boy" and "At Sundown" (Cecil Burleigh,) Miss Sadie Stanton; voice, "Ari Bruit de rames" (Rhene-Baton,) Mrs. Philip Zobelein; voice, "Wild Geese" (Rogers,) Miss Willy Smyser; piano, "Clair de lune" and piano, "Castilian Dance" (Alvarez) piano, "Castillian Dance" (Alvarez) and "Chimes" (Scott,) Mrs. Bernard Schulman.

Repertoire Recital.

The third of the series of repertoire recitals given by Miss Margaret Goetz will be devoted to opera and oratorio music. It will occur Thursday afternoon, with the following musical artists, besides Miss Goetz, taking part: Georgiana Strauss, contralto, and Constance Balfour, Mrs. H. R. Gates, Mae Bareham, Grace Morgan, Nellie Coburn and others. Selections will be from works of Handel, Bach, Bruch, Donnizetti, Verdi, Wagner, Puccini, Massenet, Mascagni, Parker, Herbert, Thomas, Weber and Borodine (from "Prinz Igor,") and a reception for Miss Strauss will follow.

A very successful recital of American music was given last Thursday afternoon under Miss Goetz's direction. Selections from the works of all the noted American composers like MacDowell, Homer, Parker, Nevin, Chadwick, Carpenter, Foote, Woodman, Ware, La Forge and others were included. Several local composers were represented, including Mrs. Gertrude Ross and Miss Laura Zerbe and Frank Colby. Assisting Miss Goetz were Mrs. Frank Colby, Mrs. Leonora Montgomery Martz, Mae Bareham, Mrs. Peterson and Gage Christopher, with Mrs. Violet Steineman, Gertrude Ross and Helen Bruhn at the piano.

French Programme.

Mrs. Mary Mendenhall Perkins and Miss Mabel Brousseau will give a French evening at the Hotel Ingraham Thursday. Mrs. Perkins will talk on "Historic Paris," illustrating her lecture with slides, and Miss Brousseau will play early French music, as follows: "Gavotte" (Lully,) "Gigue" (Loeilly,) "Fickle Country Maid" (Couperin,) "L'Egyptienne" and "Tambourin" (Rameau) and "The Cuckoo" (Daquin.)

Schubert Selections.

Ray Hastings, organist of Temple Baptist Church, will play a special Schubert recital this evening at 7 o'clock. The programme will include: "By the Sea," "Moment Musical," "Serenade," "Litany" and "Military March."

Musical Notes.

Among the novelties to be brought out by the Damrosch Orchestra this year are included compositions by Ravel, Suk, Grainger, Sinigaglia, Rabaud, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Strawinsky, Chadwick and Loeffler.

Arthur Hackett, tenor, is to appear in a series of recitals with Mme. Geraldine Farrar on her concert tour in the East this year.

Henri La Bonte, well-known tenor of this city, is to be a member of the Cleveland Grand Opera Company, which is to give an interstate season in Ohio and Pennsylvania.

MEN AND EVENTS.

Until his recent retirement, Dr. Loomis Pomeroy Haskell, a native of Bangor, Me., age 90, was the oldest practicing dentist in the United States, having been in practice seventy years.

Adam Turner, an expressman of Bradley Park, N. Y., was counting his roll in the presence of his ducks when a $5 note fluttered out of his grasp, and in a twinkle a duck gobbled it. Before Turner could catch it the duck had mingled with its fellows and then Turner could not decide which duck it was.

Frank Scott and his wife of Kensett, Ark., have been married ten years. Nineteen boys have been born to them. The parents have been partial to the letter "A" of the alphabet in naming them. Ashbell, Archer and Austin, are 4½ years old; Arthur and Arnold, 3½; Alfred, Albion and Adolph, 18 months, and Abel and Abner, 9 months.

Police Sergeant David Field tells how Joe, a trained gander, follows Patrolman Joseph Horn on his beat from Lee to Carter avenue and Fair to Newstand avenue in St. Louis. Horn, according to the sergeant, won the gander at a street carnival raffle about a year ago, and has trained it to accompany him on his rounds. Field said that when Horn wants to rout an alley gang he sicks the gander on them. It then flies down the alley, honking as it goes. It is a terror to negroes, Field says, and has been known to fight dogs.

Edward M. Nowlin of Granite City, Ill., after working for three years on a patent and living on an average of 28 cents a day, disposed of the patent to a millionaire uncle recently for $140,000, and immediately departed for Daytona, Fla., where he expects to spend six months "resting up." Nowlin has been irregularly employed as a carpenter at the steel mills in Granite City. His invention is a puncture-proof automobile tire. Dr. E. C. Nowlin, the uncle, lives in Memphis, Tenn.

Rev. John W. Newton, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Valparaiso, Ind., spent his summer vacation in the steel mills at Gary as a common laborer. Of the circumstance, he says: "My purpose in undertaking this work was to replete my purse, to reduce my heft and girth and to make a new circle of friends and acquaintances and to gain first hand knowledge of a concrete industrial situation. Frankly I went to Gary at least mildly prejudiced against the steel corporation, but my prejudices have been considerably dissipated by my experiences.

EDUCATORS.

Marshall Howard Saville, who has returned to this country after a tour of exploration in Ecuador and Bolivia, has been professor of American archaeology an the faculty of Columbia University since 1903. He went out under direction of the Heye Foundation, and met with success, bringing back valuable relics of the pre-Inca civilization. He did his first field work among the remains of the Mound Builders in Southern Ohio; then he turned to Yucatan and Honduras, and was privileged to be among the first to know of the wonders of the Maya civilization.

The story of Carl Karlstrom, a student last year at Gustayus Adolphus College at St. Peter, Minn., who has been selected as instructor in manual training in the public schools of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, might well be expanded into a novel on American life. Karlstrom came to America seven years ago as a steerage passenger. He worked as a dock laborer, a waiter and farm hand until he had saved enough money to enter college. He worked his way through school and now has been rewarded with a well-paying position.

Rev. John Augustine Ryan has just been appointed professor of moral theology in the Catholic University of America, Washington. He succeeds Dr. John Webster Melody, Chicago, who resigned to engage in parochial work in his home city. Dr. Ryan, whose home is in St. Paul, went to the university in October, 1915, from St. Paul's Seminary, as a teacher of political science. His transfer to the theological department is a promotion.

Retired from the University of Minnesota faculty two years ago under the old-age rule of the regents, John F. Downey, former dean of the college of science, literature and arts, has gone to China to resume active teaching. Dean Downey is 70 years old. Although he is paid enough money under the Carnegie pension fund to permit him to live without working, the aged educator refuses to be placed on the shelf, even if he has to go as far as China to teach. He will receive nothing for his pedagogical work in China, this under the restrictions of the Carnegie pension fund.

OF ART AND

BY ANTONY ANDER

A Portrait.

In the white sweetness of her dimpled chin
The pink points of her perfumed fingers press,
And round her tremulous mouth's loveliness
The tears and smiles a sudden strife begin:
First one and then the other seems to win:
And o'er her drooping eyes a golden tress
Falls down to hide what else they might confess
Their blue-veined lids are striving to shut in.
The yellow pearls that bind her throat about
With her pale bosom's throbbing rise or fall:
The while her thought like carrier doves have fled
To that far land where armies clash and shout,
And where, beyond love's reach, a soldier tall
With staring eyes and broken sword lies dead.

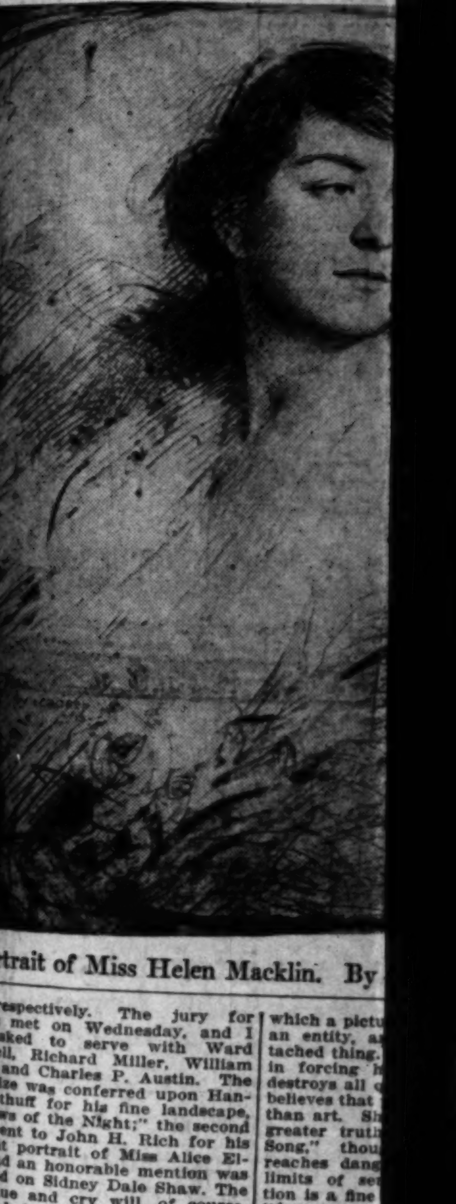
Seventh Annual Exhibition.

This little article shall be a recovery and a recrudescence of past impressions.

Last week I recorded, at circumstantial length, my adventures with the seventh annual exhibition of the California Art Club, when I had no catalogue to guide me and when I felt free to look at only what I liked. This week I shall strive more strenuously for the truth.

Two friends of the California Art Club who prefer to remain unknown offered prizes this year, $100 and



Portrait of Miss Helen Macklin. By

150, respectively. The jury for awards met on Wednesday, and I was asked to serve with Ward Winchell, Richard Miller, William Wendt and Charles P. Austin. The first prize was conferred upon Hanson Puthuff for his fine landscape, "Shadows of the Night;" the second prize went to John H. Rich for his excellent portrait of Miss Alice Elliott, and an honorable mention was bestowed on Sidney Dale Shaw. The usual hue and cry will, of course, be heard from all sides, but don't blame me for the judgment of the jury. I was only one of five. But I don't repudiate the decisions, which seem, all things considered, entirely fair and equitable.

The perfect picture has yet to be painted. It never will be painted. Certainly, the three prize winners of the present show are far from perfect, but all have admirable artistic qualities, each will arrest you and interest you if you care for painting at all. It must be remembered, however, that two of the best pictures of the exhibition, those of Richard Miller and William Wendt, were not in competition, as their painters were members of the jury of awards.

Hanson Puthuff's "Shadows of the Night" is very beautiful technically, deft, suave, loosely yet firmly handled, and the artist's brush has followed the conformations of the hills with tact and knowledge. He has not, to be sure, quite caught the mood of the night, we see more details than moonlight would reveal, but we must not forget that he has tried to fix on canvas something too subtle for paint. Mr. Puthuff's breadth and freedom as a painter is also revealed in his other canvas, a smaller one, "Enchanted Shores," the magnitude of whose forms may be realized only when you look at the long building nestling among the titanesque rocks.

The portrait of Miss Elliott by John Rich is conventional enough in arrangement, and the right hand of the charming sitter droops badly over the back of the chair, making an unpleasant line, but it is instinct with character, there is good breeding and elegance in the pose of the figure, and technically the painting is very expert, even brilliant. I know of no one who paints textures more delightfully than this artist. In the present picture, his rendering of black velvet and gray fur gives the beholder positive pleasure, and even the flesh—that most difficult of all textures—is good. In Mr. Rich's portrait of Miss Beatrice Faulkner, the satin and chiffon softly meet the delicate skin of the sitter, a lovely young debutante, but here, too, the hands are not well arranged. The interlocked fingers are well drawn, but we see too many of them.

Sidney Dale Shaw's "Westward in Manhattan" is a brilliant bit of impressionism, a snow effect toward early twilight. The feeling of winter is very strong, the afternoon light transfigures into beauty the colors of snow and sky and red

Last week I recorded, at circumstantial length, my adventures with the seventh annual exhibition of the California Art Club, when I had no catalogue to guide me and when I felt free to look at only what I liked. This week I shall strive more strenuously for the truth.

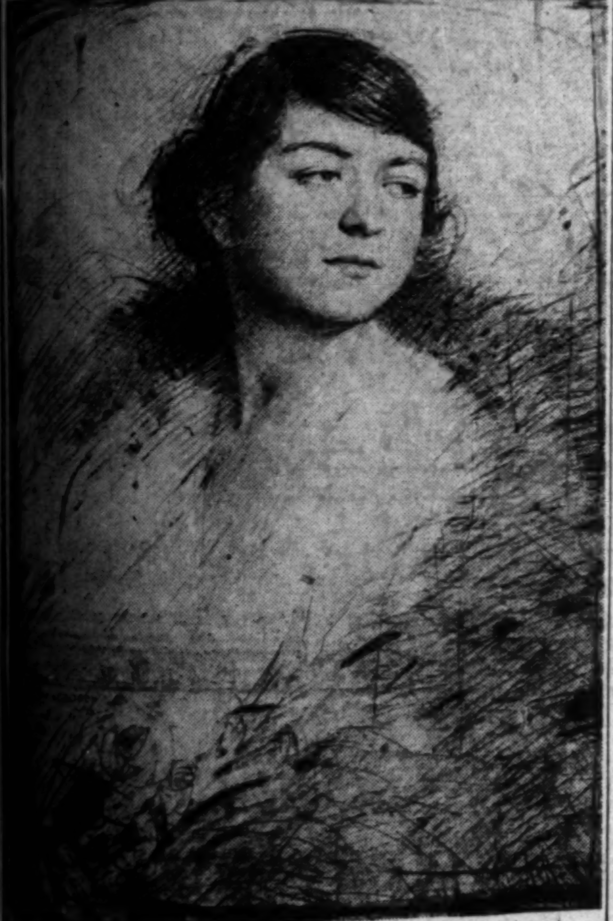
[illegible] Dale Shaw's "Westward in [illegible]" is a brilliant bit of impressionism, a snow effect toward twilight. The feeling of winter is very strong, the afternoon, [illegible] into beauty the [illegible] of snow and sky and red brick buildings. Still, the sky is heavy and does not go back as it should, and the values on the snow of the street offers us very little perspective.

Values are ill-rendered, or neglected entirely, in other pictures on the walls, the worst offenders being the portrait painters, some of whom seem to think that a poster is a portrait. As a poster Anne Bremer's "Long Chain of Beads" is bad in arrangement, and as a portrait it is without values or textures, while its color scheme is cloyingly sweet. Miss Bremer's "Fur Collar," a smaller picture, is far better in quality. Henrietta M. Shore's "Portrait" (it appears to be a self-portrait) is also careless of values, and has a porcelain smothness of effect, though painty. I wish this talented young artist would forget the teachings of Henri, take herself in hand and really paint what she sees and feels.

Why do so many of our young women run amuck in paint? Is it that they are more easily impressed by passing fads than men are, or that in their struggle for strength they forget that beauty is likewise a part of art—perhaps the greater and the better part? Or is it that women are deficient in the sense for beauty? Modern psychologists declare that they are. Do women take art too seriously or not seriously enough? I wonder.

The fine vitality of Donna Schuster's portrait of Dr. Peebles is impaired by the still life, the books and the papers, quite unnecessary profusion of them extending across the canvas, which thereby loses all beauty of composition. There is apparently no thought for arrangement, by which a picture gains unity, becomes an entity, and is no longer a detached thing. Miss Schuster persists in forcing her lights, and so she destroys all quality. She apparently believes that paint is more important than art. She gives greater beauty, greater truth, to "The Linnet's Song," though here sentiment reaches dangerously near to the limits of sentimentality. Moderation is a fine attribute of art—as of life.



Portrait of Miss Helen Macklin. By Max Wieczorek.

By the same token, gray is good, but so is color. It is better to win out by affirmation than by negation. Jack Wilkinson Smith, in his admirably felt and studied landscapes, never misses harmony, but he often loses vitality, the keen, arresting assent. His pictures have the charm of mood, but it is always a pensive mood, always the same mood. I could wish that he would rush at red like a mad bull, wring out blue like an impressionist, torture green and yellow like a cubist. For all these colors do exist in nature, and Mr. Smith misses them by a delicate hair's breadth. Perhaps he does it on purpose, perhaps he has schooled himself to his present over-quietness. If so, I think he has made a mistake. His drawing is so true in "Canyon Portal," "Storm-scarred Cliffs," and "Tranquility," his sunshine is so lovely and his air so delicate, that I wish he had given us just a little more—had given us color. There is no denying the charm of Mr. Smith's work, but its appeal would be greater and more lasting if it expressed more energy.

The three landscapes that Guy Rose exhibits are as harmonious as the three by Mr. Smith, the parts "hang together" with equal felicity, there is the same earnest seeking for values, but they hold no denial of color. They are not powerful in the usual sense, for their effectiveness lies in the fusion of light and air, and especially in the results of light and air on stretches of landscape. But they are far more lively in their lyricism than Mr. Smith's, more plangent in color. Mr. Rose's impressionism is that of a highly-sensitized interpreter of nature.

More about the seventh annual exhibition will follow.

Portraits by Wieczorek.

William Swift Daniell's efforts for the cause of art in Los Angeles have been persistent and intelligent, and they have extended through many years. An artist himself, he has always sought, in the picture galleries he has exploited, to keep to a high standard of excellence, admitting nothing that he felt was bad. He has just opened a new gallery on the seventh floor of the Niles Pease Building, No. 640 South Hill street, and it is his fixed purpose to maintain here an even higher standard than ever before.

The new gallery will be devoted to a changing collection of paintings by Los Angeles artists, with occasional contributions by eminent outside painters, and to one-man shows that will follow one another in rapid succession, none to continue more than two weeks. Already a score of excellent paintings have been collected, while the single show that opens tomorrow is a collection of over a dozen recent charcoal portraits by Max Wieczorek.

This artist has won a reputation with his unique portraits and studies, which have a basis of charcoal, on which are lightly superimposed touches of color in crayon, pastel, or whatever medium suggests itself to the artist as being most fitting for the subject in hand. An able draughtsman with the gift of the "light touch," Mr. Wieczorek gives to his portraits a delicate gracefulness that is never incompatible with strength and character.

You would naturally suppose that his greater success lay with charming women; but, lovely as these become under his deft manipulation, they do not prove more attractive from an artistic standpoint than his men of affairs and business. The portraits of Miss Helen Macklin, of Mrs. Hill, of the handsome woman in "Study," are all good to look at, but so, and in the same degree, are the portraits of Mr. W. I. Hollingsworth and Dr. Lamb, of Mr. Gilbert Nairn and Capt. Von Muller.

Capt. Von Muller, it will be remembered, was in command of the Emden when it sailed into Newport News. He is an old friend of Mr. Wieczorek, who drew his portrait at the time. Near this portrait hangs a very striking one of Wilhelm II, which the artist is thinking of presenting to the Empress. Very fine is the study of an old man's head, very wistful and naive in expression the face in the study of a child. Another admirable portrait is that of Mrs. Joe Barker. Robert Walton posed for the striking study of the Christ, whose wonderful face suggests both physical and spiritual power.

A public reception, at which the artist will be present, will be tendered in the new gallery tomorrow afternoon.

Men Who Paint the Far West.

Several new collections have been installed in the Palace of Fine Arts, San Francisco, and were opened to the public recently. A fine collection of pictures by "Men Who Paint the Far West" fills several galleries. This group comprises William Wendt; William Ritschel, who paints Carmel-by-the-Sea; Gardner Symons, who shows a spirited "Coast of California;" Carl Rungius, who has several interesting mountain views; Frederick B. Williams, represented with two glowing Grand Canyon landscapes; E. Irving Couse, whose carefully studied paintings of Indians add a human note; Elliott Daingerfield with his dramatic "Stormy Sunset on the Pacific Ocean," De Witt Parshall, Ben Foster, Ernest L. Blumenschein, Thomas Moran and Edward H. Potthast, who treat various aspects of the Far West.

In addition to this very interesting collection, there is a traveling exhibition of paintings by some of the best-known American painters, such as Edward Dufner, Charles Warren Eaton, Philip L. Hale, Birge Harrison, Childe Hassam, C. W. Hawthorne, Robert Henri, Henry Salem Hubbell, Hayley Lever, Jonas Lie, Leonard Ochtman, Robert Spencer and J. Alden Weir.

In one of the smaller galleries has been installed a collection of bronzes by the late Louis Potter, who devoted himself to the interpretation of the life and customs of American aborigines. These bronzes are not only faithfully ethnological, but are animated by that true spirit of art which in each case has discovered the most characteristic trait of the subjects represented.

News and Notes.

An exhibition of recent studies and portraits by Hovsep Pushman, the Armenian painter, will open tomorrow at the Mission Inn, Riverside, to continue for two weeks. It will be brought to Exposition Park, Los Angeles, in November.

An interesting feature of the current number of the Century magazine is an illustration by Benjamin Brown from his etching, "Venetian Sails," to accompany a poem of the same title by Ruth Comfort Mitchell, formerly of Los Angeles.

Hans Ledeboer, the Dutch artist, who recently opened a studio at No. 5542 Bayer street, Los Angeles, did some of the most striking of the interior decoration of the Netherlands pavilion at the San Francisco exposition, for which he last week received a gold medal.

Antonia Melvill, who has been away from her studio in Blanchard Hall through the summer months, has returned from her extended sketching trip. The studio will now be open to friends and art lovers every Saturday afternoon from 3 to 6 o'clock.

Helena Dunlap, busy for several months among the Indians at Taos, has returned, laden with sketches and studies, to her studio in Whittier. She is planning to send several large canvasses to eastern exhibitions.

The sixth biennial exhibition of American oil paintings held in the Corcoran Gallery, Washington, will open December 17, to continue to January 21, 1917. One hundred and twelve pictures, aggregating $196,810, have been sold from the first six exhibitions. This year Richard Miller is one of the jury of selection.

The Spanish Arts Society of Riverside will tender a reception at Mission Inn to Mr. and Mrs. Hovsep Pushman on the evening of Monday, October 16, the occasion being the opening of Mr. Pushman's exhibition. All artists, art lovers and art connoisseurs are cordially invited to be guests of the society on that evening.

SCHOOLMASTER'S OBLIGATION.

Should Make Scholars of Boys and Teach Need of Faith in Men.

[The Atlantic:] Every master has under his own hands the living ambitions, the young possibilities, of scholarship; and he should content himself with making scholars of his boys and sending them out into the world, merely warning them against the chill of the world, and bidding them keep faith alive when they pass through the valley of the shadow of college. Instead of doing this they often adore the false gods of the universities. The distortion of our schoolmasters' imagination can be traced immediately to the power of an illiterate public, which conceives that universities, not schools, are the seat of education, and which has put the schoolmaster in chains. It says: "We want our boys to go to college;" it says: "Of course, there must be schoolmasters to prepare the boys." The illiterate public—by which I mean all America—does not know that four years of good schooling are more valuable for any boy than a whole lifetime of college. The schoolmasters do not realize this. When they find out, being men of character and force and very much more in earnest than the college boards, they will rearrange their own curricula and will persuade the colleges to accept the new regime.

THE MINIMUM WAGE LAW.

[Review of Reviews:] Three years ago the National Civic Federation undertook a thorough study of the problems underlying the proposal to fix a minimum wage by law in this country, and also of the actual experience of those States which have adopted such laws. A Minimum Wage Commission was appointed, whose members were Alexander J. Porter (chairman,) president of the Shredded Wheat Company, and Percy S. Straus of R. H. Macy & Co., New York, representing employers; James W. Sullivan of the Brooklyn Typographical Union and H. J. Conway, secretary of the Retail Clerks' International Protective Association, representing labor; Mrs. Lyndsay Van Rensselaer and Miss Thalia Newton Brown of the women's department, National Civic Federation, and Dr. Lee K. Frankel, Ralph M. Easley and Miss Gertrude Beeks (secretary,) representing the public.

In July, this commission's report was made public in the form of a pamphlet entitled "The Minimum Wage by Law," issued by the National Civic Federation from its headquarters in New York City.

The commission secured the services of Miss Marie L. Obenauer, an export investigator in economic fields, who made a thorough and impartial survey of the situation from a world-wide standpoint. Miss Obenauer's analysis forms a part of the report.

MOVEMENT IN THIS COUNTRY.

Minimum-wage laws in this country apply to women and children only, in certain industries. The principle of such legislation is that the State, in the exercise of the police power, and working through commissions or wage boards, shall determine a wage below which it shall be illegal to pay workers in certain industries. The chief factor considered by these boards is the cost of living.

Minimum-wage laws have been adopted in eleven States; Arkansas, California, Colorado, Kansas, Massachusetts (which led the way, in 1912,) Minnesota, Nebraska, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin and Oregon. Miss Obenauer calls attention to the fact that although nearly a fourth of our States have such laws, many of them in effect for several years, experience with actual minimum-wage determinations is limited. She praises the deliberation with which commissions have acted—making preliminary surveys of women-employing industries, and securing data as to the cost of living, in order to make determinations with the fullest possible knowledge. But she emphasizes the fact that minimum-wage legislation is still on trial in this country.

The Massachusetts commission, for example, made its first award effective in August, 1912, two years after it was created; and then the determination applied merely to the brush industry, which employs only 2000 workers, including men, women and children. The California commission consumed three years before putting into effect its first determination, relating to minimum piece rates for women in certain phases of the canning industry. The longest period of experimentation in minimum-wage determination which affected any considerable number of workers in a single industry is to be found in the retail stores of Oregon.

The Oregon law creating an Industrial Welfare Commission has been carried to the United States Supreme Court as a test case to determine the constitutionality of minimum-wage legislation; and both advocates and adversaries eagerly await a decision.

Miss Obenauer declares that "no one familiar with the accumulated mass of evidence concerning the wages of women at work will deny that in spite of the increased wage rates in recent years a menacingly large number of adult women are failing to earn enough while at work to sustain themselves in health and comfort, to say nothing of providing for the days of involuntary unemployment."

Women constitute a fifth of the total number of wage earners in manufacturing industries in the United States. In a government investigation, it was found that of 86,000 women wage earners 16 years of age and older (in certain manufacturing and mill industries,) over 40 per cent. were receiving less than $6 a week and approximately three-fourths were receiving less than $8.

The National Civic Federation's commission in the course of its investigation found that the most conspicuous feature of the minimum-wage controversy is the fact that capital and labor do not mark the lines of cleavage. In California, organized labor openly, actively, and officially opposed minimum-wage legislation, as also did the organized wage-earning women. On the other hand, the Central Labor Union of Brooklyn, N. Y., favors such legislation as a means of bringing to an end as speedily as possible "most inhuman conditions so prevalent in all underpaid industries." John Mitchell, former president of of the United Mine Workers of America, and present chairman of the New York State Industrial Commission, favors a minimum wage for the two obviously defenseless classes, women and children, in the lowest paid occupations. Yet President Gompers states that the American Federation of Labor "is not in favor of fixing, by legal enactment, certain minimum wages;" for it "has apprehensions as to the wisdom of placing in the hands of the government additional powers which may be used to the detriment of the working people." But the Federation of Labor is in favor of fixing the maximum number of hours of work for minors and women; and it regards children, women minors anyway, and perhaps women, as wards of the nation who have no political rights and have not thus far protected themselves industrially as the men have.

Employers show little, if any, more crystallization on the subject. A recent report of the National Manufacturers' Association is adverse to minimum-wage legislation, and believes the proposal economically unsound; yet the Retail Dry Goods Associations of San Francisco and of California indorsed the proposal before it became a law in that State.

Some of the objections of employers were stated by Walter Drew, counsel of the National Erectors' Association, at a public meeting held by the Civic Federation's minimum wage commission. He emphasized the practical difficulties in connection with the necessity of putting into force a minimum wage based upon the cost of living. "Who shall say that a certain thing is a necessity, a comfort, or a luxury?"

In Wisconsin it was expected that $7 would be the minimum established; but an investigation determined that it should be $9.20; and is was found impossible to enforce that standard.

Naturally, too, employers look with little favor on the prospect of more investigations of their books and more dislocation of their factory or store organization.

The judgment of this Minimum Wage Commission is that experience is not yet sufficient to justify any conclusion. "It seems for the present the part of wisdom for all the States not having minimum-wage laws to watch those which have enacted such statutes, for a reasonable period before adopting similar legislation."

The commission will continue its own studies, but indorses Miss Obenauer's suggestion that a joint investigation be conducted by the Department of Labor and the Department of Commerce.

OVER THE SEA.

Field Marshal Von Hindenburg, chief of the German General Staff, celebrated his sixty-ninth birthday, at headquarters on the eastern front on the 2nd inst. The Berlin newspapers all publish articles exalting him as the greatest German of the age and expressing the fullest confidence in his ability to lead the German army to victory.

Gen. Kuropatkin, who led the Russians in the disastrous war with Japan, and who has recently been at the head of an army on the northern front, has been appointed Governor-General of Turkestan. He has had fifty years of military service with his country. His new post means his retirement as far as the war is concerned.

The Duchess of Roxburghe, formerly Miss May Ogden Goelet of New York, has been offered the position of mistress of robes to Queen Mary of England, according to reports in court circles. This position is considered one of highest honor by the great ladies of the British empire.

Jon J. C. Bratianu, Prime Minister of Rumania, who now occupies such a prominent place in his country's affairs, is the son of the famous statesman M. Jon Bratianu, who, in 1877, was largely instrumental in causing Rumania to join forces with Russia against Turkey. Educated as an engineer, in Bucharest and in Paris, M. Bratianu, on his return from the French capital, entered the service of the Rumanian state railways. He early, however, turned to politics, and in 1895 secured a seat in the chamber as a member of the Liberal party, of which his father had for so long been leader. In 1913, during the invasion of Bulgaria, a policy he had strongly urged, he was a captain in the army. On the fall of the Majorescu Ministry, after the signing of the Treaty of Bucharest, M. Bratianu returned to power as head of the present Liberal Cabinet.

Hipolito Irigoyen, who became President of Argentine October 12, may prove to be a political success, but there is no indication that he will be a success socially. The Argentinians expect their Presidents-elect, their Presidents and ex-Presidents to give big balls and receptions and generally to add to the gaiety of the capital. President-elect Irigoyen has been a terrible disappointment in this respect. But for one short visit to Buenos Aires in July, he has remained shut up like a hermit in his ranch house in the country since his election. The people have been anxious to see him. Pictures of him have been printed, but everyone knows they are fakes because there isn't a picture of Irigoyen in existence.

ITALIAN OBJECTIONS TO ALCOHOL.

[Review of Reviews:] So general has been the idea that Italy offered an example of the comparative harmlessness of the moderate consumption of alcoholic beverages that many will be surprised at the views expressed by Signor Leonardo Bianchi, member of the Italian Chamber of Deputies, in Nuova Antologia (Roma.) The writer estimates the average annual value of the wine produced in Italy during the five-year period 1909-1913 at nearly $300,000,000 annually, and he notes that five-sixths of this wine product was consumed in the home country. This is in marked contrast with France, where a considerable part of the wine produced is exported to foreign lands.

Regarding the quantity of alcohol absorbed in a day by many Italians, Signor Bianchi says:

From an investigation begun two years ago in a private clinic by interrogating the patients, it was found that much greater quantities of wine were consumed than could be properly oxidated in the system, the result being serious injury to health by slow intoxication. Many of those who were questioned declared that it was usual for them to drink a bottle of wine at each of their two repasts, although this quantity did not, in most cases, produce any symptoms of inebrity, because they were so thoroughly habituated to the use of wine.

Now, two bottles contain on an average from one and a half to two liters of wine, which, estimating the alcoholic contents at 12 per cent., gives from 150 to 200 grams of alcohol as the usual daily quantity, not taking account of the greater amount of wine commonly consumed on festival days. Such a quantity of alcohol, especially for those who do not perform hard work, is certainly toxic, for according to the most thorough researches it cannot be oxidated and hence is valueless as an aliment, circulating in the blood and exercising a deleterious influence upon the nervous centers and the entire economy of the organism.

As to the hygienic effects of alcohol, the writer proceeds to cite a number of somewhat divergent opinions; but, whatever may be asserted as to occasional or temporary beneficial results upon the physical organism, he considers that we have ample proof of the injurious effect it exercises upon the psychic functions. Instead of increasing mental vigor, alcohol depresses it, and finally paralyzes it, in spite of the apparent but deceptive stimulation its use produces at the outset.

That Italians more rarely exhibit the symptoms of acute alcoholism than do those of other nationalities is, in this writer's view, a result of the century-old habituation of the race to the use of alcoholic beverages, from Roman times downward. In his opinion, however, this toleration of alcohol has been bought at the expense of a deterioration of the race in the chief wine-growing regions.

While acute alcoholism is comparatively rare, chronic alcoholism, the slow intoxication induced by the continued absorption of alcohol, is only too common, diminishing the resistance of the organism to fatigue, reducing the power of consecutive action and, through the constant irritation of the nerve centers, developing a tendency to litigiousness.

An important economic aspect of the question has been rendered especially prominent in the course of the war. While the annual value of the wine consumed in Italy may be put at $250,000,000, that country does not produce enough grain to supply its needs, and it has been necessary to import grain from abroad to the value of from $60,000,000 to $100,000,000 annually.

This condition was rendered more acute than usual last year because of a poor harvest and by the exceedingly heavy freight charges on imports. If now a part of the ground and the labor at present devoted to viniculture were given to the cultivation of grain, Italy would be the gainer by securing a true food product, instead of a mere stimulant, and by expending at home the sum she is now obliged to send abroad in order to supplement her wheat supply, which is now insufficient for the needs of her people.

At least no encouragement should be accorded to an extension of viniculture, nor should those vines that have been destroyed by phylloxera be replaced. Moreover, every effort should be made to produce a type of vine containing a low percentage of alcohol, and the exportation of Italian wines should be fostered in every way. In Russia, England and America they would be at present valuable substitutes for the stronger alcoholic beverages. The export of raisins should also be encouraged to a great extent. Energetic action is necessary; for a country which is obliged to have recourse to foreign lands for bread, meat, skins, wool and so many other indispensable things, while continuing to be an essentially agricultural country, and which is obliged to consume its own wine product, although this possesses but little value for its health and well-being, can never be a prosperous country.

THE RELIGIOUS RAMBLER.

October "Drive" Upon American Churches in Behalf of Armenian Christians—For Observance of October 21-22, by Jews, Catholics and Protestants, Said to be Greatest Effort Yet—Want 175,000 Sermons on One Day—Tremendous Machinery of Religious Propaganda Put Behind Cause of Turkey's Victims—Russia Has Opened Door for Relief.

OF ALL the "drives" of the world war, none is more significant, or, in a way, more spectacular than that now being prepared for by the religious forces of America in behalf of the Armenians and Syrians, who are perhaps the worst sufferers from the war. In all the brilliant annals of American philanthropy there probably has never before been an altruistic effort of greater magnitude than that which is now under way, with October 22 set as the time to "go over the top," as the soldiers say.

Every one of the more than 175,000 ministers of religion in the country has been directly asked, by a personal communication, to participate. The President of the United States has called for the observance of October 21-22 as Armenian relief days. The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, of which Cardinal Gibbons, Rabbi Wise and leading Protestants are members, has supplemented the call by an elaborate propaganda. The Federal Council of Churches, representing all Protestant denominations, has addressed a letter to every minister whose name is on file. The Laymen's Missionary Movement has lent a staff of its secretaries to direct the "drive." Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavor societies and Epworth leagues, already interested in Armenia, will co-operate with their local churches. The religious press is supporting the call.

BY HUNDREDS OF MILLIONS.

Assuming that all clergymen make use of the abundance of sermon material for the occasion that has been supplied them, and that the average sermon contains 3000 words, we have a prospect of more than 500,000,000 words to be uttered on October 22 in behalf of the persecuted Armenians. Add to this the addresses and talks before Sunday-schools and classes and young people's societies and women's meetings and special gatherings, and the volume of appeal becomes staggering.

As a feat of propaganda the effort is notable. The aim is to lay the case of the Armenians upon the heart of America. To that end, the church is the most efficient method of approach, if direct results are desired. Broadly speaking, it is the church people who do the benevolent giving of the country.

The remotest corner of America is reached by the church. There are no longer any considerable number of unchurched communities. Where politicians never go, there little churches are to be found. Moreover, the members subject themselves voluntarily every week to the influence of the preachers' messages.

Any cause that gets a wholesale hearing in the churches is also powerfully reflected in the public schools and in the secular press. So from all angles, the case of Armenia is likely to be considered in all its aspects during the present month. These ancient people, whose home was beneath Mt. Ararat, have been preeminently the martyr church of Christian history. Since they are a church, rather than a state, they have a peculiar claim upon Christians.

WORST SUFFERERS.

Despite all that has been printed about the Armenian atrocities, the worst remains unwritten. The Moslems have been guilty of peculiarly revolting horrors which may not be told in the English language. The 10,000 Armenians who were recently slain in the neighborhood of Tarsus were less cruelly treated than the more than 1,000,000, mostly women and children, who were "deported" from their homes, most of them to die a "natural" death from starvation, exposure and hardship.

Final figures cannot yet be given, because Turkey has rigidly shut all doors, but it is known that at least 750,000 persons have perished, and as many more in imminent danger of death. Almost one-half of the total Armenian population of the world has been wiped out.

The plight of the survivors, driven into desert places or into regions remote from their homes, beggars description. The Germans in the faculty of the German High School at Aleppo, Syria, sent an appeal to the German Foreign Office to put an end to the deeds of its ally. Three paragraphs from the letter are pertinent:

"In face of the horrible scenes which take place daily near our school buildings, before our very eyes, our school work has sunk to a level which is an insult to human sentiments. How can we masters possibly read the stories of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs with our Armenian children, how can we bring ourselves to decline and conjugate when in the courtyards opposite and next to our school buildings death is reaping a harvest among the compatriots of our pupils?

"Girls, boys and women, all practically naked, lie on the ground breathing their last sighs amid the dying and among the coffins put out ready for them.

"Forty to fifty people reduced to skeletons are all that is left of the 2000 to 3000 healthy peasant women driven down here from Upper Armenia. The good looking ones are decimated by the vice of their gaolers, whilst the ugly ones are victimized by beatings, hunger and thirst. Even those lying at the water's edge are not allowed to drink. Europeans are prohibited from distributing bread among them. More than 100 corpses are taken out daily from Aleppo."

AS AUTHORITIES SEE IT.

The most succinct and conservative account of this whole terrible Armenian business is that prepared by the American Board of Foreign Missions, which has had its principle work among the Armenians:

"Of the 2,000,000 Armenians in Turkey one year ago, at least 1,000,000 have been killed, driven from the country, forced into Islam, have perished on the way to exile or been deported to Northern Arabia.

"The Armenians in the army were first brutally put to death; then followed those who had purchased exemption and nearly all able-bodied males above 12 years of age. After this the remaining men, women and children were sent out upon a journey of months, mostly on foot, to the arid regions of Syria and Northern Arabia.

"These hopeless, helpless refugees were forced out from their homes with little preparation for the journey and with no shelter from the storms or protection from the cold or heat.

"A man following one of these caravans for twenty-five miles reported to a United States Consul that he counted over 500 dead bodies [illegible] the road.

"Children by the hundred were cast into rivers by their parents to save them from mortal suffering.

"A United States Consul reported that he saw refugees brained with clubs because they, when starving, crowded their guards for food.

"Armenian professors in American colleges, with university degrees from European and American universities, were tortured by pulling out their hair and beard and fingernails, by hanging them up by the arms for hours, and by beating. They were afterwards killed."

RUSSIA OPENS THE GATE.

By the Russian victories in the Caucasus it was made possible for American relief to get into Armenia by the back door. Already $1,000,000 has been actually sent by the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, of which Charles R. Crane, 70 Fifth avenue, New York, is treasurer. This committee has been extraordinarily successful in having its relief distributed, and by Americans. Ambassador Morgenthau, who is a member of the committee, estimates that it will take $5,000,000 to succor the Armenians who remain alive. American missionaries who have been driven from their work in Turkey by the war are now returning, by way of Russia, to administer relief.

What the results of the October "drive" upon the philanthropy and the purses of Americans will be may not be known for several weeks; but the effort is on a huge scale that is really a new demonstration of the capacity of the churches for service.

Culinary sidelights on society.

All the women who count are going into for something worth while, these days, other than the frivolities; butterflies emerging from the chrysalis of luxury are finding all manner of unaccustomed delight in the twentieth-century rennaissance of efficiency. The groups and individual young society folk, above, include a number of brides and brides-to-be. Among them is Miss Margaret Lantz Daniell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Swift Daniell, whose coming marriage to Austin Jenison of Lansing, Mich., will be a brilliant society event.

SOCIETY.

A DEBUTANTE'S LETTER.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 13.

It is unlucky to have a proposal of marriage on Friday, the 13th, because one is bound to be beset with [illegible] misgivings. One would feel plucky accepting or refusing it, don't you know, because either way it seems sure to be the wrong thing to do. So Kathleen and I, who live in dread of that sort of thing, knowing how irresistibly charming we are, decided to keep exclusively feminine company on that day—and there you are, you see, that it's probably the unluckiest thing we could do after all. Isn't life difficult? So if we die old maids, you will know how it happened.

A perfectly awful thing happened to poor Molly the other day. You know how she despises stomachic [illegible]—it is generally an unredeemed bachelor of long-standing, that takes this form. Well, when that handsome Charlie H., who had been paying her considerable attentions and seemed so charmingly to answer all her requirements, took her driving in his seven-passenger car (which was certainly one of the desirable attributes,) she discovered herself in the throes of a bilious headache. And it had the meanness to attack her complexion, which is fatal to romance. When it merely affects the eyes, forming dark interesting rings it isn't nearly so calamitous. Molly says she disgraced herself utterly. She finally had to confess to that preposterous head and ask to be taken home. Another good romance gone bang. Molly, the healthy, radiant Molly, now seriously considers that it is her doom to accept the next stomachic lover that comes along. She could never be so unsympathetic again.

That quiet little Mrs. Hogarth, who during the six months she has been here, has been so retiring, but who excited our interest with her lovely [illegible] face and her sombre little air of distinction, is trotting a handsome nephew round just now with considerable pride. He was through the battle of Marne and is said to be incapacitated for further service, but to all appearances he is in[illegible]. Saw them at tea at the Alexandria recently, but she showed no disposition to respond to the affectionate glances some of the girls were turning her way. Shockingly selfish to keep a prize like that to herself! One society matron tactfully inaugurated an enveloping movement and made certain overtures inviting surrender but was met with discouraging courtesy. "My nephew is here for rest and quiet. It is very kind of you, but thank you, not just yet."

Really, you know, a handsome warrior nephew with a military title is a more valuable social asset than a million or two just now.

Isn't it lovely how we are all prepared to slave and freeze for France. The Croix Rouge Francaise affair in Central Park has attracted the ardent devotion of all society. There is a glamor about France, isn't there? We can wax decorously sympathetic about Serbia and toss a bill or two into a flag on the appeal of Emmeline Pankhurst. We can thrill to cultured interest and generosity about Poland, aided in our efforts by a master pianist. We can [illegible] in with well-bred self-control and make a few amiable purchases at British Red Cross affair. We can warm up perceptibly and purchase [illegible]-bearing lottery tickets on behalf of Belgium with considerable enthusiasm, but for La Belle France, wonderful, cultured, artistic, emotional, piquant France, there is no limit to our devotion. Society women have worked, planned, begged, borrowed, appealed, like Trojans for the French affair and come weather what may, they will gladly freeze [illegible] down and ruin their best frocks at Central Park, to make it a brilliant success in every sense of the word. All this week husbands and fathers have been fluttering the remaining cheques in their cheque books for France.

Politics are getting really smart, aren't they? This women's Hughes alliance is a hive of social busy bees just now, preparing for the reception of the special train on Wednesday. It is an interesting sign of the times that all the women coming on that train are distinguished self-supporting wage-earners, notwithstanding that $2 banquet at the Alexandria. They absolutely repudiate the seven trunks apiece alloted to them by an imaginative Chicago reporter. And notwithstanding the [illegible] fashions, notwithstanding the social eclat of the women of the organization, it is observed that dress plays a very minor part in their interests just now. You never saw such a neat, inconspicuous lot—dark colors, neat toques, [illegible] skirts, sensible boots.

Heard Dr. Aurelia Reinhardt at the Friday Club. With poetry for her theme, her optical-illusion gown of black stripes on white, which was positively bilious when she wiggled (which she does a great deal,) [illegible] me. This is an awful confession, for it is smart to admire everything about her just now, including her elocution-school voice and her disconcerting, coy smiles, which somehow don't go with her [illegible] appearance.

Which reminds me, hats are very assertive at the Friday Club just now, many of them pyramids of [illegible] and tinsel. And Mrs. Simons is wearing white aigrettes. This [illegible] the cruelty-to-birds people, but somebody suggested they might not be real. And that worried the real-or-nothing section nigh to death.

Remember Frank Tolly of Del Monte? Handsome Sir Galahad and that sort of thing; bachelor, eligible, noncommittal. Ruth has a bad case on him, goes round telling everyone how this is the true [illegible] thing. She will never love another. It is to be hoped he decides it—either way.

[illegible] how "studio teas" are coming out again? They are a [illegible] test of friendship. One [illegible] a person with all their heart and soul to go to a studio for tea. I'd rather clean a neglected [illegible] stove myself, or something like that.

Are you wet or dry, darling? With [illegible] two sternly-inquisitive dowagers investigating our opinions on the subject and pouncing on us if they are "wet," we are living through troublous times. It is [illegible] to see those ladies with club affiliations trying to hedge. [illegible] I know if I once [illegible] in a dry parade nothing [illegible] bath of champagne could save me. So I had better stay at home [illegible] to milk.

[illegible] the musicians claim that [illegible], especially in symphony orchestra form, is so elevating, [illegible] it be more tactful if they won us to prohibition via this seductive path, rather than by an unpleasant controversial election in which people think such horrid things about each other.

Awkward thing happened to little Mrs. Nolans, the merry widow, last week. Nice Middle Western visitor arrived with letter of inroduction, 'phoned the widow and was asked out to "afternoon tea." Which means 4 o'clock in society nowadays here, but evidently no such ungodly hour in visitor's home town. So just when the visitor had been given up for lost and Mrs. Nolans was dressing for a cosy little dinner for four of that intimate, exclusive variety, up turns the Middle Western visitor at 6:30 p.m., prepared to stay forever. She stayed. It ruined the party.

Well, so long, cherie; it is evidently advisable to be explicit as well as discreet these days.

Love from your flippant

BETTY.

The society buds and matrons are taking up the art of cooking! It is not a pose, but actual, systematic class work, where one listens first to a lecture on economy and the proper way to concoct a certain dish and then gets the practical experience with the egg-beater and spoon and various ingredients that somehow turn out in heavenly hash or delicious croquettes and marvelous pudding.

If one doubts it, he has but to drop into the Y.W.C.A. any Wednesday morning and revel in the sight that greets his eyes—Mrs. Thomas Weeks Banks, who was Martha Woolwine, hidden away in a snowy big apron and measuring out with infinite care certain things which later come from the kettle an exquisite brown and melt in your mouth—and she is quite as alluring in this atmosphere as in the ballroom, all tulle-y and bouffant and shimmery.

Mrs. Frank Griffith of golf fame has also joined the class, and handles the spoons with quite the same agility as she displays in sending the little white ball skimming from its tee.

Mrs. Charles Seyler, who recently as Miss Marie Stoops came to California for a visit and caused a prominent bachelor to desert the ranks of unmarrieds and join the benedicts, is also acquiring the art under Mrs. Charles E. Pearce, at one time instructor in domestic science in Columbia and a woman who has taught many of our debutantes their first knowledge in baking.

Mrs. Willitts J. Hole had to enter the Tuesday dinner class—the Wednesday class is quite full. Mrs. Hole's dinner parties are famed in local circles, but she wants to "brush up" on all the new dishes. After all, cuisines, like libraries, (and quite as important—merely a matter of mental or physical digestion) need constant additions to one's favorite liking, and this efficient matron, who graces equally well society, a club presidency or a board meeting of the Y.W., of which she has been head for four years, is exceedingly happy in her cooking class Tuesdays.

Mrs. Edwin Locksley Stanton, one of the most popular brides of the year, and her sister by marriage, Mrs. Forrest Stanton, are devoted attendants at the class, as are Miss Dorothy Daniels and Miss Margaret Lantz Daniell, both of whom will become brides ere many weeks.

Miss Daniell, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Swift Daniell, of Manitou avenue, is to marry Austin Jenison of Lansing, Mich., some time in January, the service at St. John's Episcopal Church to be one of the most fashionable happenings of the future. And when she goes East, Miss Margaret wants to take charge of her own domicile and keep house in the old-fashioned way, with modern methods, and have the fun of accomplishing it without a maid—at least at first.

Miss Daniels who is a University of California girl and a Gammi Phi Sorority member, will, when she goes as Mrs. Vanderleck to her future husband's big ranch at San Juan Capistrano, take up the management of her own home without fear, for she can do meat to a turn, make salad divinely and knows just what should accompany it.

Miss Eleanor Johnson, a Junoesque type of girl and a stunning brunette, was graduated at Marlborough and is now getting practical experience in the Y.W. cooking class, which Miss Olive M. Phillips comes over from Pasadena to attend regularly. Fay M. Neely, Miss Lacy, Miss Lillian Shattuck, Miss Ina Wilson, Mrs. H. L. and Miss Bassett and Miss Mary Grant are of the number who want to know how to run their own homes on economical lines and "get the meal" if they choose. And such fun as they are having while learning.

This particular coterie of domestic science students so prominently identified with the gayeties of local life are very intent on achieving. It is true, one heard exclamations of surprise when Mrs. Pearce told them that soup stock should keep three weeks; or, upon holding before them a wire cup used for frying doughnuts and croquettes, remarked that she had it fifteen years—well, the possibilities are great in innumerable avenues. When asked the price of an iron receptacle for certain use, Mrs. Pearce replied, "Really, with the way iron is going up, I do not know what it could be bought for now—I have had it so long." Thus the girls got their lesson in the high cost of living.

This is but close-hand proof of the serious trend that pervades society. The world over, the women who count are finding worth-while interests, and the butterfly is emerging from her chrysalis of teas and dinner dances and will-o'-wispy pleasures and frivols to sail forth on new wings—quite as beautiful and gauzy and a heap stronger—to assume her share in the modern, present-day renaissance of unalloyed usefulness and efficiency toward a world of high idealism and realism.

Retrospectively, Milady has found in the intellectual and altruistic her particular magnet for entertainment the past week. For with the departure of Ignace Jan Paderewski and his wife, Mme. Helena, came the distinguished poet-philosopher from the far East, Sir Rabindranath Tagore, whom society flocked to hear. Despite the fact that the bestowing of the Nobel prize on this son of a prince "took his shelter from him," Sir Rabindranath refuses to be wined and dined and feted. But he will accept a bunch of withered flowers from a child and press the blossoms to his heart—as he did at the conclusion of his readings at Trinity Thursday afternoon. The whirl of pleasure stopped sufficiently long to hear him, and at both his programmes, leaders of social and club life comprised a large part of the audiences. Noted were Mrs. Joseph Francis Sartori, Mrs. Randolph Huntington Miner, Mrs. Ernest A. Bryant, Mrs. Allan C. Balch, Mrs. Willis H. Booth, Mrs. Horace B. Wing, Mrs. Sumner Hunt, Mrs. Frank Hall Moon, Mrs. Matthew Sparks Robertson, Mrs. Will A. Clark, Mrs. William Irving Hollingsworth, Mrs. A. H. Busch, Mrs. Shelly-Tolhurst, Mrs. John Haynes and prominent women without number.

And now that the city has fallen under his spell of logical, dynamic philosophy and Tagore has gone on his way, there is still another notable to entertain, Mischa Elman, for whom a large reception will be given Wednesday night at No. 3201 South Figueroa street, by the college of music of the University of Southern California. Over 1000 cards are out. All through the winter men and women high in the affairs of the country—artists, diplomats and other notables—are due to visit Southern California, which, with the "coming out" of several lovely debutantes, insures a variety of brilliant motifs for entertaining.

Miss Eleanor MacGowan will make her debut at a reception to be given by her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Granville MacGowan, at their home, No. 3726 West Adams street, between the hours of 4 and 7 Saturday, November 4. Nearly 1000 invitations are now being issued. Almost immediately following will be the dance at the California Club the following week, a courtesy Mr. and Mrs. James Calhoun Drake and Mrs. Mary Longstreet will extend the daughter of their most intimate friends. The second week later Mr. and Mrs. Dean Mason are to compliment Miss MacGowan with a particularly stunning affair, the plans for which are yet tenative, and Mrs. George J. Denis is another gracious hostess who will aid in making this popular young lady's debut season one to long be remembered. Already her calendar is beginning to fairly bulge with prospective events.

Mr. and Mrs. Boyle Workman are to introduce their daughter Eleanor to their friends at a tea dansant November 11, and she, too, will be besieged with social compliments as she is launched socially.

Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Kerckhoff have not yet decided upon the date for the coming out of their daughters, the Misses Gertrude and Marion Kerckhoff. But it will be this season.

Such a bevy of attractive buds there hasn't been in years.

Mrs. MacGowan is one of the quartette of leaders who are to manage the Los Angeles Country Club dinner dances this winter, dividing honors with Mrs. Joseph Francis Sartori, Mrs. William S. Hook, Jr., and Mrs. Ernest A. Bryant. Wednesday evening, November 1, will set the pendulum swinging at this popular rendezvous, when society almost en masse will gather, either in parties or at Dutch treat—no host—tables, to usher in the fortnightly parties—thoroughly informal affairs. Miss Eleanor and the other debutantes will come in for special attention there the season through.

The Amateur Players, also, are to add gaiety to the winter with their presentations of much-discussed plays and sketches. Their maiden effort of 1916 is set for the evening of November 6, at the Gamut Club. Hankin's "The Cassilis Engagement" has been cut from four to three acts, with roles cast to Mrs. Ham of Whittier and her son, to Mrs. Norman Macbeth, Mrs. Muma, Mrs. Henshaw, who is the daughter-in-law of Judge Henshaw of San Francisco and a beauty, by the way, and Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Vallely. There remain yet a butler and two footmen to be chosen and the dramatis personae will be complete. Already dinner parties are being arranged for the appearance of these artists, all of whom shine in the social firmament.

For Thursday have been set two especially large weddings and both at the same hour—8:30 o'clock. Miss Anita Thomas and Wells Morris are to have a church service at St. John's, with long processional and its show of lovely bridesmaids and matron of honor, ushers and elaborate music. The personnel of the bridal party includes Mrs. Paul Grimm, matron of honor; Miss Louise Hunt, Miss Amy Busch, Miss Lucille Ballard, Mrs. Roy Silent, Miss Helen Jones and Mrs. Elliott Palmer. Robert Pell of New York, a classmate of the groom-elect at Princeton, will be the best man, and Messrs. Paul Grimm, Roy Silent, Livington Wolf, Garretson Dulin, Joe Banning and Charles M. Nebeker are to usher. The decorative motif is to be elaborately carried out in rose, both at the church and later at the Los Angeles Country Club, where supper will be served.

A second marriage of the day is to be that of Miss Annette Stose and Dr. Martin Nathaniel Nelson, who will plight their troth in the West Adams Presbyterian Church. Mrs. J. B. Dudley of San Francisco will attend her sister as matron of honor and there will be a quartette of bridesmaids, numbering Miss Gladys Moore, Miss Pauline Rives, Miss Margaret Couch and Mrs. William Herbert Sholes. Little Sylvia Hammer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hammer of Oeonta Park, will be flower girl. Some of the ushers are coming from the East, and Clayton Luckey and William Herbert Sholes of this city will complete the list, with Dr. Fayette best man. The decorative scheme is to be Dresden, which offers unusual scope.

It will be the pleasure and privilege of Southern Californians to entertain the coming winter more prominent easterners than ever before. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney are coming to the Coast and will be, during most of their visit, in Pasadena, at the Huntington. Vincent Astor and his young wife, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ogden Armour, the well-known E. T. Stokesbury family of Philadelphia, Mr. and Mrs. S. Seward Webb of New York, Col. and Mrs. Max C. Fleischmann and the Julius Fleischmann family of Cincinnati are but a few who have already signified their intention of coming. Already at the Maryland, Pasadena, G. A. Schwartz, Mrs. Frank Gordon, Miss Isabelle Gordon, Raymond Carboy, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bower and Mrs. George D. Gregory of Chicago have found a delightful temporary residence, the list of arrivals to be enlarged when Mr. and Mrs. Fred H. Lawson, Mr. and Mrs. William Ashley Magie and their daughters, the Misses Lolita and Mildred Magie; Mr. and Mrs. Walter C. Peacock, the W. J. Keene family and Mr. and Mrs. Homer T. Sargeant arrive.

The autumn season at the Maryland opened last evening with a dance, sans formality. They are to have a flower show from the 26th to the 28th inst., inclusive; an election-night movie dinner the evening of November 7, and a big anniversary celebration about November 23. William Ramsay Heberhardt has come from New York to stage the special social happenings and there have been made some radical interior improvements in the hotel.

Is Santa Monica to be the fashionable center, at least in summer, for the smart set? That is what society has been asking since they heard Friday that Mrs. I. N. Van Nuys had taken over the handsome big home erected on Adelaide drive, the Palisades, by Arthur H. Fleming of Detroit and Pasadena. It is just next to the R. C. Gillis home, where Mrs. John Percival Jones resided the past summer and dispensed continuous and gracious hospitality for Chevalier and Mrs. Frederick McMonnies, who, by the way, are now established for the winter in New York.

Mrs. Van Nuys is going to build an extra wing on the newly-acquired place and develop the grounds, with the intention of making an all-the-year-round home. Her two daughters, Mrs. Richard J. Schweppe and Mrs. James Rathwell Page, with their families, will naturally be attracted there, and it is rumored a colony of intimates is to follow their lead and buy homes overlooking the ocean.

Reverting to Mrs. Jones, much of the coming week's entertainment is to be devoted to this grand dame now at the Darby, until she leaves in early November for Hawaii. Mrs. Willis H. Booth is to have fourteen ladies at luncheon honoring Mrs. Jones, though the date is not yet determined, and Mrs. Horace B. Wing is also planning a courtesy for her.

For London Writer.

In the atmosphere of repose and beauty that pervades the home of Mrs. Horace B. Wing on Elden avenue, about a dozen friends will meet tonight to dine, honoring Mrs. Elsa Barker of London who, following a delightful visit in Hollywood, is to leave this week for New York. Most Angelenos are familiar with this capable woman's literary efforts and when the news was spread that she had arrived in Southern California many affairs were arranged in compliment to her. Mrs. Wing, always a charming hostess, will tonight use a rare Modern Crown Derby service of rich yellow and yellow flowers for decoration, and her courses will alternate turquoise blue and yellow in perfect accord with the color scheme. Bidden are Wayland Smith, Dr. and Mrs. Maddock of India, Alfred Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Willis H. Booth, Mr. and Mrs. Willoughby Rodman, Mr. and Mrs. James Keeney and the latter's sister, Miss Jacques, who is a writer of plays, and Roy Jones. Mrs. Jones went East to accompany her daughter, Miss Dorothy to Radcliffe and Gregory to Harvard.

Mrs. Wing is head of drama study of the Amateur Players, and with her interests finds much in common with the literati. Dr. Burton, the drama authority from Minnesota University, was her guest during his recent vsit, and other notables have from time to time enjoyed the hospitality of the gifted matron.

For Early November.

Cards are out for a formal dancing party which Mrs. A. P. Kendis of No. 1710 West Sixth street is to give the evening of November 4. Several hundred will attend, and the hostess has asked to assist her in receiving a large number of friends. Elaborate decorations are being planned, and a Dutch supper.

Four Years Old.

Fourteen little playmates yesterday afternoon assisted Dorothy Marshall, the winsome daughter of Mrs. Arthur B. Marshall of No. 133 North Robinson street, in celebrating her fourth birthday. Very merry were the kiddies as they played the various games, especially "blind-foldy" donkey. And when they were too tired to play longer, dainty refreshments were served them at a table done in pink and centered in a birthday cake surmounted by burning pink candles.

Ante-nuptial.

For Miss Mary Anderson, who will become the bride of William A. Jepson next month, Miss Hortense Monlux gave a smart yellow-and-white luncheon party, followed by Five Hundred, yesterday at her home, No. 2703 West Twenty-third street. Only sorority girls of the Gamma Tau Delta were bidden. The rooms were aglow with brown baskets of calendula tied in fluffy tulle bows, and yellow candles in coverings of the same color lent added beauty. At the exquisitely decorated table were Miss Anderson, Miss Josephine Anderson, Miss Grace Hedrick, Miss Josephine Hamlin, Miss Ruth Hensler, Miss Marjorie Malone, Miss Marguerite and Miss Myrtle Nimmer, Miss Margaret Orth, Miss Olga Orth, Miss Helen Root, Miss Malinda Seay (also a bride-to-be,) Miss Fleta Smith, Miss Lucile Norris, Miss Lucy Smith, Miss Mildred Sprague and the hostess.

To Marry.

As was hinted in these columns six weeks or more ago, Miss Conchita Sepulveda, the daughter of Judge and Mrs. Ygnacio Sepulveda of No. 2639 Monmouth avenue, is engaged to a northerner, Charles Henry Chapman of San Francisco, and will be married some time within the next two months. It was while she was the guest of Mrs. Phoebe Hearst of Pleasanton that the fair Angeleno saw much of Mr. Chapman, who was graduated from Amherst and came to Northern California several years ago to establish a business. They are to make San Francisco their home. Miss Sepulveda is to return to the north tomorrow to continue her visit and make plans for her wedding. Judge Sepulveda was for many years attache of the American Embassy in Mexico City and his daughter lived either there or in Los Angeles, with the exception of the time she spent in school at New York City.

Sorority Picnic.

Forgetting their studies for a few brief hours, forty friends and members of the Zeta Tau Alpha Sorority of the University of Southern California last Wednesday motored to the summer home of Mrs. Charles Sumner Kent at Playa del Rey, where they enjoyed a delicious picnic dinner. Miss Helenita Lieberg, Miss Clifton Patton and Mrs. Kent, who is a Zeta Tau Alpha patroness, gave entertaining readings, augmented by splendid piano solos by Miss Wilhemina Rector, and impromptu songs by Mrs. Kent, Miss Fan Hunter and Miss Mildred Snowden.

This is the second of a series of the sorority's "rushing" parties.

Mrs. Catherwood Returns.

Her friends are welcoming Mrs. Jane Catherwood from a three-month Jane Catherwood from a three-trip through the East. The doctor, who accompanied her, has gone on to Seattle for a month. Mrs. Catherwood, who is a prominent musician, will shortly begin her studio evenings again.

Enjoyable Dinner Dance.

The social activity of the Sierra Madre Club for the fall and winter season opened last evening with a brilliant and sumptuous dinner dance, attended by 250 guests. A riot of fall blossoms decked the tables and most fascinating music was played by the club's own orchestra. The revival of the dances quickened the activities of the club's hosts and hostesses, not a few choosing last night for their dinner giving, with the result that many large parties enjoyed the affair.

Spanish Dinner.

The inspiration for a large Spanish dinner given by Mrs. Paul Robinson of No. 1831 West Twenty-first street, during the week were the Native Daughters of the Golden West and their husbands. The affair took place in the lodge hall on Hill street. The tables were decked in red and yellow blossoms, carrying out the Spanish colors, and covers were laid for sixty guests. Dancing was the diversion following dinner.

Dinner for Wednesday.

The twelve members who will serve as the Los Angeles Athletic Club's new board of entertainment commissioners for the 1916-17 social season are: William W. Woods, Ralph C. Hamlin, John F. Powers, Charles Sumner Kent, George T. Cline, Harry G. Holabird, Dr. George H. Kress, L. Frank Baum, Andrew Mullen, Dr. Albert Soiland, William E. Bush and Robert B. Armstrong. They were elected by popular vote at the club last week.

Official announcement of the election of the new board will be made at the formal dinner and dance which the club will give next Wednesday evening. The announcement will be made in the form of a ceremonial which will include the turning over of the "keys" of social government by the Mayor of Rowansburg, whose office tenure expires with the incoming of the board of commissioners.

Because of the keen interest in the election, it is expected that an unusually large crowd will gather at the dance Wednesday. The list of reservations already has been exceptionally heavy.

Sharing interest with the club election were numerous dinners and luncheons this past week, which served to make the clubhouse a center of life. Among the week's entertainers were Harry A. Lord, who was host at a dinner in the blue room last Monday evening, twenty-five guests being invited; Louis M. Cole, whose luncheon in the blue room Thursday was for forty guests; R. D. Maxwell, who presided at a luncheon in the main dining-room Thursday for fifty guests, and L. P. Morphy, who assembled twenty guests at a luncheon Friday in the blue room. An elaborate dinner was given by Mrs. D. H. McCartney Tuesday, her guests numbering six. W. H. Wise entertained with a luncheon Tuesday in the Sheritan room, his party including six. Mrs. R. L. Stanton presided at a dainty luncheon Wednesday, five guests gathering with her in the Ladies' Annex. Thursday evening W. J. Dennis was host at a dinner in compliment to six friends. The Ladies Annex list of entertainers also included R. C. Chambers, M. P. Wheat, Mrs. Charles Teague, Mrs. Charles Sumner Kent, John Birkholz, Homer Laughlin, Jr., Mrs. George H. Kress, John S. Daggett, Mrs. C. G. Shipman, Mrs. B. H. Lanck, Miss Florence E. Bartlett, Frank Ryan, Mrs. Randolph Carter, Mrs. M. S. Vosburg, Mrs. Ernest Clark, Mrs. J. P. Percival, Miss Ruth H. Greppin, Mrs. Thomas R. Lamb, Mrs. H. H. Hillman, Mrs. Robert Farquhar, Frederick H. Rindge, Dr. A. J. Murietta and Charles H. Guild.

Share Honors.

At her home, No. 1410 Sherman drive, Mrs. Birney Donnell gave a large bridge tea yesterday in compliment to two honorees, Mrs. Horace Donnell (formerly Dolly Ellsworth of Oak Knoll) and Miss Barbara Wiley of Boston, whose engagement to Rev. John Christfield Donnell, rector of St. Thomas's Episcopal Church of Newark, N. J., the blue bird—of happiness—told at a stunning tea her aunts, Mrs. T. Eley Patterson and Miss Margaret Wiley of West Thirtieth street, gave Wednesday.

At yesterday's affair pink roses entered with artistry into dainty decorations, hundreds of the blooms being showered in holders about the rooms, where were scattered tables for sixty players. Later, tea was enjoyed, the tables being transformed by imported cloths and floral centers into fetching places for the covers.

Assisting were Mrs. W. E. B. Partridge, Mrs. D. G. Cotter, Mrs. W. E. Deering, Mrs. J. A. Colegrove, Mrs. Emmet H. Wilson, Mrs. Irving R. Bancroft and Mrs. Paul Hoffman.

Miss Wiley, who is to join her father, Sterling Price Wiley, at their Boston home shortly to prepare for her wedding, set for early winter, is to be inundated with social attentions up to the day of her departure. She has been in Alaska and in August came to Los Angeles to visit her kinsfolk.

Hallowe'en Tea.

A perfectly appointed Hallowe'en bridge tea was contributed to the week's social calendar yesterday, when, at Beverly Hills Hotal, Mrs. Fred Osburn entertained eighteen friends. Cards were played in the tea room, where the yellow decorations blended beautifully with the tropical plants which are a feature of the pergola tea house. Bidden were Mrs. Henry Walton, Mrs. F. P. Newport, Mrs. William Brooks, Mrs. C. O. Whittemore, Mrs. Henry Clay Breeden, Mrs. Thomas Marshall, Mrs. M. E. Armstrong, Mrs. Edward Clark, Mrs. Irwin, Miss Leigh Whittemore, Miss Pearl Colard, Miss Edna Cooper, Miss Ray Robeson, Miss June Whittemore, Mrs. Frederick Beaudezart, Mrs. William Sawyer, Mrs. Joseph Newell and Miss James.

Away a Month.

Their friends are welcoming to their home, No. 341 Norton avenue, Mr. and Mrs. John MacLean Rugg, who have spent the past month at Del Monte and San Francisco.

In Prospect.

Miss Dorothy Kate Trask, one of the most popular of the brides-to-be, who will marry Benjamin F. Goodrich, Jr., the 26th, will be the complimented guest at a pre-nuptial which Miss Aileen Beach now has in the planning.

Married.

Mrs. Alesa A. Waite announces the marriage of her daughter, Charmion, to John A. Conley, on the 2nd inst.

Twice Married.

At the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Levy of No. 1704 Roosevelt avenue, Miss Florence Levy will today for the second time in a week become the bride of Oscar Fond. A former marriage by a justice not being recognized by her people, their daughter consented to a second ceremony, and will at 1 o'clock, in the presence of fifty guests, again plight her vows. In a gown of white tulle over satin, enveloped in a full veil forming a train, this bride will carry lilies of the valley and bride's roses. Immediately after the nuptials a reception will be held, no cards being issued. Later the doubly married pair will go to San Diego on their honeymoon tour. They are to reside in this city.

At the Jonathan Club.

The Jonathan Club's entertainment committee, of which Herbert L. Eaton is chairman, is making plans for a series of entertainments during the winter months, which are bound to awaken the Jonathans from the social lethargy into which of late years they have fallen, and make the club one of the particular bright spots in the winter's gaieties.

The feature of the Jonathans' social calendar is the supper club, to meet each Monday night commencing the 23rd inst. Of course, only members and their friends will be eligible to the Monday-night affairs. Supper will be served from 10 o'clock till 1 in the morning, in the great main dining-room, with dancing to music by the club's orchestra. The entertainment committee is considering engaging a well-known dancing instructor, who, if her services are secured, will give an hour before the supper to those who are uncertain of their mastery of the new steps.

It is the belief of the entertainment committee members and their friends that the supper club will become most popular.

Next Thursday evening will be held the first of a series of membership club dinners. On this occa-

Bailey of No. 813 Kensington road, became the bride of J. J. Osmer. Miss Marie Bailey of Fresno, in a frock of pink taffeta, and carrying white rosebuds, and Miss Inez Bailey, in white taffeta, with the pink buds, served as bridesmaids, and little Virginia Bailey as flower girl and little Jaline Bailey, the ringbearer, completed the bridal party. The last two were in white, Jaline carrying the ring on a pillow of white satin. The service, read by Rev. J. M. Schaefle, was solemnized in the living-room, done in pink and white shaggy chrysanthemums, while the dining-room was in carnations and ferns. Only relatives and friends were present. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. H. M. Bailey.

Mr. and Mrs. Osmer are to reside in Long Beach.

OUT-OF-TOWN SOCIETY

Pasadena.

WITH the coming of the first rain and the brightening of the flowers and the daintily crisp autumn weather social life in Pasadena begins to awaken from its long summer rest. The advance guard of the winter host of tourists is arriving and on every hand is heard the gossip of the coming events. That the Crown City is to have an exceptionally brilliant social season is the belief of all. The interesting social life which centers about Pasadena's elegant hotels was inaugurated in a small but prophetic way by a dance last evening at the Maryland, the first of a series of week-end dancing parties which will extend through the season. The dancing was preceded by a number of dinner parties and as usual the crowd of guests was augmented by a number of resident society folk.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Dillard of No. 735 Summit avenue entertained Wednesday evening in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Willet Bruner of Los Angeles, the latter a sister of Mr. Dillard and until her recent marriage to Mr. Bruner a resident of Pasadena. Music was a feature of the evening with violin solos by Carl Dillard and Watson Thomas, accompanied at the piano by Miss Mildred Glidden. Later refreshments were served. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Bruner, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Glidden, Mr. Edwards, Miss Mattie Barnett of Glendale, Miss Eula Shoemaker, William Watson, Watson Thomas, Marion and Carl Dillard and Mr. and Mrs. Dillard.

Mr. and Mrs. George Stark of No. 1596 Corson street entertained Wednesday evening in honor of their niece, Miss Ethel Prosser, who was having a birthday. Pink cosmos with greenery was used in a pretty arrangement about the house and after the dinner there was a musical programme and a pleasant social time. Covers were laid for Mr. and Mrs. William Prosser, Mr. and Mrs. George Stark, Mrs. A. M. Isbell, Miss Ethel Prosser, Norman Prosser, Melverda Stark and Robert Dunn.

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Beckford, No. 1760 North Fair Oaks avenue, the former's birthday was celebrated Wednesday evening with a happy social gathering of friends and relatives. Among the relatives present were Mr. Beckford's mother, Mrs. S. F. Tennison, and his brother, W. L. Beckford, and family, with a number of others. A pleasing appointed dinner was served and later Mr. Beckford, the host, gave several songs, and games recalling days in a former home in Massachusetts were played. A number of gifts were received by Mr. Beckford, one a large and handsomely adorned birthday cake, made by Mrs. Beckford.

Miss Carolina Edith McKinley of Pasadena and Charles R. Clapp of Laguna Beach were married Tuesday evening at a beautifully-appointed ceremony at the home of the bride's sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Holman, No. 1539 East Walnut street. The ceremony took place under an arch of palms, with the arch and the altar decorated with white carnations. A white dove floated over the heads of the bridal party. The rooms were adorned with pink and white and the refreshments carried out the same color scheme. The bride's gown was white duchess satin with imported lace garniture. She wore a long veil caught with lilies of the valley, with lilies also ornamenting the skirt of her gown. Her flowers were bride roses. The maid of honor, Miss Nellie Clapp, wore pink society silk and carried pink carnations. The gown of Miss Nellie Coseboom of Long Beach, bridesmaid, was also of pink. Lloyd Coseboom was best man and Dr. Robert Freeman officiated, assisted by Norman Edwards. Mrs. Lewis Salisbury sang, "Oh, Promise Me," and Miss Leda Kellogg played the wedding music. The bride was given away by Mr. Holman. After the supper and informal reception Mr. and Mrs. Clapp left for a wedding trip, the bride's going-away gown being of brown lady's cloth, fur trimmed, with hat to match. After their wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Clapp will make their home at Laguna Beach, where Mr. Clapp is in business.

Among the early arrivals in the winter tourist colony are E. L. Lee and Mrs. A. E. Frost and her two interesting daughters, Miss Carol F. and Miss Hallie H. Frost. They have taken a house for the season at No. 940 Del Mar avenue. They come from Morris, Ill.

Mrs. Horace Nixon of Woodbury, N. J., and sister of Mrs. Mary B. Elliott of Drexel place has, with her three daughters, been visiting here several months, with much social attention while in Pasadena, especially for the younger people of the visiting group. The party have just left for home and will stop in Indianapolis to visit former Mayor and Mrs. Denny, parents of Mrs. Nixon and Mrs. Elliott.

South Pasadena.

LARGELY attended by women of South Pasadena, Pasadena and Los Angeles club and society circles, a reception given by Mrs. C. C. Browning of No. 1327 Diamond avenue proved to be one of the most successful large affairs of the current season. Assisting the hostess in receiving were Mrs. Horace McBride of Los Angeles and her daughter, Miss Browning. The decorations of the Browning home, which proved a particular source of pleasure to the over 100 guests, were carried out in a yellow motif, yellow chrysanthemums being used in abundance.

Ferns and palms attractively banked about the walls of the Woman's Clubhouse formed a most attractive setting to a delightful dance given Saturday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Torrance Welsh of Marengo avenue in honor of a large company of their friends. Guests of the Welshs were Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Childs, Mr. and Mrs. Harry A. [illegible]yer, Miss Maria Beverly, Dr. and Mrs. R. H. Newcomb, John Dagget, John Staats, Brian Welch, Henry Wetherby, Robert Smith, George White, Herbert Lockwood, George Earley, Dr. and Mrs. McKellar, Parish Barker, Huntington Barker, Miss Janet Christy, Miss Edith Sterling, Miss Blossom Hoyt and her house guest, Miss Myra Morgan of Pasadena; Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Hibbard, Miss Marjorie [illegible], Miss Beatrice MacDonald, Miss Bernice Robinson, Dallas Speers, James Nichols, all of Los Angeles; Miss Tillie Bauer, Harry Machin, Glen Garwood, Mr. and Mrs. Martin Slabin, Thomas Sanson, Bruce Spencer, Edwin Bauer, Miss Louise Macdonald, Miss Marguerite Perry, Miss Gladys Newerf, Miss Helen Bradbury, Miss Maud Speir, all of South Pasadena; Miss June Morris of Bairdstown.

John C. Hamm of No. 1300 Lyndon street has announced the engagement of his daughter to Harry W. Rannow of Anaheim. The marriage will not be solemnized till after the beginning of the new year. Miss Hamm entertained Saturday evening with a slumber party in honor of her cousin, Miss Helen [illegible] of Humboldt, Kan.

Miss Kathleen O'Brennan, the well-known lecturer, was the honor guest Saturday evening at an affair given by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Babcock of No. 1217 Stratford avenue. Miss O'Brennan greatly pleased the large number of invited guests present by her excellent rendering of the subject, "The Creation of a National Music."

Saturday evening Dr. E. J. Johnston of No. 1418 Fremont avenue was host at an elaborately-appointed 7 o'clock dinner given in honor of Miss Ray A. Alten and O. M. Crawford, who are to be married on the 18th. The dining-room was a bower of pink roses and ferns, from which kewpies were suspended. A large cut-glass bowl of the new Los Angeles rose was the centerpiece. The place cards were hand-painted kewpies. Dainty rose baskets with bon-bons with pink tulle bows were the favors. Following the dinner the remainder of the evening was spent in playing five hundred. Those present besides the honor guests and host were Miss Freda Jeffers, Walter Mann, James N. Blake of Los Angeles, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Worden of Santa Ana; Mrs. Marcellus Meredith, Miss Georgia [illegible], Miss Florence B. Johnston and Miss Martha S. Evans of South Pasadena.

Pink carnations and greenery formed an exquisite background for a much-enjoyed bridge luncheon given Tuesday afternoon by Mrs. Otto Arnold of No. 1945 South Marengo avenue. Carrying out the pleasing color motif the place cards at the luncheon tables were hand-painted in the form of pink carnation petals. Those bidden were Mesdames George MacInnis, Mrs. [illegible], Mrs. Sidney Lee Grover, Mrs. [illegible] Heflin, Mrs. Louis Adell, Mrs. [illegible]redge, Mrs. Homer Sharpe, Mrs. [illegible] Behm, Mrs. E. T. Riley, Mrs. Metcalf and Mrs. Collier.

Two large affairs are being planned for within the next fortnight. On Saturday, October 21, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Groesbeck of No. 1100 Fair Oaks avenue will entertain with an evening of cards. Invitations have been issued by Mr. and Mrs. Edward Barden of No. [illegible] road for a "yachting dance" to be given Friday, the 27th. In keeping with the motif of the dance the invitations are decidedly nautical in character. "One bell" has been named as the time when the festivities are to start, while crossed flags, one the official pennant of the South Coast Yacht Club, of which Mr. Barden is a member, fly at the top of the card.

—And there never were so many to choose from as there are right now at the Style Shop.

—We have seen much selling of goods in our time, being one of Los Angeles' first stores. We have seen some great demands for desirable merchandise that is likely to hurry away, but what has happened already this month in the way of coat selling has been a revelation to us.

—Any one who has any doubt as to Los Angeles women appreciating good styles, let her come in today and see women buying coats. And let her note what good coats they are buying. Particularly—

The Wool Velour Coats At $18.50

The Broadcloth Coats at $29.50
—They are trimmed with silky plushes and velvets. Full flaring models, some belted; all full length, and are light, but warm.

—Plain and fur trimmed styles at $25.

It Is Good to Know That There are Plenty of Serge Dresses at Low Prices
—There are twenty new styles, fresh from their packing cases at $18.50, $19.75 and $25—and here are a few newnesses about them:

A. BARRON
LADIES' TAILOR

Tailor-mades for the Fall and Winter Season may be classed in three varieties—the severely plain tailored suit, the sport suit and the fancier and more dressy styles.

Mr. Barron, who is in close touch with style trend, says that the half length and three-quarter suit jacket will be the popular lengths.

The plain tailor-mades will be made in either single or double-breasted style with some flare to the skirt part of the coat.

Notched collars will prevail for these models and the lengths range from 32 to 36 inches.

On account of my new location, I will make special reduction.

PIMPLY? WELL, DON'T BE

People Notice It. Drive Them Off with Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets

A pimply face will not embarrass you much longer if you get a package of Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. The skin should begin to clear after you have taken the tablets a few nights.

Cleanse the blood, the bowels and the liver with Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, the successful substitute for calomel—there's never any sickness or pain after taking them.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets do that which calomel does, and just as effectively, but their action is gentle and safe instead of severe and irritating.

No one who takes Olive Tablets is ever cursed with "a dark brown taste," a bad breath, a dull, listless, "no good" feeling, constipation, torpid liver, bad disposition or pimply face.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are a purely vegetable compound mixed with olive oil; you will know them by their olive color.

Dr. Edwards spent years among patients afflicted with liver and bowel complaints, and Olive Tablets are the immensely effective result.

Take one or two nightly for a week. See how much better you feel and look. 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.

FACT AND COMMENT.

There is reason for believing that many of the heretofore uninformed and deluded persons who have been working for the passage of the so-called "land taxation" amendment appearing on the ballot of the forthcoming general election on November 7 are coming to realize the utter viciousness of the single-tax plan in the form in which it is presented this year. The first real break in the solidity of the single-tax onslaught of 1916 came recently in the form of a split in the ranks of the Los Angeles Single Tax League, a large number of the members of this organization refusing longer to stand for the revolutionary proposals incorporated in the initiative measure foisted by radical and unthinking single-taxers onto the voters this year.

Those rebelling proceeded to organize the Southern California League for Home Rule in Taxation and propose to at once begin securing petitions to an initiative bill in the form of an enabling act to allow cities, counties and districts to experiment in taxation methods on their own hook, just such a measure, in fact, as was defeated by the people of the State in 1912 and again in 1914. The members of the league, however, are pledged first of all to bring all the influence and power they can exert for the defeat of the dangerous single-tax amendment to be voted on this year. The ranks of the organization, it is reported, are being swelled every day by recruits from all over this end of the State.

To the saner single-tax advocates, who have taken this defensive step in the interest of California's progress and prosperity, must go out the gratitude of all thoughtful persons, regardless of the objections they may have to the league's propaganda to call another costly election on the "home-rule" measure. The particular plan advocated by the less radical of the single-taxers has nothing to recommend it, but it provides only for experimentation in taxation freaks in individual localities, whereas the initiative bill framed this year would on the first of January, 1917, less than three months from today, force California under a single-tax law more revolutionary than any ever tried out or even seriously considered in any part of the world.

Who Would be Hurt?

The house-to-house canvassers who are going around arguing for single tax in the great campaign that is being waged to put this vicious measure through have a set speech which they recite over and over like so many parrots. "Put single tax on the statutes," they say, "and the big land owners will have to pay all the taxes." What an argument in Los Angeles and Southern California! There is no reason in the first place for thinking that there can be any substantial progress in a community in which the big land tracts are so taxed to death as to discourage private initiative, but setting that aside, this assertion is as stupid as it is misleading.

Real estate has been the greatest commodity in the entire modern history of Los Angeles and its section and anything that, like the single tax plan, must in the very nature of its operation turn realty values topsy-turvy is a direct body blow at the very economic stability of the Southland. The ones who would suffer the most from the instantaneous chaos in property values

COMPLETING WAREHOUSE.

With the view to securing the products which are grown in the North Whittier Heights section, the Salt Lake Railway is just completing the erection of a large warehouse at Hartville station on the North Whittier Heights tract for the C. C. Collins Company of Santa Ana. The company expects to handle walnuts, beans and other products grown in the section and will install a modern bean cleaner. The warehouse is 75x120 feet in size and is of substantial construction. During the coming year the North Whittier Heights Citrus Association contemplates the erection of a substantial packing-house near the Collins Company's building for handling the lemons and oranges from the 1200 acres of orchards which have been planted in this section during the past four years.

APARTMENTS LEASED.

E. W. Cason & Co., associated hotel brokers, report the leasing of the leasing of the Leighton apartments, No. 427 South Alvarado street, to Mrs. V. E. McClenehan for a term of seven years, calling for a given total rental of $30,000. The property is owned by Henry and John H. Carty of Santa Barbara. Mrs. McClenehan formerly conducted the Alberta apartments at Long Beach.

Big Impetus.

RICH VALLEY ACREAGE WILL BE OPENED UP.

Railway Lines to East and West Sides of New Imperial Domain to Make Calipatria a Most Important Shipping Center—Large Area is Now Being Planted to Cotton and Industry is Booming.

CALIPATRIA, Oct. 14. — The principal topic in the northern part of Imperial Valley just now is the new railroad from Calipatria to Westmoreland, ties for which are now arriving at this place by the trainload. As soon as this west-going branch from the Southern Pacific present main valley line through Calipatria is finished, a second branch tapping the great east-side districts is to be started. Thus, Calipatria, already the agricultural, commercial and industrial center of the wonderful empire which has been opened up to development in this end of the American Nile country, is to become at once an important railway center.

The building of these two branch roads will bring the area of fertile land directly tributary to Calipatria up to 100,000 acres. Both branches will tap teritory now cut up into prosperous ranches, as well as undeveloped lands rich in potentiality and needing only proper transportation facilities to make them thoroughly adaptable to immediate cultivation and improvement on extensive and profitable lines.

As the result of these railway developments, a high-class passenger depot is now included among the important improvements definitely assured for Calipatria in the immediate future. Additions to the already extensive freight facilities of the town are also in contemplation, and a large packing-house, which has been talked of for some time, is now declared to be a "go," having become more than ever a necessity in the light of forthcoming shipping activities. The plans call for a building of the most substantial construction arranged for the handling of fresh, salted and smoked meats, as well as other by-products of the valley.

MARVELOUS GROWTH.

The growth of Calipatria in the two years that have elapsed since the dirt began to fly for its first building has been nothing short of marvelous. The new town now boasts both a national and a State bank, more than a score of brick business concerns of different kinds, two lumber yards, two large warehouses, a $45,000 school, two churches, many attractive homes and several prosperous industries. Two cotton gins have already been completed here and within a few months the Balfour-Guthrie interests will build a modern cottonseed oil mill for the handling of the products of their own and other great cotton tracts.

The achievements of Calipatria have had a solid basis in the actual development that has taken place around the town since the syndicate of owners that is subdividing the former railroad lands of the northern part of Imperial Valley acquired the 47,000 desert acres comprising these great holdings. The change in ownership was the signal for the development not only of the old-time railroad domain but of the alternating sections homesteaded by settlers who had been awaiting just such a great day. One of the significant events in the history of Imperial Valley was the recent completion of the last unit of the No. 3 Water Company's irrigation system for the watering of approximately 50,000 acres of Calipatria's vast growing domain.

FUTURE OUTLOOK.

Carl F. Schader, one of the principal developers of the new north-end lands and who has had charge of the townsite activities of Calipatria, gave an interesting insight recently into the progress of the district, as well as the outlook for future advancement. "High prices for cotton, corn and cattle are now bringing prosperity to Imperial Valley's newest town," said Mr. Schader. "Short staple cotton is selling at 15½ and long staple at 20 to 22½ a pound. This insures a further large addition to the cotton acreage, already greatly increased during the year. There will be around 25,000 acres put to cotton in the Calipatria territory next year, according to present indications.

"Calipatria aspires to be the long staple cotton center of America in the years to come. The Balfour-Guthrie Company is now planting 10,000 acres in long staple. Leroy Little will plant 5000 acres to the same crop. Others are carrying out similar operations on a smaller scale.

"I predict that there will be 12,000 acres of barley in this end of the valley in the coming year. These

DELAY ENDED.

Big Apartment-house Held up Since August, Now Going Ahead.

Announcement is made that L. T. Mayo, who some time ago received the contract to build a four-story brick apartment-house for local interests at No. 339 South Grand avenue, will this week begin the excavations for this project. Construction was delayed at the time the contract was originally let in August through the discovery of soil conditions on the property involving the replanning of the foundations. The structure will cover a ground area of 123x122 feet, containing 200 rooms in three, four and five-room suites. It will cost about $90,000.

Application has been made at the city building department for a permit to erect a three-story brick apartment-house on Coronado street near Wilshire boulevard for Miss Ruby Cortner. The plans call for a structure of fifty rooms covering a ground space of 70x100 feet.

Work is to be started this week on a three-story brick hotel building for Fred W. Siegel on San Julian street between Seventh and Eighth. The contract was let during the past week for a two-story brick apartment-house to be built by Peter A. Giovani at No. 750 Crocker street.

INCOME BUILDINGS.

Three Flats at Pico and Fifth Avenue Among New Improvements.

Among the new flat buildings now being built in Los Angeles are three attractive structures for Fred Simpson at the corner of Pico street and Fifth avenue. The improvements were planned by Merriman & Neighbors and are of frame and a plaster construction. Each building contains two seven-room flats.

Contracts were awarded during the past week for the following flats in various parts of the city: Twenty-room flat for W. J. Summers at First and Mariposa; sixteen-room flat for Mrs. Eugenia Allen at No. 1240 Innes avenue; sixteen-room flat for E. S. Hancock at New Hampshire and Eleventh streets; sixteen-room flat for James White at No. 1537 West Twenty-third street, and sixteen-room flat for L. R. Tuttle at No. 573 Thirteenth street, San Pedro.

EAST SIDE SALES.

The McCarthy Company reports the sale of four lots in its New Terrace Tract, in Boyle Heights, as follows: Lot on Mott street, between Sixth and Guirado, to H. Gynn, $785; lot on Orme avenue, between Oregon and Stephenson, to R. Hoffman, $990, and two lots on Mott street, between Sixth and Guirado, $1550. The same company announces that E. C. Dimmick, a local builder, has started an eight-room house on Wilton place, north of Temple street, in its Wilton Heights tract.

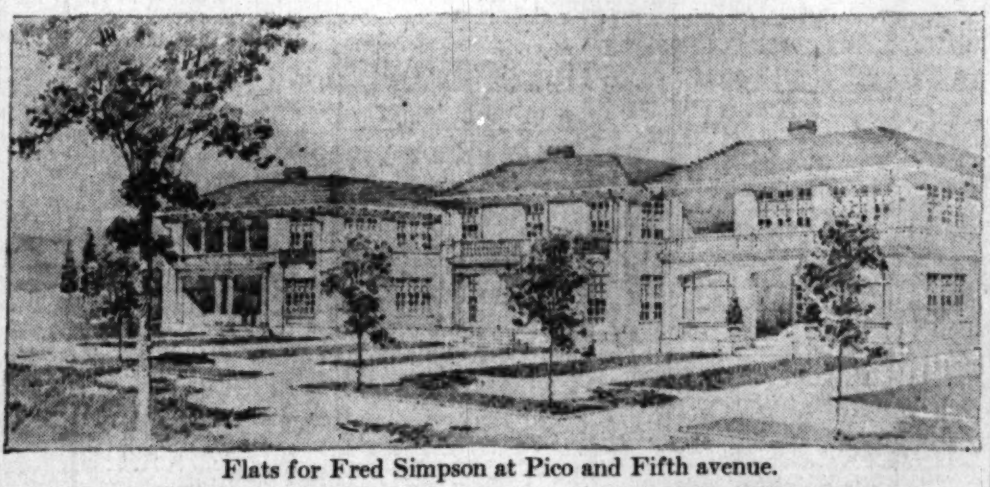
FILLS REAL NEED.

Growth of Angeles Mesa Responsible for New Business Center.

The steady residential development in the Angeles Mesa tract at the city's southwestern edge is reflected in the growth of the new business district that is springing up in the vicinity of Fifty-fourth street and Sixth avenue. Several new stores, an apartment-house and a motion-picture theater, aggregating in cost about $25,000, are now in course of construction in this locality. All of the building is of a substantial character.

John Crean is building a $6500 motion-picture theater, the first structure of the kind in the district. Mr. Crean is also owner of two brick store buildings being erected near by, costing about $4000 each. The apartment building is being put up at the southeast corner of Fifty-fourth street and Sixth avenue and is owned by Robert W. Jaffray. It will be two stories, of pressed-brick construction and is to cost about $10,000. There will be stores in connection.

Fifteen homes are now being built in the Angeles Mesa section at the present time, according to the Angeles Mesa Land Company, which is developing the property. These, it is announced, are being put up by owners, who have bought lots in the district during the past three months. To date more than 250 homes are declared to have been built in the section.



Flats for Fred Simpson at Pico and Fifth avenue.

Attractive improvements planned by Merriam & Neighbors for west side corner.

FOR SALE—

SIMPLY — CROWN HILL

Half a mile from Broadway
420 feet above the sea
Best renting district in town
Finest investment in Los Angeles

Are you going up on CROWN HILL today or tomorrow for a pleasant walk? It will do you good, and while there I wish you would look at the SOUTHWEST CORNER OF THIRD AND BIXEL.

You are not to see a mere piece of real estate, but to enjoy an artistic treat—a view from one of the most bewitching hilltop sites in all of beautiful Los Angeles. As you stand in front of this lot that you are 414 feet above the sea, 9 feet below the highest point on CROWN HILL and the HIGHEST POINT IN THE CITY, south of First and west of Main.

Now step up on the lot and observe the majestic mountains in the distance, then glance over toward the northeast, where, a little in front of you, an almost precipitous drop of nearly a hundred feet into the valley begins. And on up that rugged hill beyond, with its winding roadways that look like mere ribbons so far away, and houses that rise one above another, step by step, as far as the eye can reach. But what's the use! I can't begin to describe this wondrous panorama. All I can is: go and see the lot and the view from these heights. You won't forget it very soon. And remember that subtle fascination that seizes possession of you when you first visit CROWN HILL does the very same thing to everyone else—tenant as well as owner. That's what makes CROWN HILL the BEST RENTING DISTRICT IN LOS ANGELES. A high-class apartment-house on this corner would be one of the surest income producers in this whole city, considering its magnificent scenic situation and the fact that it is just about 10 minutes' walk from Broadway.

The corner fronts about 62 feet on Third street, and I can quote a very attractive price on it, provided you have about $5000 cash and come prepared to talk business, should the price suit.

But PLEASE don't ever mention exchange to me on ANYTHING. I am not dealing in property that has to be exchanged, and I don't handle exchanges, and I don't quote exchange prices at any time on anything in CROWN HILL.

Just to give you an idea of how scarce bargains are and how closely property is held on CROWN HILL, between Third, Sixth, Beaudry and Witmer, I will say that in those FIFTEEN square blocks there are just SIX below-market pieces offered. Pretty poor place for exchange prospects, isn't it?

CROWN HILL property is sold on these principles, and no other: FIRST, that when you buy on CROWN HILL you are getting the choicest and scarcest of QUALITY hill property in all Los Angeles, and SECOND, that MARKET prices there today are just about 50 per cent. of what they ought to be, and WILL BE in a few years. If you can't subscribe to this platform, CROWN HILL is NOT the place for you to buy.

HAPPILY MARRIED FOR FIFTY YEARS.

MR. AND MRS. ROBERT M. CROUCH GIVE RECEPTION.

Celebrate the Golden Wedding Anniversary by Entertaining More than Five Hundred Friends at Patriotic Hall—He is a Civil War Veteran.

Few couples under 70 years of age celebrate their golden wedding anniversary, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Crouch are of the few. Yesterday they received more than 500 friends at a reception at Patriotic Hall, No. 1816 South Figueroa street, in honor of their fifty years of married life. Mr. Crouch is 69 years old and Mrs. Crouch is 66. He is commander of the Admiral Evans Uniform Post No. 200 G.A.R., department of California and Nevada.

They were married at the farm of Mrs. Crouch's mother, Mrs. William Small, near Potosi, Grant county, Iowa, October 14, 1866. Mr. Crouch had just received his discharge from the Federal army. The bride and groom were 16 and 19 years old respectively, "I was rather young to marry," said Mr. Crouch yesterday, "but then I had had some experience in the Civil War and if anything will make a man of a boy war will. Neither one of us has ever regretted the occurrence."

Mr. Crouch enlisted in Company H, Twenty-fifth Wisconsin infantry, at the age of 16 years, January 4, 1864. He was in Sherman's march to the sea and also took part in the siege of Atlanta in May, 1865. He fought in fourteen battles and was in innumerable scrimmages. His brother, Andrew A Crouch, who will visit him this Christmas, also served in the Civil War, having enlisted when he was but 15 years old.

Mr. Crouch was formerly the president of the Bank of Hinton, Hinton, Iowa, and a prosperous farmer. He has been living in California for seven years and in Los Angeles five years.

There are three children in the family, Frank W. and Blaine Crouch and Mrs. Lillie M. McNeil. A feature of the reception yesterday was the songs by two of the grandchildren, Misses Ruth and Floy McNeil. Mr. Crouch is an ardent Republican and says that Hughes will be elected.

STEPHENS AGAINST BOROUGH ELECTION.

CITY ATTORNEY SAYS CHARTER SECTION IS INVALID.

Argues that it Throws Whole Taxing Power into Confusion and Violates Principles—Fails to See How Mandate Can be Issued by the Court.

Asserting that the borough provisions in the present city charter are unconstitutional, City Attorney Stephens yesterday filed with the State Supreme Court the city's answer to the petition for a writ of mandate to compel the Council to call a borough election in Wilmington district.

The City Attorney argues that essentials of the freeholder charter are made nugatory by provisions of the borough section, and that the section practically, if not actually, forms cities of the sixth class contrary to the Constitution.

He says the borough section throws the whole taxing power into confusion and violates fundamental principles. Moreover, there is no method prescribed by which the Council may select the names of candidates for Trustees although the charter commands the names of candidates to be printed on the ballot. The City Attorney does not see how a mandate can be issued by the court to call an election, which call must be in accord with circumstances and conditions which are impossible to be brought about.

"Not only did the City Council refuse to do that which it could not do," says City Attorney Stephens, "but it did right in not attempting, through an untenable construction of the law, to allow the first step to be taken toward putting the ill-considered provisions of this charter into effect. Years of litigation and the most favorable construction that could be given them could not make them workable or constitutional."

ROMANCES OF THE RAILROADS.

III—Howard Elliott, the Rodman, who Became President of the New York, Hew Haven and Hartford.

BY JOHN WALKER HARRINGTON

COULD you rise from the position of level rodman at $15 a month to the presidency of a great railroad, if you had started with such handicaps as did Howard Elliott, now the president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad?

Before he could have speech with his fellowmen, he had to get rid of a golden spoon with which he was born. He came of wealthy and worthy parents, and started life with a Harvard accent and a New England conscience. Although their names are not spelled alike, Howard Elliott is of the line of John Eliot, who preached to the Indians and got along with them very well. The success of Howard Elliott was largely due to the fact that he treated all men as though they were friendly Indians. Kipling has lilting lines to the general effect that "East is East and West is West and never the twain shall meet." As no railroad man ever quoted poetry so liberally as does Howard Elliott, it is no harm at all to dip into verse concerning him. East and West blend wonderfully in his virile personality. Eastern in his culture, western in his energy, he embodies the aggressive spirit of his ancestors.

Mr. Elliott was born in New York City on December 6, 1860. His father was Charles Wyllys Elliott of New York, Boston and various other places. His father was a writer of books and a contributor to magazines. Howard Elliott learned to read from the Atlantic Monthly. All his early associations were with the literary set, for, when he was born, the Golden Age of American letters had not yet waned. As a boy he remembers the grave face and the fringed whiskers of Horace Greeley. Not the white overcoat, nor yet the green-lined umbrellas, but one expression of the great editor, which often came to him, impressed the youthful imagination of Howard Elliott. It was: "Go West, young man, go West!"

True, he had met at his father's house such celebrities as George William Curtis, in New York, the learned editor of Harper's Weekly. Later, in Cambridge, he had come in contact with James Russell Lowell, and William Dean Howells. In his early days, he heard the reminiscences of the Brook Farm of Charles A. Dana and others of that community of idealists. His tender years were spent sitting at the feet of men of high ideals and lofty foreheads. He felt the influence of the Concord sages and the talk around the Elliott fireside was about Thoreau, Emerson and Hawthorne.

BECOMES A RODMAN.

Mr. Elliott entered the High School at Cambridge, gained the second year in the Lawrence Scientific School, and, in 1881, received his degree as a civil engineer. In his student days, however, he felt within him that yearning for the open spaces, God's country as they of the West say. In the summer of 1880 he became level rodman in Northwestern Missouri on surveys being made by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad.

The dominating trait of Howard Elliott is his thoroughness. He takes in all the surroundings of every project. As a rodman carrying a striped pole over the rough places in Missouri, he seemed to sense the unofficial motto, of that commonwealth, "Demonstrare mihi!" which by interpretation is, "Show me!"

Mr. Elliott, after his graduation at Harvard, went to Maryland, where he spent three months in prospecting for clay for the Mt. Savage Fire Brick Company. He soon followed the Greeley maxim, however, for, in the autumn of 1881, we find him in Burlington, Iowa, as a clerk with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company. For many a year, the interests of Howard Elliott were with the West. New England became his far country. There was within him the spirit which had sent so many of the men of the same strain from the eastern country to become part and parcel of the adventurous West. He discovered Iowa and found it good.

Mr. Elliott did not content himself with the humdrum duties of a clerkship. He reached out into the environments, which were part of the true art of railroading, for he deems his calling an art. When a rodman, he had spent many a leisure hour talking with the farmers, learning their points of view, and gaining insight into the ways of his fellow-men. Now, that he had inside work, he approached every office detail with the same thoroughness. He was transferred to Keokuk, the headquarters of two roads subsidiary to the C. B. and Q., where he served as cashier and clerk. He was then made assistant auditor and assistant treasurer of the two corporations. He held these positions with headquarters still in Keokuk, until 1890, when he moved to St. Louis. He had not been in the Missouri entrepot more than a week before it was recognized that Howard Elliott was one of the prominent citizens of that place. It seemed as though he had always been there. Inside of a month, he knew all the traditions of the community. He became a leader in its social life, and in the sports, as well as in its commercial activities. He was one of the live wires who had come from Iowa, and it was not until his new friends and neighbors grew to know him well that they recognized the Cambridge shibboleth.

Mr. Elliott was appointed in 1896 the general manager of the two railroad properties—the St. Louis, Keokuk and Northwestern Railway and the Chicago, Burlington and Kansas City Railway—becoming the lord of more than 1000 miles of track. He also was appointed an officer and director of various corporations connected with these transportation enterprises. He traveled extensively through the Middle West, the South, and several times he went through to the Pacific Coast. Elected the second vice-president of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad in 1901, Mr. Elliott was placed in charge of the maintenance and operation of 8500 miles of track. His official headquarters were in Chicago, although he continued to make his home in St. Louis.

BECOMES RAILROAD HEAD.

The railroad leader in October, 1903, was elected the president of the Northern Pacific Railroad as the successor of Charles S. Mellen, who had been chosen as the head of the New York, New Haven and Hartford. He transferred his ensign and also his house flag to St. Paul, where he entered with no less zest than he had in other communities into the life about him. He and his family found their new home a delightful one. Having made himself generally useful in the new habitat, he proceeded to get acquainted with all the country as far as his jurisdiction reached. The people along the line found in him a railroad president after their hearts. He saw to it that farming was duly promoted. When the agricultural interests had troubles about freight rates they talked to him about them as a man and a brother. He understood scientific agriculture and could talk with the zeal of a Johnny Appleseed. Pomology is one of his hobbies. Twice he was the president of the National Apple Show in Spokane, an honor which he has referred to in the same breath with his stewardship over the Northern Pacific. He also has the distinction of owning a fifty-acre orchard in the Yakima Valley, State of Washington.

While in St. Paul he took a deep interest in everything that had to do with Minnesota, which became his adopted State. In fact, he had established himself there as though he never intended to wander from it. He became a member of the Minnesota Commercial Club, of the Town and Country, the Informal Club and of the Nushka Curling and Skating clubs of St. Paul. He delighted in the ice palaces. He was happy on the toboggan slide, probably thereby becoming well prepared for what was to come to him in connection with a certain railroad in the East which was on that chute. In St. Paul, as elsewhere, he was ready and willing to talk about the railroad business to anybody who wanted to know. In consequence he was in much demand as an after-dinner speaker. All this was by way of training for that which was to be the supreme test of a man's life. Such was the Howard Elliott when, in 1913, he was called to the presidency of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

HE COMES TO NEW YORK.

It had been thirty-three years since Howard shouldered a level rod in Northwestern Missouri. He said in an address to some of his Harvard friends about the time of his coming to the New Haven that he had hoped he would not have to work all his life and had expected to have some leisure before then, but that fate had ordained otherwise. He was suddenly thrown into the vortex of a financial maelstrom. The New Haven had been belabored by the United States Department of Justice, by the activities of the Interstate Commerce Commission, by the public service boards of the various commonwealths and by most everybody that could take a crack at it, including the comic cartoonists. A property, which was regarded as likely to give down dividends as was the sun to rise and set, suddenly went dry. The gigantic schemes of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, a half century ahead of their age, fell into the discard. Here was a supposedly mighty road with credit sapped, its physical property dropping into decay, its morale in chaos. What was to be done?

Howard Elliott took leave of his St. Paul friends and for them and for him the parting was tinged with deep regret. His loyal employees were loath to let him go, and his farewell was spoken at a large banquet which they organized in his honor. Before he began his new duties he got into the woods for a time, fished a little, then played tennis much at seaside resorts, for it was said of him that he was always happiest when in full panoply of blazer and white flannels and rubber-soled shoes. He was fine and fit as a fiddle on that September 1, 1913, when he came to take charge of the New York, New Haven and Hartford, to succeed Charles S. Mellen, as he had done formerly in the Northern Pacific. He needed to be in the pink of condition for the new job. Those of us who saw him then were impressed by his clear and ruddy skin, his bright eye, his look of buoyancy and health—as he stood there talking to the newspaper men and at their request telling what he intended to do for the rehabilitation of the Sick Road of the East.

It is in the face of disaster that one shows what manner of man he is. The day following his accession the New York, New Haven and Hartford, already enveloped in hoodoos, had one of the worst wrecks in its history, in which twenty-one passengers of a fast express were killed and scores were injured. The anniversary recurring each September 2 is always a dark day in the life of Howard Elliott. On the day of the tragedy he received the newspaper reporters again. This time they saw him bent over a desk, pale, haggard, his face drawn by the cords of anxiety. He was coatless, and his shirt-sleeves were ripped and begrimed, for he had been working about the wreckage.

"I am ready to answer any questions," he said. "There is nothing to be hidden here."

There came relatives and friends of the men and women who had been killed in the wreck. He need not have seen any of them, but some of them he did receive, and personally expressed to them his sympathy, not as the railroad president, but as a man and a brother. Many there were who still remember him that day, who still recall his gentle words and acts of kindly courtesy.

It was a hard task to gather up the skein-tangled fate after that blow and try again, yet the new president did it with all his resolution and all his power. The railroad which had been the standby of generations, a certain source of income, as regular in its dividends as clockwork, had slipped from its financial gearings. It was demoralized at every point; its management no longer had the confidence of the public; its rolling stock was dropping to a rackety decay.

HOWARD ELLIOTT ON THE JOB.

Howard Elliott at once got down to the hardpan of business administration. Efficiency and economy were his watchwords, and the manner in which he obtained them astonished old-time railroad men. The first thing he discovered was that the railroad, what with all the money which had been spent on it, was fifty years behind the times as far as allowances for the natural expansion of trade and the increase of population were concerned. But all that would require money and where indeed could the necessary credit be obtained until efficient management had been demonstrated. The owners of the property, for there were then about 60,000 stockholders and bondholders, must be placated. Besides, there were about 600,000 persons in New England more or less dependent on the railroad for their freight and travel, whose interests were in the hands of the new executive. Within a few days the entire system felt the influence of the new head. The whole timing arrangements of the road came in for revision. New clocks were installed, and the employees had to have new watches, to be inspected by experts twice a month. It was found that there had been great waste in fuel. Firemen were dug up who were especially proficient in firing a locomotive with the least amount of coal and at the same time getting the maximum of steam. They were made inspectors of fuel. New efficiency bureaus of all kinds came into being. Even the stationery was reformed. Instead of formal letters with addresses and envelopes and interminable forms, short half-page or quarter-page memorandum blanks answered the purpose and saved time. The reduction in the stationery bill of the road the first year was $100,000. The economies in pins and letter clips amounted to a considerable figure. Some of the money saved by such economies went into the purchase of the powerful new locomotives which the road sadly needed. New equipment amounting to $10,500,000 had been authorized. The whole signal system was improved and elaborate tests of its efficiency made. The time for the runs of some of the trains was lengthened in order to insure better working hours for employees and greater safety to the public. One of the developments under the Elliott regime was the courtesy campaign, devoted to making travel on the New Haven a pleasure to every passenger.

Throughout the length and the breadth of the road Howard Elliott was traveling much these days. Whenever his private car was put on a siding there followed a conference. The station master, the ticket agent, the section foremen, all came to see him and talk things over. Easy and democratic in his manner, he soon won the friendship and the respect of the men of the New Haven. He has a remarkable memory for both names and faces, and keeps in touch with the individual employees in a marvelous manner. Even with all the stress he lays on the scientific management of railroading, Mr. Elliott does not lose sight of the human equation. He economizes in supplies to the limit, but not on men. He seeks at every point to advance the employees who have industry and initiative. When he shakes hands with an engine driver or a brakeman or a station agent, it is not from any desire to make a show of democracy, but because he is interested in every one connected with the system and desires to see him make the best of his opportunities.

It is said, too, that since he left St. Paul no employee of the Northern Pacific who came to New York ever omitted to call on Mr. Elliott or ever failed to meet a cordial reception from him. No matter how busy the president of the New Haven is he is never so much occupied in any affairs which he considers more important than giving a hearty greeting to those who worked with him in his days in the West.

His natural bent toward diplomacy stood him in good stead as head of the much belabored New Haven. Mr. Elliott knows well how to talk and how to write. He considered it important for a railroad president, situated as he was, to tell the public all about the problems of the New Haven. His was the faculty of putting interest into the dry bones of statistics, and, while he was bringing new "pep" into the system by day, he was sitting up late of nights at public banquets, club meetings and the like, making speeches. The other day I counted sixty pamphlets in one of the New Haven offices, containing speeches made by him before schools, colleges, clubs and institutions, all ably stating the case of the New Haven from his point of view.

When he speaks to the Lotos Club he calls up the shades of James Russell Lowell and Ralph Waldo Emerson: when he talks to a school of mechanics he harks back to his days as a rodman, and not long ago, at a gathering in New Bedford, where it was appropriate, he told of what the French had done in New England to the Chamber de Commerce Franco-American — speaking in the language of la belle France. He comes very near to being all things to all men—does Howard Elliott.

STILL HAS PROBLEM ON HANDS.

His problem of the New Haven is not yet solved, for, what with the tremendous strain put upon the road when much of New England started in to make munitions for the European war, he has had all he can attend to while waiting to see how the government is going to treat his road. His own ideas on this subject of Federal supervision were summed up by him not long ago in one of his speeches, in which he used an illustration drawn from his western life.

"Bill Yokim," said he, "was an excellent fellow who kept a livery stable and set up as a horse expert. One day Bill had a colt which he was going to break in and a number of friends were invited to witness the performance. The spectators sat on the fence while Bill trained the colt. It took him about an hour and a half, and when he got through the colt was dead. Bill Yokim's experience, I fear, will be repeated if we remain passive and permit our politicians to keep on regulating the railroads."

Mr. Elliott is lighter in weight than he was in the West, and the round contour of his face has been displaced here and there by angles, yet he is the same aggressive, active executor that he was before he took up the New England burden. Those who knew him well realize how near he comes to that beau ideal of being a "regular person." There are many things which he would like to do more, if he had the time—dancing, for instance. He knows all the mysteries of the one-step, the fox trot and the tango, and he goes to balls whenever he can, which is not often now. Also, he would like to play golf a great deal more than he does, for he is as good at that as he is at tennis, which is very good.

This is in strict confidence, but as a student he was one of the crack baseball players of Harvard, and to this day he is a consistent and zealous fan—only that New Haven business keeps him away from the sport even when he is most interested.

As a matter of fact, aside from these amusements just enumerated, Howard Elliott would like nothing better than to sit surrounded by suitable books in red levant bindings in a study in the Back Bay, Boston, for he lives in the American Athens, and thinks thoughts on economics and finance and philosophy and the history of civilization and writes them down precisely with a quill pen. But it does not look as if he would devote himself to those scholarly pursuits for many a year, for which he pines so much, because he is continually beset by the puzzles that brought him, a son of the East, back to the land which bore him.

Negotiations.

POWER COMPANIES NAME SYSTEMS' SALE PRICE.

Three Corporations Submit Counter-proposal to City's Proposition to Buy the Distributing Properties, Asking More than Fourteen Million Dollars and, in Lieu of Severance Damages, Indeterminate Contracts.

ASKING for between $14,000,000 and $15,000,000 and power contracts for an indeterminate period, the representatives of the Southern California Edison Company, the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation and the Pacific Light and Power Corporation yesterday submitted to Mayor Woodman's committee their counter-proposal to the city's proposition to buy their distributing systems. The conference was held in the Mayor's office.

The method of payment can be either through a bond issue or on time, $3,500,000 being paid down and the balance in quarterly or semi-annual payments. The companies suggest a mutual agreement for preferential purchase and sale of power until the city's needs are entirely met by its aqueduct construction. They do this in order that the home companies may not be shut out by the competition of outside concerns which may offer to sell power wholesale to the city.

The company's proposal is so involved, to the lay mind, that Mayor Woodman humorously remarked that he "referred their Greek alphabet to our engineers for decision."

EXPECTS COMPROMISE.

The Mayor believes the city and the companies will be able to meet on a compromise arrangement as between the city's offer of about $10,000,00 and the companies demand for several millions more. A figure of about $12,500,000 has been mentioned.

"If the companies do not meet it will be because they do not accept a fair offer," said the Mayor. "I told the companies I am not going to recommend to the citizens to pay any more than I believe their systems are worth to the people, and I am not going to sign a contract that in any manner curtails our development of electrical power."

The companies ask for the indeterminate power contracts in lieu of severance damages to which the State Railroad Commission in the Edison Company case indicated they were entitled, though not in the amount which that company claimed.

If an agreement is reached, the city will take over the distributing systems as quickly as possible. This cannot be done until certain legal formalities with the bondholders of the companies are gone through so it may be well on toward next spring before the city comes into possession of the properties, supposing a compromise is arrived at on price and the parties come together on the power contracts.

TO CUT RATES.

If the sale is made the city will obtain a gross income of $5,000,000 a year and it is expected an immediate reduction of 20 per cent. in domestic lighting rates could be made. The price at which the companies would sell power wholesale to the city is a matter for negotiation, but undoubtedly the city would obtain as low a price as the electric railways obtain and perhaps a shade under.

The companies lay some emphasis on obtaining a preference in selling power because they do not want to be shut out of their home market by competitors hundreds of miles away, who might make a strong effort to slightly underbid them.

It will take some time for the city's engineers thoroughly to examine the companies' proposals, but another joint meeting will be held at the earliest date possible, as it is the desire of the city to reach a decision one way or the other without undue delay.

The full text of the order of the State Railroad Commission denying the city's application for a rehearing in the Southern California Edison Company case was received yesterday. It says there is no merit in the petition for the rehearing.

CITY CRITICISED.

The commissioners say they have a right to expect petitions for rehearings will be filed in a spirit of helpfulness, but the city's petition is not of this character. The opinion adds:

Petitioners' allegation that the Railroad Commission took no account of depreciation is directly contrary to the facts.

Petitioners' comparison between the reports of the engineers with reference to the cost to reproduce the physical property new less depreciation and the sum fixed by the Railroad Commission as the just compensation to be paid for the property to be taken is incomplete and misleading, for the reason that it confuses physical property with the property as a whole, viewed as a going concern.

Petitioners' declaration that the sum of $4,750,000 fixed by the Railroad Commission as the just compensation to be paid for the property to be taken includes "a substantial allowance for capitalization of future earnings" is contrary to the facts.

On the vitally-important question of severance damages, the petition presents simply a number of general allegations, without a single reference to the transcript or the citation of a single authority.

Investigation Next.

FISH POISONED; MAN AND WIFE ILL; FORMER HELD.

ANT PASTE, placed on a plate of fish, last evening nearly brought death to Isaac Harris and his wife, Rose, at their residence, No. 185 South Utah street. A private physician attended to Mrs. Harris, but the husband was taken to the Receiving Hospital for treatment. After he was treated he was locked up, pending investigation.

The basis for this is a statement of Mrs. Harris, who, while suffering from the effects of the poison, accused her husband. It appears from the statement made last night by Harris that he had recently been buncoed out of $5000, his entire savings. Domestic trouble, involving whether his daughter should marry a certain young Hebrew, also caused friction in the home.

When taken into the Receiving Hospital by Police Sergeant Jarvis and Patrolman Bomar, Harris wailed out that he wanted to die, asking the officers to shoot him. Later, however, he denied having placed the poison on the fish and declared he wanted to live to get even with the men he charges with having stolen his $5000. He is 56 years old and a tailor by trade.

DECISION AFFIRMED.

Supreme Court Upholds Contention That Letters Written Disposing of Property are Not the Same As Will—Widows Allowance In Finch Case Confirmed.

In the matter of the estate of Jane Boylan Cook, the Supreme Court has affirmed the judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles county, in favor of the petition of John H. Higgins, a brother of the decedent, who asked that letters of administration of his sister's estate might be issued to him.

Mrs. Cook was taken sick and removed to one of the city hospitals, April 25, 1915, and she died just one month later. During her illness she wrote letters disposing of her estate. The brother contested, claiming that the letters were not of a testamentary character. W. E. Cook, a relative, opposed this position in the lower court, but the Supreme Court upheld the contention of Higgins.

In the case of R. L. Edwards against James Arp, the Supreme Court ordered the cause to be remanded to the trial court to modify a judgment to the extent of certain interest, the original judgment against Arp, being $1,410.37. The case involved walnut land in Kern county.

In the matter of the estate of Allen Finch, the order of the Los Angeles county courts, giving the widow an allowance of $75 a month, was affirmed. Allen Finch left an estate in this city valued at $15,000, with a widow but no children. By his will one-half was given to the wife, and the other half divided among his father and four brothers. The widow petitioned for an allowance and it was made. One of the four brothers appealed from the judgment that is now affirmed.

ON FLOOD CONTROL.

State Railroad Commission Confers With Representatives of South on Proposed Legislation to Build Dams and Reservoirs for the Protection of Ranchers.

The Executive Committee of the Southern California Counties Flood Control Association met in the offices of the State Railroad Commission yesterday afternoon and discussed, with members of the commission, features of the proposed flood control bill which will come under the jurisdiction of that body. The discussion dealt principally as to the manner of fixing rates and prescribing how the water shall be sold after it has been stored in reservoirs.

Officials from the State Engineering Department will next look over the provisions of the proposed bill to insure a uniform plan for the construction of the reservoirs and dams being adopted in the various districts created by the bill. Assessment features of the measure are being investigated by Attorney Hartley Shaw, and Henry O'Melveney is studying the legality of the bond features.

The bill will be presented to the flood control association at a meeting to be held in the Chamber of Commerce Saturday, and upon approval will be forwarded to the State Water Problems Conference for perusal by that body.

CITY IS SUPREME.

Court Decides Los Angeles has Control of Street Crossings.

An application for a rehearing in the Central Trust Company case, which held that this city has control of street crossings, was denied by the State Supreme Court yesterday.

The State Railroad Commission claimed jurisdiction over crossings where railroads are concerned, but the court upheld the city's contention that Los Angeles is supreme within its own limits as it has not elected to place its powers in the hands of the Railroad Commission.

This leaves the way clear for the city to take action to eliminate as far as possible, dangerous crossings at grade.

LEASE LARGE SPACE.

Wholesalers Secure Great Part of New Kerckhoff Building.

Announcement of the lease of the first and second floors and basement of the Kerckhoff Building, Sixth and Los Angeles streets, to the recently-incorporated Smith-Riddick Company was made yesterday. The lease becomes effective December 15, next.

The Smith-Riddick Company is incorporated under California laws with a capitalization of $250,000 and is the latest firm of prominence to enter the local wholesale field, its business having to do with dry goods and notions.

Officials of the company are: E. W. Smith, president; M. H. Riddick, vice-president; Glen M. Smith, secretary, and Wakefield Phinney of Redlands, treasurer. Directors include the president, vice-president and secretary, and W. H. Hancock and George Pennebaker.

UNDERCURRENT CAUTION IN THE STOCK MARKET.

Coppers Fail to Respond to the Reports of Additional Foreign Orders for Delivery Early Next Year—Some of the Leaders Yield a Few Points, but this Appears to Have been Counterbalanced by Other Gains.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—An undercurrent of caution prevailed in today's stock market operations. This was particularly true of the leaders, United States Steel showing decided restraint with allied industrials. Bethlehem Steel yielded 8 points, with 1 to 3 for Republic Iron and Steel, Colorado Fuel, Industrial Alcohol, New York Airbrake and some of the leading motors.

This was partly counter-balanced by the strength of shipping stocks. Rails were strong at the outset but sagged in the last hour. Total sales of stocks amounted to 455,000 shares.

The usual weekly budget of general news included the reviews of the mercantile agencies, which reported a continuance of extraordinary activity and a broadening demand for the coming year. Further advices from steel centers indicated more price advances before the end of the month.

Coppers failed to respond to reports of additional foreign orders for delivery early in 1917 at not less than 28 cents a pound. Representatives of the big producing companies could not confirm these reports.

An actual cash loss of about $20,000,000 was the most noteworthy feature of the weekly bank statement, loans, however, contracting by $17,000,000 and reserves by $13,840,000, reducing the excess reserve to about $69,000,000, the smallest total since the midyear.

Bonds also developed an easier trend on light demand; total sales, par value, $2,260,000. United States and Panama bonds advanced ⅛ to ¾ of 1 per cent. on call during the week.

WEEKLY FINANCIAL REVIEW.

The abnormal activity of the previous five weeks lost little of its force in the week ending today, but sentiment experienced a pronounced change, this being denoted in the shrinkage of quoted values. Many attenuated bull accounts were closed out in the frenzied trading of Monday when Wall street received its first news of the extension of Germany's submarine activities to American waters. This was followed by general liquidation and a renewal of operations for the short interest.

Shares of the less conspicuous railroads and some of the utility companies were in good demand at irregular but substantial advances. Fundamental conditions remain inherently sound, except for further deterioration of certain foodstuffs, as indicated by the latest government crop reports. Bank clearings rose to unprecedented proportions, earnings of railroads and various industrial companies were of like character and fabricated iron and steel products underwent further upward price revision.

New foreign financial undertakings are under consideration by our bankers but these may remain in abeyance until after election.

HOME COMMON CLIMBS ON LOCAL EXCHANGE.

SHARP UPWARD MOVEMENT IN INDUSTRIAL STOCK.

Union Oil Active at Firm Quotations—Mines in Poor Shape—Majority of Oatmans Decline—Good Call for Adams—United Eastern Steady.

Home Telephone common continued to climb at yesterday morning's session of the Los Angeles Stock Exchange, and under the stimulus of a strong buying power the quotation for the industrial security touched 48.00. A total of 155 shares changed hands at prices ranging from 46.00 to 48.00, although no sales on the board were recorded at prices below 47.00. Home Telephone preferred was quiet and bidding for the stock was not as frequent as the circumstances would warrant. There was a broader inquiry for Union Oil and quite a quantity of the stock was transferred at firm quotations. Informal sales were especially heavy, some 100 shares bringing 100.50. The mining list was in poor shape and a good deal of apathy was noticed when the various issues were called. Big Jim opened at 1.24 and closed at 1.20. Ivanhoe sold down to 8½ and Tom Reed gradually weakened until when the meeting had been brought to a close a net loss of 8 points had been recorded. United Eastern was steady at 3.75 and Adams held its market at 13¾, with a good call for the stock at all times. The mining market of late has lacked life. The public is not buying as heavily as was expected, and a number of the leading Oatmans have again sunk to a price level where they appear to be exceptionally good buys. Reports from the camp bear out the fact that activity continues unabated and that many of the leading prospects have now reached a stage in their development work when important ore discoveries may be anticipated almost any moment.

U-BOAT ACTIVITIES AFFECTING WHEAT.

UNEASINESS IS OBSERVED IN THE CHICAGO PIT.

Notwithstanding the Bullish Reports from Argentina Buyers of the Cereal Show Increasing Cautiousness Throughout the Session. Corn Eases Off.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—Uneasiness over prospects of submarine activity between now and Monday had a bearish effect on wheat today. The outcome was an unsettled close, with December 1.57⅝, May 1.57⅛ to 1.57¼, and the market as a whole ⅞ off to ⅛ up compared with yesterday's finish. Corn lost ⅛@¼ to ⅜ and oats ⅜@½ to ⅝. Provisions closed at a range which varied from 60 decline to a rise of 2½.

Notwithstanding bullish crop reports from Argentina, buyers of wheat showed increasing cautiousness almost from the start.

No lasting stimulus came either from a Liverpool announcement that the weekly forecast of shipments indicated supplies which would not be adequate to meet requirements.

Some of the selling which depressed the wheat market was ascribed to a prominent trader here who has recently figured as a leading bull. Congestion of transportation on eastern roads, especially at Buffalo, did a good deal to handicap the bull side of the market, and so, too, did signs of an enlargement of the United States visible supply total on Monday.

Corn eased off with wheat. Export corn sales of 610,000 bushels, however, prevented any radical setback. Big receipts weakened oats. The total for the week was more than double the amount at the corresponding time last year.

Provisions averaged lower with hogs and because of a falling off in shipments.

No ships will be built before sufficient money is received to pay for their complete construction. All money received meanwhile is held in escrow.

Cotton.

NEW HIGH LEVELS REACHED BY STAPLE.

BUT IT FAILED TO STAY AT THE ELEVATION.

Reaction Occurs Shortly After the Opening of the Exchange in New York City that Carried Prices off the Level of Friday's Closing.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK BUREAU OF THE TIMES, Oct. 14.—Although cotton reached new high levels today, they were touched only for an instant shortly after the opening and a reaction occurred which carried prices off the level of Friday's closing. After this, the market was irregular and narrow, and the close was at practically unchanged quotations. The census report on supply and distribution placed the consumption of cotton by American mills during September at 529,227 bales, compared with 498,738 bales in September last year. The consumption for the two months ending September is 1,087,000 bales against 963,000 bales last year. The number of active spindles is 32,333,000 against 31,300,000 last year. The amount of cotton in the hands of spinners is 1,328,000 bales against 1,090,000 bales last year. The amount of cotton in public storage and on compresses is placed at 2,610,000 bales, against 2,805,000 bales last year. Map readers profess to see the possibility of some storm damage resulting from a tropical disturbance in the Caribbean, which was moving with hurricane force toward the Yucatan Channel. Fall River print cloth sales for the week amounted to 200,000 pieces, against 150,000 pieces for the same week last year.

COTTON ACTIVE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—Manufactures of cotton continue extremely active, notwithstanding the high price of raw products. During September 529,227 running bales were used, the census bureau today announced.

That is 30,000 bales more than was used, the Census Bureau today an- 29,000 bales less than used in August. While the quantity used in September was smaller than in August, the amount used per working day was larger because the month was two working days shorter than August, one of them being the holiday, Labor Day. The August daily consumption averaged 20,693 bales, while that of September was 21,169 bales.

Cotton consumption this year thus far has averaged more than 500,000 bales a month.

COPPER
ALL SOLD
Chas. A. Stoneham, the copper expert of New York, makes the following statement on October 6:
"Inquiries made among the leading copper producers elicit the information that by November first it is probable that the statement will be made by all producers that the output of copper of the United States is entirely sold up to the end of next April."
The RAY HERCULES has opened a body of the richest copper ore ever uncovered in Arizona on their claim adjoining the ARIZONA RAY and RAY CONSOLIDATED. RAY HERCULES will sell higher when the news is known.
RAY CONSOLIDATED is maintaining its big production of 10,000 tons per day. Inside information is to the effect that they will raise their dividend rate from $3 to $4 per share at the December meeting. RAY CONSOLIDATED will sell higher.
ARIZONA RAY is just starting development and offers the same opportunity to the investor as RAY CONSOLIDATED and RAY HERCULES did on their initial offering. Buy ARIZONA RAY at 27c.
ARIZONA RAY is listed on the Los Angeles Curb and application to list it on the LOS ANGELES STOCK EXCHANGE and SAN FRANCISCO STOCK EXCHANGE.

I consider it has greater possibilities than Jerome Verde and should be to the great RAY CONSOLIDATED what United Verde Extension is to United Verde. I was one of the organizers of Jerome Verde and sold over a million shares of that stock from 10c to $1.00 per share, and sold thousands of shares of United Verde Extension at from 50c to $1.00 per share, now $40 per share. I predict $1 per share for ARIZONA RAY. Buy it today and tomorrow at 27c. Telegraph your orders, stating number of shares wanted, and follow with remittance by mail. George Branch (foreman) came in Friday and reported a strike of high grade milling ore which will pan between $150 and $200 per ton. That he will keep on trenching until he gets width of vein, then sink shaft. He also states the indications are for a big mine.
—only 20,000 at 10c
Until width of the vein and value of the ore are determined a few shares will be sold at 10c. We recommend this as the best speculation and investment on the market. We look for the stock to sell for 50c to $1.00 before Christmas. Bear in mind, absolute honesty and economy in management.

Signs of Progress in Calipatria.

Imperial Cotton and Oil Company gin.

Valley Acreage.

are big figures to contemplate when it is considered that the planted area in alfalfa and other crops around Calipatria now amounts to 20,000 acres. The demand for land is revealed in the number of leases of large and small tracts at from $10 to $20 an acre that are now being made. Many such transactions have been completed within the past few weeks.

"Calipatria has become a winter resort for sheep and cattle men and their flocks. Thousands of animals are now being grazed in the district and barley and wheat feed and stubble are commanding almost fancy prices. The Yokum and O'Brien interests have brought 2500 sheep here within the past few weeks. Lessees of various holdings have brought at least 3000, and hundreds have been brought by small owners. There are about 6000 cattle now grazing on the Witherow and other ranches.

"Cantaloupes have been grown around Calipatria on a considerable scale for the first time this year and have justified every expectation. Cantaloupe sheds and a refrigerating plant will be built at Calipatria in the near future to handle this crop which is to be planted extensively along the lines of the new railroads. Alfalfa, of course, has, like cotton, come into its own. The possibilities of grape fruit, figs, plums, peaches and apricots have also been demonstrated to the entire satisfaction of the growers, trees a year and a half old in various tracts having attained a growth and degree of hardiness that has amazed even the most optimistic of the farmers and ranchers.

"The day when most of the land near Calipatria will have been cut up into small tracts of from two to five and ten acres up is not far distant, the successful development of the many small plots now under cultivation having shown the inevitable trend of things. If the achievements to date may be accepted as any indication, it will not be many years until practically all of the 100,000 acres now tributary or to be made tributary to Calipatria by the opening of the new railways will be producing wealth in one form or another. All the products of this vast area will pass through the business channels of Calipatria. What this will mean for the town is indicated by the great volume of Calipatria's present shipping and commercial activities.

RECENT ACTIVITIES.

The progress of the Calipatria district is reflected in the number of sales and leases recently completed in the vicinity. T. A. Johnson, who has been closely identified with the real estate activities of the section since Mr. Schader began the development of the townsite, has recently negotiated among other land deals, the sale of 720 acres to J. W. Yokum of Long Beach and J. O'Neil of Calexico; forty acres to J. B. and L. B. Farkey of El Cajon, and forty acres to H. A. Walbrecht of Eagle Rock. Calipatria lots have recently been sold through Mr. Johnson to J. E. O'Neil, P. E. Martinez, Henry L. Loud, T. Guerero, J. Valenzuela, Charles Hines, Fred Sabtel, Vidal Ontibara, H. H. Stallard, B. Cardenas, W. A. Hillhouse and Charles Moreland.

W. T. Cunningham, who has just bought a lot on Main street for $2450, plans the immediate erection of a motion picture theater. An important exchange has recently been made whereby H. A. Simpson of Pomona has acquired 320 acres near the town, formerly owned by the Lyons brothers.

BUNGALOW SALES.

P. A. Hannigan, with the Braly Janss Investment Company, reports the following sales of bungalows: To Daniel Garrety, No. 3563 Beswick street; Amelia Arenberg, No. 1106 Mirasol street; Nena Seider, No. 1540 Clarinda avenue; Frank Milsvigs, No. 604 Bonnie Beach place; Henry L. Gross, No. 1071 Prado street; Mrs. E. A. Petre, No. 3568 Garnet street; D. R. Thomas, No. 1069 Prado street; Joe C. Lopez, No. 4316 Viola avenue; Albert Harrier, No. 3564 Beswick street; Herman Reppenhager, No. 1128 Los Palos street; Charles Evarts, No. 1110 Mirosal street; John R. Sherrard, Edna street, corner Warwick, Sierra Park; F. P. Yarger, No. 422 Bonnie Beach place; Isabelle E. Grenner, No. 3568 Beswick street; Ester Burger Frey, No. 1115 South Ditman street. The prices are stated to have ranged from $775 to $2900, averaging about $2000.

TO LARGER QUARTERS.

The W. Ross Campbell Company, through F. B. Nellums of its leasing department, has just completed arrangements for the erection and leasing for a term of five years of a one-story brick garage and showroom at No. 1316 South Los Angeles street. The owner, Mrs. Emma J. Seivert, has leased the building to the Wisconsin Marine and Automobile Motor Company, represented in Southern California by the Earl P. Cooper Company, at present located at No. 333 West Pico street. Business expansion compels the firm to move to larger quarters. The new building is being erected by the L.F.S. Syndicate.

TRADES FOR LAND.

F. H. Curtis has exchanged the northwest corner of Central avenue and Jefferson street to Henry Klein, accepting a section of land in Ventura county. Mr. Klein, it is said, will make extensive improvements. Irving L. Turner represented Mr. Klein in the deal.

WILL PUSH SALES.

Realty Firm Wants to Close Zelzah Holdings in Three Months.

Lots and acreage tracts in and around the townsite of Zelzah in the center of the San Fernando Valley are now being placed on the market by the Valley Homes Company, which is attempting to close out these holdings in a three-months' campaign. Nickerson & Waterbury have the sales agency for the period and have opened a suite of offices at 801-802 Hollingsworth Building, with a ground floor branch in the offices of Weddington & Cooper at No. 435 South Hill street.

The Zelzah community was established five years ago and is in the heart of a rich farming district under the Los Angeles aqueduct. The place is on the main line of the Southern Pacific. Considerable agricultural development has taken place recently in the vicinity of the townsite, and there have been a number of sales of lots and lands. One of the new buildings now projected in the town is a Norwegian Lutheran Church.

NEW VERMONT SQUARE.

The following sales are reported in the New Vermont Square tract in Southwest Los Angeles for the past week: Dorothy Mohr Reese to G. C. Buckner, six-room bungalow at No. 4251 Van Ness avenue, $3400, through agency of Walter R. Hoff; Edward A. Robinson to C. Carwile, seven-room bungalow at No. 1937 West Forty-third street, $3500; A. C. Traggorth to Elizabeth Dickman, seven-room bungalow at No. 1731 West Forty-second street, and B. I. Glieber to Harvey A. Rea, seven-room bungalow at No. 1920 West Forty-first street, $4000. All of the buyers, it is stated, will at once occupy the places bought as homes. Lee Laning has completed plans and begun the erection of a seven-room, white plaster bungalow at No. 1862 West Santa Barbara avenue in the same tract.

SOLD TO GROWERS.

Sales in its large tract in the San Fernando Valley are reported by the Janss Investment Company as follows: Philip Drier of Los Angeles, five acres, $2000, to be planted to potatoes; G. R. Harkness of Long Beach, five acres, $1500, for poultry raising and tomato growing; J. H. Herman, Long Beach, 11 acres, $3300, to be devoted to general farming and the raising of tomatoes and potatoes, and C. R. Keller, five acres, $1000. Thousands of boxes of tomatoes are now being harvested in this section of the San Fernando Valley and being delivered daily to the new cannery recently opened at Van Nuys, according to representatives of the company.

DISCUSS WATER PLAN.

An enthusiastic meeting was held at the Hull Rancho in Victor Valley last Friday evening, at which 100 settlers heard reports on the progress of the irrigation project for bringing water from the eastern slope of the San Bernardino Mountains into that region. R. E. Trash, an engineer, who has been studying the situation, gave the settlers interesting figures as to the cost and engineering requirements of the enterprise. Arthur E. Hull, president of the Victor Valley Chamber of Commerce, presided.

HERD IS GROWING.

Work is being rushed upon 100 new breeding pens to take care of the fast-increasing herd of thoroughbred Hampshire hogs on big Conejo Ranch of the Janss Investment Company. Although the company started in the hog-raising industry as an experiment only a little over a year ago, it now has a herd of 1500 hogs, and is weekly sending large shipments to the Los Angeles markets.

NEW RAMONA ACRES.

Sales of plots at New Ramona Acres are reported by the Janss Investment Company for the past week to the following: H. W. McGaughey, $900; A. S. McClean, plot improved with three-room house, $1750; F. R. Garry, one acre improved with fruit trees, $1250, and an acre and a tenth improved with full-bearing walnut trees to F. R. Jensen, $1435.

Building Leased.

The Pacific Hauling and Carting Company has taken a long lease on the two-story building at Nos. 529-531 New High street, formerly occupied by the Postoffice Stables. Katherine Kolle, the owner, will remodel the building for the new tenant. H. L. Suydam negotiated the lease.

Fact and Comment.

that would be brought about by the "Land Taxation" amendment would be the smaller owners, those who have put their savings into lots and lands and those who are now meeting payments on real estate investments.

One who knows anything about the history of Los Angeles and Southern California during the past decade and a half knows that probably a majority of the persons of all stations in life, from small wage-earners to those of wealth and independence, who have lived here for any considerable length of time, have made investments in real estate. "Big land owners," indeed! Shall tens upon tens of thousands of small owners suffer the inevitable consequences of such an economic upheaval simply that a limited number of big land owners shall get what illogical cranks say "is coming to them"? The big land owners and the rich generally are the ones who would be hurt least through having their land confiscated. Others whose entire savings are represented in land and lots would be wiped out with the destruction of their values.

The same argument in relation to the economic chaos that would result from a blow to the section's greatest of all commodities applies to the workers in every line of business and industry who do not own real estate, and is especially to be commended to the attention of the union workingmen who have been commanded by the labor chiefs to vote for the single tax amendment. One of the appalling and inevitable results of such an assault upon the section's very economic foundations would be the upsetting of business and industry. No change in financial conditions ever experienced by Los Angeles or any other community would be comparable to that which would be brought about by the sudden necessity for a complete readjustment of all property values and the disturbance attendant upon it. If the single tax amendment should, through the indifference of stay-at-home voters, be carried, it may be put down as absolutely certain that California will receive no more money from the outside for investment in real estate, business or industry.

How It Would Work.

The saddling of the burden of the entire cost of State, county and municipal government in California upon the land would have the almost immediate effect of causing a large amount of property to revert through confiscation to the State. The single taxers prattle about "forcing" all owners of vacant lots and lands to make improvements, as if that in itself would be the most desirable thing in the world and the first step toward an early millennium. Some owners in Los Angeles would build to escape a part of their burdens under single tax; others who could see no hope of profitable investment in building under such compulsion and at a time which in all probability was not ripe for such a venture would simply lose their properties through failure to pay the ruinous taxes. The forced improvement operations that took place would merely add new buildings in a community already overbuilt.

It is ridiculous to suppose that lands and lots which had been confiscated by the State through the inability of their owners to pay taxes would be bought by others when the State attempted to sell them for redemption of taxes. People of sense do not buy into things like that. Such lots and lands would for the most part simply cease to contribute a cent to taxation, throwing a proportionately larger share of the cost of government upon the holdings still retained by their owners. The single taxers have overlooked the fact that it costs just so much to keep the government of the State, counties, municipalities and districts going. When they boast of their intention to wipe out the private ownership of vacant land, they do not mention the fact that with every parcel of land that reverts to the State, the burden for each owner who still clings to his property in spite of ruinous taxes automatically becomes that much greater. It does not take much perception to see that it would al lend in the owners of improved holdings having eventually to pay heavier taxes on the land under their improvements than they now pay on real estate and improvements together.

This is the way the single tax plan would work after the first appalling blow at the State's economic life had been struck. No property owner could conceivably gain anything through single tax, excepting possibly the owner drawing revenue from a skyscraper with acres of untaxed floor space rising upon a downtown lot; and he would be likely to find his building rapidly emptied after single tax had got in its work on the community at large. The big public service corporations that now pay taxes to the State would be relieved by the "Land Taxation" amendment from all taxation, about $17,000,000 being thereby added to the burden that would have to be carried by land alone under the single tax plan. Saloons and other businesses that are now compelled to pay licenses would, under the amendment, be freed from such taxation. Churches, charitable and educational institutions, on the other hand, would cease to enjoy the exemptions now provided by law and would be compelled to pay taxes on their lands after the first of the coming year.

Joseph Higgins, ex-captain of the Holy Cross track team, will enter Fordham College and study law. Higgins is one of the best middle-distance runners in this country. Fordham's track squad will be coached by Bernie Wefers.

Santa Monica.

FINE PLACE SOLD.

Large Residence in Fashionable Adelaide-drive Section of Palisades Tract Bought as Home by Prominent Los Angeles Woman.

One of the most important transfers of residence property recently concluded in the vicinity of Los Angeles was the sale last week by Arthur H. Fleming of Detroit and Pasadena to Mrs. I. N. Van Nuys of this city of a large house and extensive grounds in the fashionable Palisades subdivision in Santa Monica. The property is one of the finest of the exclusive Adelaide-drive holdings and faces directly upon Santa Monica Canyon, commanding a sweeping view down this wooded ravine to the ocean, as well as a panorama of rugged mountains to the north. The consideration is not given, but is understood to have been entirely in cash.

Mrs. Van Nuys, it is understood, will make extensive additions to the house and many changes to the grounds. The dwelling was built by Mr. Fleming about a year ago and has never been occupied. The site is 107x213 feet in size and is beautifully laid out. The new owner expects to plant on the grounds a number of trees from the old Van Nuys homestead at West Sixth street and Loma drive, in this city. These are to be boxed at once and hauled to the new Adelaide-drive place.

Three or four other important deals, whereby persons of prominence will acquire homes or homesites in the Palisades, are now declared to be pending. Fine residences are now being completed in the tract by Guy Cherry and G. L. Waring, both places being on San Vicente boulevard. Former Governor Henry T. Gage has bought a site on Adelaide drive and is planning the early construction of a large house.

The city of Santa Monica has just passed the ordinance of intention for the paving of Fourth street from Adelaide drive to the south city limits. Between Adelaide drive and Montana avenue the street is to be parked after the plan followed on West Adams street in this city.

CHINESE VILLA SAVES WHITES.

Missionary Writes of Perils in Bandit Region.

White Wolf Dead, but Robber Followers Aren't.

Murder, Looting and Mutiny Order of the Day.

That the death of White Wolf, the notorious Chinese bandit, has failed to end the depredations of the hordes of robbers of which he was leader, and that in recent months thousands of them have been murdering and stealing in the villages and cities of Shensi province, China, is apparent from letters received from Frederick Lee, directors of the Honan mission of the Seventh-day Adventists, and Dr. A. C. Selmon, another Seventh-day Adventist missionary. With a native evangelist they made a trip from the mission station at Yen Cheng, Honan, into Shensi, an interior province.

The most rapid means of travel in that section is the native cart. The members of the party were held up five times in succession by bands of robbers before they escaped. Mr. Lee was obliged to look for twenty minutes down a rifle barrel in the hands of an angry Chinese bandit, and to take a vehement Chinese cursing.

Tung-kuan, a city on the Yellow River on the border of the three provinces, Shensi, Shansi and Honan, was attacked just as the missionaries reached the place. While holding evangelistic meetings in Gospel Village (Shensi) the Adventists heard firing of guns in a village seven miles away and learned that two bands of soldiers were fighting within the city, one band having mutinied. Mr. Lee says:

"The mutinous band and its officers were all originally brigands. Their chief desired Shensi to proclaim her independence of Yuan Shi Kai, together with the southern provinces. But as the Governor-General would not do this, these brigand soldiers turned on the loyal soldiers and began slaughtering them. At the same time they captured the son of the Governor-General, who was an officer of the loyal troop. This they did in order to force the general's hand."

LIKE AN ARMY.

As the missionaries returned from Gospel Village they heard that all cities to the west had been captured by the brigands and that about 10,000 of them were marching upon Singan. These bandits belong to a secret society, such as the Boxers. During the revolution of 1911 six foreigners in Singan were killed by members of this society.

"We started on our return trip the 10th of May," says Dr. Selmon, "and got along very uneventfully until we reached a place just twelve miles to the west of Tung-kuan. Here we met a band of twenty-five mounted bandits. They stopped us and demanded that we give them any guns and ammunition we had. There were five cut-throats surrounding our cart and all were armed with rifles and long knives. We insisted we were missionaries and had no arms, but they said we were foreigners employed by the 'Yuan army' to oversee the artillery. They rummaged through all our goods, and, finding no arms, they finally let us off and told us to drive on. We picked up our stuff that they had scattered about and roped it on the cart, feeling sincerely thankful that the Lord had delivered us out of the hands of those ruffians.

TOUGH CUSTOMERS.

"We proceeded on our way east for another ten li and another band of armed robbers held us up. This band was made up of a tougher lot of fellows than the first ones we met. They stopped the cart and one of them leveled his rifle on Mr. Lee and made us get down out of the cart and stand to one side, and he vowed he would put a hole through both of us if we stirred. Then another robber searched each of us and took our watches; then one man got in the cart and began emptying out our goods and taking everything that they desired. Mr. Lee and I were in the meantime standing out in the road, and the man covering us with his rifle reviled us to everything he could think of and every now and then would bring his rifle up to shoot.

"One of them, upon asking me if we had any silver and not getting my reply as quickly as he desired, jumped down from the cart and struck me a couple of blows with a large club he was carrying.

"Finally another squad of armed bandits came up and joined the ones who were robbing us. They consulted as to whether to shoot us or not, and finally decided to make us go back to the west for a mile or two and turn us over to the robber chief who was coming along in a mule cart.

"One of the mounted bandits covered us with his rifle and made us march along ahead of him. It was just about noon and fearfully hot and dusty.

ORIENTAL VILLA.

"After going about a mile we came up to where the robber chief and his bodyguard were holding a council of war. We addressed him in the politest Chinese we could command and he told us to climb in his cart. I climbed up by his side and Mr. Lee got up on the cart of the robber chief's aide. The chief was a tough specimen, blind in one eye, and with two big army pistols stuck in his belt, and surrounded by as typical a set of roughnecks as you could find pictures in any wild west novel. He said he would protect us. The chief gave me his name card with the assurance that this would protect us, and told us if we hurried we could get into Tung-kuan before he attacked the place."

With the protection of this precious villain, Dr. Salmon wrote, the American party got safely into Tung-kuan and then out and away, after being robbed and threatened repeatedly. They took whole skins away from the bandit country, but all along the road met people who had been robbed of everything, even of the few hundred cash they had for expenses while traveling.

What experts from the worlds greatest copper camps say about the Glory Hole Bonanza

"—one of the Greatest Gold Mines on Earth"

SEE GLORY HOLE AND SOME OTHERS

JEROMITES HIGHLY IMPRESSED WITH MINES OUT ALONG THE A. & C.

Bubbling over with enthusiasm, J. W. Hudgins and Harry Crain returned a few days ago from an auto trip into the Wenden and Salome country. Both are firmly convinced of several things. They believe that the Harqua Hala and Glory Hole are two of the biggest gold mines on earth, also that a mining boom which will make the present activity pale into insignificance will soon start along the A. & C.

At the Glory Hole Crain and Hudgins panned a number of samples from the workings and also from the big 100-foot ledge which is such a prominent feature of the landscape. They were allowed to take their samples anywhere, and not one of their pans failed to show colors. Dick Wick Hall, who is in charge at the Glory Hole, lets anybody carry off all the samples he wants for panning or assaying. By pursuing this method he has proven to hundreds of people that his own assertions regarding the present showing at the Glory Hole are not exaggerated but are extremely conservative.

Every one who visits the Glory Hole is tounded at its immense size, character enormous possibilities. The unsolicited ment of these two prominent mining men the greatest copper camp on earth, who ited the property during my absence, is a sample of what every one who sees it I have always claimed that the Glory would develop into one of the big rich mines of the West—and now I feel of it than ever.

A small allotment of stock is now fered at 15c a share, subject to increase or withdrawal from sale without notice. price will soon be raised to 25c or share and later application will be made list the stock at 50c to $1 a share, to the showings made at that time. The capital of the Glory Hole Bonanza Mine pany is only $150,000—and we own all paid for and nearly half the stock is treasury yet. Small capital, mine all working day and night, immense ledge, lously rich ore—and only 15c a share full paid and nonassessable. Can you I make this low price now because I that in honest mining the people who first chance and help open up a big rich and create the big profits, are entitled to honest share of those profits.

If you want stock at 15c wire your and follow it with remittance by mail, in your orders at once. If you never chance you never have any chance and this is the best chance you ever your life to make a fortune from a vestment if we open up the Big Bonanza Bodies we are now on the trail of and Mining Engineers, Geologists and we are sure to get. Consolidated went from 17c to over six hundred share when they struck their bonanza bodies—and Consolidated Virginia never had ore like the famous $100 a Pound Glory High Grade.

Such Pretty, Fluffy Curls—In Three Hours!

Have you tried using liquid silmerine before rolling the hair in curlers? If not, by all means do so. When you let your hair down, within three hours, you will have just the loveliest curls and waves! They will appear so perfectly natural, and you'll be surprised how long they will last. When the hair is combed out it will be beautifully fluffy.

Silmerine should be applied with a clean tooth brush, passing this through the hair from the roots downward. It may be used before retiring, if preferred. A few ounces of the liquid from your druggist will last many weeks. This will also be found to be a splendid dressing, keeping the hair fine and glossy. It is of course entirely harmless.

Miss Mary Parker provided a big birthday cake on which burned eight candles, each of which indicated ten years of happy life. Roses and dahlias were used in decorating the table for the dinner. The unexpected guests were Mrs. L. McKibben, wife of a former pastor of the Snedakers back in Toronto; a daughter, Mrs. R. D. Russell of Claremont; Mr. and Mrs. Leslie W. Snedaker, who are son and daughter-in-law; Mr. and Mrs. Lester Snedaker, a grandson and his wife; Ronald Snedaker, another grandson; Lee Snedaker, a great-grandson; Mrs. Ada B. HAPPY THOUGHT CLUB SYMPOSIUM.

BY EUGENE BROWN.

The zo-ological department of the Happy Thought Studio is increasing in size and yet is not able to maintain what diplomats would call its status quo.

Proper facilities for the care of the wild animals are lacking. It is proposed to lease ground for a regular park and to secure the services of a lion tamer, snake charmer and other experts in animal training. Then such tragedies as have recently visited the zoo would be prevented.

The Happy Thought collection was started with the presentation of the trained white rat, Gen. Jackson, and for some weeks he had the studio pretty much to himself. Prof. Watts Eaton Hughes of the club information bureau was his boon companion and custodian and the pair got along finely together. Then the Barnum show people presented the studio with a pied mongoose. The animal seemed rather dumpish at first and no particular effort was made for his restraint or confinement. But on the second night the mongoose developed a fierce appetite and broke from his moorings while the professor slumbered. The animal not only devoured a nickel's worth of frankfurters that Dr. Hughes was saving for lunch, but he caught and ate Gen. Jackson as well. The professor sobbed like a pup when he realized that his pet had been gathered in by the blood-thirsty mongoose.

The next day another gift come to the studio. It was a checkered hyena sent by Dave Horsley. The animal was a bit frayed and shopworn but was considered a valuable acquisition to the zoo and Prof. Hughes is writing in a laughing part for Teddy—that is the name of the hyena— in the scenario of "Henrietta of the Hungry Heart." The hyena was kept for some time in the crockery crate in which he was packed when he arrived. That night Prof. Watts Eaton Hughes was called to make an address at the dinner of the Pasadena Purity League. It was nearing the morning when he returned to his apartment in the studio. He was again horrified to discover that the hyena had gnawed his way from confinement and attacked and eaten the mongoose. The professor subdued and captured the hyena by the use of his rain coat and an ammonia syringe and again padlocked him in his cell. But the damage had been wrought. So it is that while the zoo weighs ninety-seven pounds more than it did at the start its numbers are the same.

It is a one animal collection.

Yesterday Prof. Hughes got a wire from the Selig people that the colonel was sending the club zoo a fine specimen of the very rare bronchosaurus—almost the last of his race. The animal has been christened Plato and the professor is wondering if he has an appetite for hyenas. He thinks it might have been better to have started with a lion in the first place.

Little Eva Tango, who is an ornery member of the club, has a bit of a grievance, and indeed it seems warranted. In the first place she feels that she should at least have been offered the lead in the forthcoming massive production of "Henrietta of the Hungry Heart," and secondly she objects to being quoted as knowing nothing about kissing, in connection with the request that she serve as one of the judges in the competition for ballads about the kiss.

She sends a little communication to the club as follows:

"Avast there, shipmates: I can't come in without knocking—just a little knock. How you could have passed up as hungry a one as I am in casting 'Henrietta' gets my goat. It seems to me on reading the scenario that it was built for me. It requires a frolicsome yet emotional person with an extended experience with the divine passion. My recollection of Myra Marr is that she is a little runt of a thing that never knew what a love affair was. She could come on in the first act and dust the furniture, but that was about her limit. But, of course, this is your affair and if you are satisfied I will be. But another thing: I did not care to be associated with Byron, Moore and Burns as judge of your kissing literature, as I have no use for dead ones. I do not want you to understand that my objections were because I knew nothing of the subject. In my time I have browsed on the beaming visage of many a good man and true. Likewise numerous esteemed gents have gargled my luscious mush. I will not be herded in the ranks of the unkissed. If you don't believe me ask the Old Resident. So no more at present."

The Old Timer was visibly embarrassed by the reference made. He was between two fires, as it were. As an avowed suitor for the passion of the beauteous Myra he was instrumental in her selection as star in the club drama. Also, as an adorer of Eva, he was her sponsor and champion in her admission to the club.

So he compromised by going out and drinking heavily of buttermilk—his favorite debauch. After the fourth glass he remarked to a friend: "Looks as if it might clear up after all."

There's an optimist for you!

Uncle William Snaggs, the wild sage of the San Gabriel Wash, wishes to placate his effront to Myra Marr, and in the kissing contest suggests a kiss of peace. This prompted the Cheerful Nut to remark that he didn't think a kiss apiece would be enough.

However, here is what Bill says:

"I don't know much about kissing, the last kiss I can recall was one of the dewy kind that caused the recipient to make a wild dash for a bath towel immediately after. Since then I have preferred to remain unwashed, but I'm willing to study up on the kiss of peace and donate one to Myra Marr as a conciliatory offering. I meant no harm and hasten to withdraw my suggestion of Marie Walcamp as leading woman in 'Henrietta of the Hungry Heart.' Miss Walcamp could not fill Myra's shoes, anyway, because her feet are too small; I saw 'em once without any embellishments on 'em and I know. Neither is Miss Walcamp built on the bean-pole plan on which Myra prides herself. Marie, in a bathing suit, struck me as an armful for any man and she'd go it even better in full regalia. Marie isn't in the same class with Myra and I hope my apology is accepted. The kiss of peace I offer Myra would be that and nothing more, for I am a married man and, therefore, to be trusted implicitly. So here goes:

Nothing Doing.

Once I hungered for affection,
And osculatory cheer,
But I skidooed when she murmured:
"I don't like the smell of beer."

Then I chose a little fairy;
One I'd known both well and long,
But she pushed me to one side with
"My, your pipe is awful strong."

Then I picked another charmer,
But the moment I drew near
She retreated, smiling coyly:
"You've been eating onions, dear."

So it's farewell, kiss, good-by, kiss,
Au revoir, all charming misses,
Neither onions, pipe or lager
Will I quit for all your kisses.

"Isn't he the bum scout?" sobbed Esmeralda Hooligan, "and just as I was getting interested in him." As the authoress of the lovely ballad, "The Lips that Lick Liquor Will Never Lick Mine," it does look as if Esmeralda were out of the running.

Georgia and Alabama Kuhn, the gold brick twins of poesy and song, submitted several epigrammatic answers to the question, "What is a Kiss?" Here are some of them:

"The place where two souls meet."

"A link in the chain of matrimony."

"A hothouse for two lips"—tulips, darn you.

"A red seal on the declaration of love."

"A burnt offering on the altar of passion."

"Something that a man should have against a lady."

The club offers a magnificent button for the best definition of a kiss and the entries will be compiled in the club scrapbook.

Mavourneen Briggs submitted some verses written by the hermit poet of the Verdugo Hills as descriptive of the kiss of passion.

They scamper as follows:

The World's Desire.

Could I but hold thee in love's warm embrace,
With velvet lips in dalliance glued to mine,
The half-closed eyes would still illume thy face,
While passion through my veins would rush like wine.

Then might the stars their lofty course pursue,
And shackled time go faltering into night,
Forgetting all, dear one, I'd cling to you,
And your white arms should measure my delight.

Other poems of passion were offered by Nora Marks, Nicholas Handysides, Wanda Lott, Arthur Moore Cumming, Maizie Field, Ida Claire and Benton Marion Young, and some of them will be presented at the next symposium of the club. The fact that the Happy Thoughters had secured the ghosts of Lord Byron, Tom Moore and Robert Burns as judges in a competition for osculatory verse has aroused world-wide interest, and the club clairvoyant has been congratulated by the King of Spain on her genius and diplomacy in securing the services and interest of this matchless trio of authorities.

Walt Le Noir Church, the Pegasus prodder of the San Diego hills, offers a double-barreled limerick, as follows:

Cross Purposes.

Miss Bonny Bardine of Bernardino
Could tell most of us much more than we know.
Then a high-browish cub
Freshly out from the hub
Asked her—but how in she-ol could she know?

But Bonny Bardine of Bernardino
Came right back, sir, as only could she know.
Shot him movie-show slang,
Knocked him dumb with a bang!
For how in sweet Hades could he know?

Harikari Shimose, the Nipponese nightingale, talks of challenging Sir Rabindranath Tagore to a "poultry" tournament, in which the mysticism of the Orient should be poured into verbal moulds of beauty. Some of the Japanese poet's friends think he is somewhat precipitous and assertive, but the Old Resident thinks he will make good, and offers his services as a second in case a tournament materializes.

With further greetings from Myra Marr and Dixie Triganza the symposium ended in order that Director David Oliver Tobasco could get a few hundred feet of film for the club drama.

Meanwhile all applications for membership or communications to the club; all entries in the prize competition for verses on the kiss or prose definitions of a kiss, and all contributions in the limerick, movie star or campaign poetry contests may be addressed to Eugene Brown, Editorial Rooms, The Times—just like that.

That'll be about all for today.

Patriotism in War Business.

[London Chronicle:] A splendid instance of the patriotism of a Canadian firm is communicated by the Ministry of Munitions.

When Lord Rhondda was representing the Ministry of Munitions in Canada he had some negotiations with the Canadian Cartridge Company of Hamilton, Ont. The firm took a very large contract for the manufacture of cartridge cases and announced their intention of refunding to the government the difference between the contract price and the cost of manufacture. The firm has now completed the work in advance of the schedule time, and Mr. F. W. Baillie, the president of the company, has handed to the Imperial Munitions Board in Canada a check for $758,248 (about £151,600.) This is the difference between the contract price and the bare cost of materials and manufacture, without any allowance for amortization of plant.

Mr. Montagu has addressed a very warm letter of thanks to Mr. Baillie.

A sale: the most noteworthy in the history of the player-piano

"TREMENDOUS" does not describe it. "Noteworthy" does not nearly tell the story. "Of greatest merit" does not fully describe the sale of player-pianos which opens in our warerooms tomorrow morning. No word or phrase in the English language fittingly describes it.

For tomorrow morning we open a carefully planned sale of player-pianos which can well go down in the history of the piano industry as the most unique, the most meritorious, the most far-reaching in the eminent distinction of its merchandise, of any sale ever held.

42 Grand Prix Autopianos $495 each

The Grand Prix Autopiano is the embodiment of every good point The Autopiano Company knows, or has experienced, or can imagine, about player-piano building.

The Grand Prix model Autopiano is the very pinnacle of player-piano construction. It is the "Ne Plus Ultra": The Supreme: The "Can't go beyond" of player-piano building.

It represents all that is known and all that has been experienced by one of the most distinguished player-piano manufacturing concerns in the world.

The Grand Prix is the model DE LUXE of player-piano builders who manufacture for and cater and sell to the most exacting and discriminating people in every land where music is a part of daily life.

That you may share, in part, the good feeling we enjoy in this announcement, let us tell you something about the Autopiano or rather about The Autopiano Company, the inspiration and joint sponsor, with us, of this sale.

The AUTOPIANO is in use on over 100 vessels in the U. S. Navy.

The AUTOPIANO CO. received the Gold Medal at the Alaska-Yukon Exposition.

The AUTOPIANO Co. received a Gold Medal at the London Festival of Empire Imperial Exposition and Pageant, 1911.

The AUTOPIANO. CO. has received a Royal Appointment from His Majesty, Alphonse XIII, King of Spain.

The AUTOPIANO CO. is the Official Purveyor to the Holy See (Rome).

A bit of intimate Autopiano history showing extent of its world honors

The Autopiano is one of the pioneers in the player-piano field. Yet it is but twelve years old. It was a success from the time when it was scarcely a year old. It quickly covered the United States with its distinguished product. Then came Canada; then Mexico. After that, South America and England, and the remainder of Europe, Australia, Asia and Africa in turn. Then it began to take on the honors its product deserved. You could fill a book with the names of its distinguished patrons. And, mind you, this is a company which is not ripe in years. This is a company of twelve years' growth. A modern business house. Of the innumerable honors The Autopiano Company has received, let us mention a few taken from every rank and station of human endeavor:

1. Royal Appointment from His Majesty, Alphonso XIII, King of Spain.
2. Two Gold Medals and Royal Appointments from His Imperial Majesty, Ahmed Mizra, Shah of Persia.
3. Endorsement of L'Abbi Lorenzo Perosi, Conductor of the famous Sistine Choir at the Vatican.
4. Order of Saint Sylvester bestowed by His Holiness, Pope Pius X, on Mr. Charles Kohler, as founder of The Autopiano Co.
5. Endorsements of: Puccini—greatest living operatic composer. Victor Herbert—greatest light opera composer of the present day. Tetrazini—greatest coloratura soprano. Mary Garden—greatest dramatic soprano.
6. Gold Medals and Awards from: Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. Rotterdam International Musical Exposition. Manchester Coronation Exposition. London Festival of Empire Imperial Exposition and Pageant. Leeds Industrial Exposition. Petrograd International Exposition. Turin International Exposition. London Anglo-American Exposition. Lyons Industrial Exposition. Panama-Pacific International Exposition. San Diego Panama-California Exposition.
7.—Eighteen of the State Commissions at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition officially selected the Autopiano to occupy places of honor in the buildings erected to represent their respective commonwealths.
8. The Autopiano is in use on over 100 U. S. Dreadnoughts, Battleships, Cruisers and Torpedo Boat Destroyers, as well as in many U. S. Army Posts.
9. And now comes its latest honor—The Autopiano Company having just received notice of its appointment as Official Purveyor to the Holy See. This is a great honor indeed and further illustrates the great esteem in which the Autopiano is held.

The AUTOPIANO CO. received two Gold Medals and Royal Appointments from the Shah of Persia.

The AUTOPIANO CO. received three Gold Medals at the Panama-Pacific Exposition (San Francisco.)

The AUTOPIANO CO. received a Gold Medal at the San Diego-Panama California Exposition.

The AUTOPIANO CO. received a Gold Medal at the Turin (Italy) International Exposition, 1911.

Describing in detail the Grand Prix Autopiano of which this sale is the exclusive means of procuring one

There have been 2000 Grand Prix Autopianos made. There will never be another one made. When the two thousandth Grand Prix Autopiano will have been finished and sold there will never be another made or offered for sale. Of this number, our quota is forty-two.

These 2000 Grand Prix models were built in commemoration of all the many distinguished honors which have come to The Autopiano throughout its whole life from every source: from Countries, Governments, States, International Exhibitions, World Fairs, Societies, the Clergy, the U. S. Navy, etc., etc.

These 2000 superb instruments are being distributed throughout the whole civilized world through the representatives of The Autopiano Company, of which we are one.

Every representative or Autopiano dealer gets his quota. No more or no less—and it is this rigid rule that limits our proportion to forty-two instruments.

Liberal conditions upon which the Grand Prix can be purchased

The price of the Grand Prix Autopiano has been placed within the reach of everyone at $495.

The instrument itself would easily justify a price of $650, for compared with other player-pianos, its value is easily $650.

Yet, its price has been fixed at a popular figure, so that everyone who would prize or covet one can easily afford to procure one: $495.

Terms of payment will be arranged to suit your convenience, up to the point of your taking three whole years to make your payments.

You may make a small cash payment at the time you make your selection. You may then, if you wish, divide the balance into monthly, quarterly, or semi-yearly payments, extended over a three year period, as best suits you.

The guarantee under which the Grand Prix Autopiano is sold is: "FULLEST SATISFACTION, THE PRIVILEGE OF EXCHANGING OR YOUR MONEY BACK."

1. Your money back within 30 days.
2. Privilege to exchange at full price within six months.
3. Unconditional and unreserved guarantee for 5 years from date of purchase.

Note: Included with the Grand Prix Autopiano without extra cost, is a bench or chair to match the instrument, and your choice of 20 rolls of music from our Free Library. We furnish music free and change as often as desired.

THE HELPING HAND.

"How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

Here's an interesting thing concerning George W. Norris, President Wilson's appointee to direct the operations of the rural credits act. During all the time he was a city official of Philadelphia at $10,000 per year he never used a cent of his salary for himself. He divided it between the police pension and other charities. Once they persuaded him to explain. He said:

"The plain fact is that I have all I need. I don't know of any reason why I should spend my life piling up money that I don't want. Yet I simply do not feel that I would be warranted in retiring from business and becoming a loafer. Every man owes something in service. I think I can best pay my debt by giving of my training and experience to help solve the problems that have come under my notice in a concrete way for years."

One million dollars for pensioning preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church was given in September, according to information received by the Board of Conference Claimants, from Rev. Dr. Joseph B. Hingeley, general secretary, Chicago.

Announcement also was made that a check for $450,000 had been received at Chicago, being the first payment on the $750,000 bequest made by Mrs. Helen S. James of New York, to the Board of Conference Claimants.

Figures presented by Dr. J. B. Hingeley relative to preachers' pensions and ministerial relief showed that this department at least is engaged in "big business." Thirteen evangelical churches, he said, had united to procure a pension fund of $50,000,000. Of this amount approximately $20,000,000 has been raised.

Eight years ago, when Dr. Hingeley took charge of the pensioning department, he said, $600,000 was paid superannuated clergymen in one year. Last year $1,200,000 was distributed and the programme for the year ending with 1917 calls for a pension expenditure of $2,000,000.

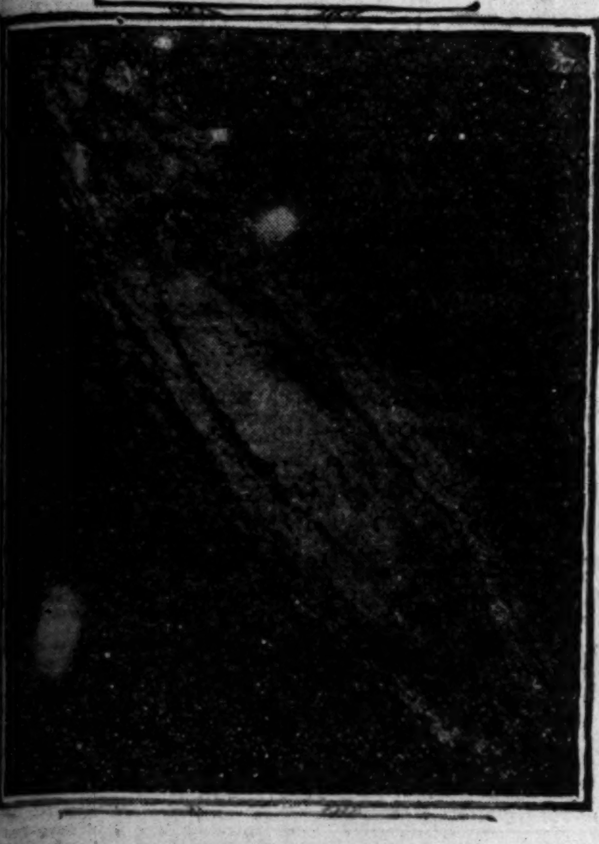
Misty Secrets Unlocked by Science.



One of the sky's wonders.

A photograph of the nebula of Andromeda, that is of a class believed to be enormously distant, separate sidereal systems; other galaxies of suns with their own centers of rotation, plunged into inconceivable depths of space.

WHAT ASTRONOMERS HAVE DONE IN PRESENT CENTURY

Probably the Most Important Advance Is Embodied in Observations and Conclusions Concerning the Nature and Motions of Nebulae. Multitude of Spectroscopic Binaries Realized—Retrograde Motion of Newly Found Satellites Compels Modification of Laplace's Nebular Theory—Relation of Radium and Astronomical Research.

BY WILLIAM H. KNIGHT.

PROBABLY the most important department of work in astronomical research thus far in the twentieth century is embodied in certain discoveries and the conclusions arrived at concerning the nature and motions of those numerous, diffuse and distant objects known as nebulae. Within this brief period we have learned that nebulae are moving with great velocity in various directions across the celestial sphere, and also toward and from our solar system in the line of sight.

But equally important is the fact that internal movements have been detected, as spectroscopic investigation shows that in some of the great nebulae axial rotation actually exists. In other words, those mighty fields of hazy light, often ten thousands of millions of miles in extent, are revolving around central axes of their own. This is highly suggestive of a process of world formation, going on before our eyes, such as was imagined by Laplace in his ingenious theory of the origin of the solar system.

It was in February, 1901, that Nova Persei suddenly blazed forth from the depths of space, forming a conspicuous object in our siderial universe, where, twenty-four hours previous, no star was visible. As its brightness dwindled during the next few weeks, the photographic film of long exposure recorded its expansion into a characteristic field of nebulosity, vastly greater than that of our entire solar system. A reasonable conjecture attributed the phenomenon to the collision of two great worlds. The impact of these bodies, brought together with stellar velocities by their mutual attraction, instantly generated a temperature that reduced them to a molten and even a gaseous state, so that the materials of which they were composed, as varied perhaps as those which compose the crust of the earth, were driven by convective currents, and with great velocity, far out into surrounding space—the whole mass self-luminous for the time being, or illuminated by the blazing central mass, of unknown distance from us—perhaps several hundred light years.

WORLDS TO FORM.

In the course of time the nebula thus produced, having an initial rotation started by an impact that would not, in a million chances to one, be absolutely square and direct, there would, as the rotatory motion was set up, in the course of astronomical ages, be centers of condensation, produced by gravitational attraction in the denser portions of the nebulous cloud, and siderial or planetary worlds would be formed. And observers closer than ourselves to this great destructive and recuperative exhibition of cosmic transformations, would witness on a grand scale what Laplace in imagination witnessed when the matter now forming the orderly solar system was a field of nebulosity extending a thousand million miles beyond our outermost known planet.

Within the last quarter of a century we have become cognizant of a multitude of spectroscopic binaries, where two mighty suns, too close to be separated by the most powerful telescopes, are known to be revolving around a common center of gravity with enormous velocity, and in the very nature of the case, producing mutually great tidal protuberances or tongues of flames directed toward each other. Though these majestic phenomena are not visible to the physical eye, even when supplemented by the most skillful optical agencies, yet the trained intellect of man, with its creative imagination, clearly perceives these mighty suns, blazing with unquenchable fires, pursuing their undeviating course, even as with his physical eye he nightly watches bright Jupiter climbing the cerulean heights of the celestial sphere. Two notable spectroscopic binaries are Mizar in Ursa Major and Beta Aurigae, above the constellation of Orion.

OTHER UNIVERSES.

We can scarcely doubt that some of the well-defined nebulae—like that of Andromeda and others which have distinct spiral convolutions and apparent centers of concentration, but whose blended light cannot be dissolved into starry systems on account of their almost infinite distance—we cannot doubt that some of these wonderful aggregations of worlds are independent universes, in magnitude and diversity not unlike our own visible siderial system.

To the intelligent and instructed peoples in some of their habitable worlds, our great and complex siderial system, with its myriad girdling stars in the Milky Way, its giant suns, Arcturus, Canopus, Rigel and Antares, gleaming among its otherwise confluent streams of hazy light—to them our system, distant and faint though it may be, must present a spectacle as suggestive to the minds of trained observers, as many of the spiral nebulae are to the terrestrial astronomers of today.

Within the present century we have found that Phoebe, the most distant satellite of Saturn, and also two of the recently-discovered outermost satellites of Jupiter, have retrograde motions, compelling a modification in some degree of Laplace's nebular theory, though not necessarily conflicting with its larger conceptions. We do not know but these very small, telescopic objects may once have been comets or other vagrant bodies wandering through space, and captured by the powerful attraction of these giant planets. The same theory may account for the existence of Barnard's fifth satellite of Jupiter, and also for the two tiny satellites of Mars.

RADIUM AND ASTRONOMY.

When Mme. Curie discovered the new element radium, in the last year of the nineteenth century, no one suspected it would have any cosmic significance, but this remarkable element impinges upon astronomical research in two aspects. Its disintegration results in the production of helium. That previously-unknown element was detected in the corona of the sun in the early 90's by Sir Norman Lockyer. It was subsequently obtained from certain earthy minerals, in which it was occluded by Sir William Ramsay. Still later Sir J. J. Thomson found that radium is constantly projecting into surrounding space ions of helium, and that this process is attended with the production of heat. Not only so, but radium is itself a product of the slow disintegration of uranium.

Now what bearing do these facts have upon astrophysical astronomy? Why, it is found that the spectrum of the Sirian type of stars—the brightest in the heavens—shows the presence of helium in a marked degree. It is thence inferred that there is perhaps an immense basic supply of uranium in those bodies, the disintegration of which produces an incessant and unlimited supply of radium, and furthermore that the activity of radium in projecting the heat-producing helium particles, may be a factor in keeping up the intense heat of the stars.

It is furthermore conjectured that the constant and unvarying temperature of the earth, which has existed for millions of years, judging from the abundance of vegetable and animal life revealed by geological strata, may also be due to deep subterranean deposits of uranium, slowly being transmuted into radium, and the incessant bombardment of the radium particles within the earth's crust preserves the perpetual equilibrium of its temperature.

¶ The Times completely overwhelms and submerges every other newspaper in Los Angeles in the volume of classified and display advertising printed every month in the year. This is due to the undeniable fact that The Times gets its advertising patrons quicker and better results than any other local medium.

DANCES, SONGS AND DRAMA.

Pupils of Local Art Instructor Give Attractive Recital.

An artistic and thoroughly entertaining programme was presented by pupils of Madame Matildita Thursday evening. Her class appeared in a series of sketches, dances and songs at Gamut Auditorium.

A delicate, yet satisfying, presentation was made of picturesque bits of Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird." Those who took part were: Bessie Crouch, Mona Mullin, Edna Schofield, Evelyn Friedman, Robert Benton, Gladys Danielson, Ruth Gortekev and Mary Louise Larkin. The production was under the direction of Miss Miriam Meredith.

The remainder of the programme was taken up with varied dances and songs, and a sketch, all of which made an appeal of beauty and artistry. Those on the programme were Francis Rudnick, Phoebe Campbell, Anita Saunders, Mona Mullin, Catherine Annan, Ruth White, Suzan Avery, Lena Sprout, Blanche Strohemeyer, Tiny Crouch, Pauline Becker, Roland Oger, Consuelo Healey, Hazel Stewart, Katherine Leach, Geraldine Masinter, Bessie Gibbs, Marjorie Wells, Burke Wells and Grace Goldner.

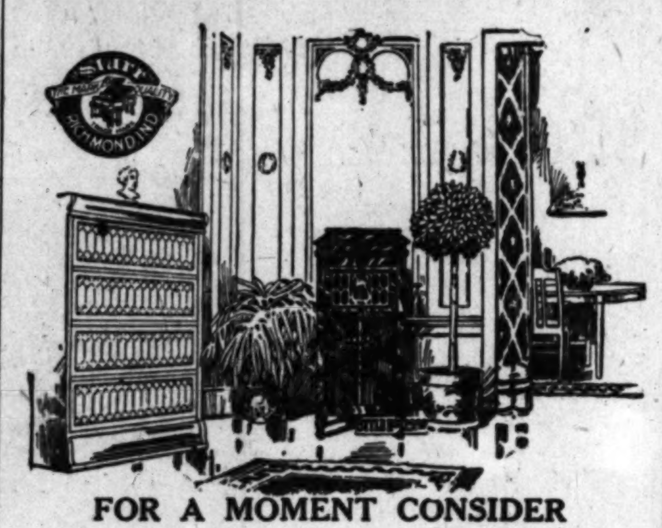
Two talented pupils of Thomas Taylor Drill assisted, namely, Miss Josephine Selecman, daughter of Rev. Charles Selecman, pastor of Trinity Church, who sang Tosti's "Serenata," and Miss Marjorie Walls, who gave Tosti's "Mattinata."

PICTURE PLEASES EASTERN EDITOR.

Robert H. Davis, editor of Munsey's Magazine, is jubilant over the successful filmization of one of his most popular novels—"We Are French." This interesting story was produced by Director Rupert Julian with a large company at Universal City. Elaborate interior and exterior settings, one of the latter being a faithful reproduction of an entire Brittany street, have added color to the photoplay. More than 2000 soldiers were used in the battle scenes, most of which were made on the desert at Oxnard. The principal roles in the production were taken by Julian, Ella Hall and Kingsley Benedict.

For All Complexion Ills

If the skin be colorless, sallow, muddy, over-red, blotchy or freckled, nothing will so surely overcome the condition as ordinary mercolized wax. It literally takes off a bad complexion—absorbs the dead and near-dead particles of surface skin, gently, gradually, causing no inconvenience at all. A new complexion is then in evidence, clear, spotless, delicately soft and beautiful. One ounce of this wax, procurable at any drug store, will rejuvenate even the worst complexion. It is used like cold cream.



FOR A MOMENT CONSIDER
BOOKS AND RECORDS

In books you have available the literature of the world, the stories, the history, the romance of many lands.

In records you have the music of every people, the great operas in song and orchestration, the folk dances of bygone days, the song hits from the latest Broadway show.

The phonograph can be made a greater force than books in broadening and developing the human race. Music precedes literature in the life of every individual.

You would think a man strange, who insisted he had no use for books.
Is it possible that this has been your atttiude toward the phonograph?

If you have objected to the talking machine on the grounds of unsatisfactory musical qualities—then you haven't heard the STARR.

"Wrinkles? Use This Now. See The Difference Tomorrow"

"Nothing So Easy When You Know How," Says the Stage Beauty, Valeska Suratt. She Tells How They Do It on the Stage.

BY VALESKA SURATT.

YES, my dear sisters, you can get rid of wrinkles off the stage as well as you can on it. We stage people are not so constantly at work on our complexions as you think we are. Make-up, of course, is another matter. But we make it our business to keep our faces young. It is just as important as to eat. When you get the right materials, it is wonderfully easy to get rid of wrinkles.

There is nothing in this wide world so remarkable in its action as the formula I have made up myself. Thousands are using it today with astonishing success. Go to the drug store and get two ounces of eptol. Mix it in half a pint of water and add one tablespoonful of glycerine. That is all there is to it. Apply it liberally, the more the merrier, and the more quickly you will see wrinkles everywhere just die away. I'll promise you a surprise, if you try it.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS.

HAIRY LIP—"I've almost got a mustache—nothing seems to remove it." Ans.: That's the same complaint I have about all the superfluous hair-burners sold. It has been my experience. Ever hear of dissolving away hair? It's the only successful way. Get some sulfo solution at the drug store, and moisten the hairs with it. No matter how thick, the hairs simply dissolve—disappear. This never fails, and never harms or spots the skin. It is almost miraculous in its action anywhere on the body, and is safe.

MISS ELDER—It probably was a new clerk in that drug store. Hereafter if you have trouble getting the beta-quinol for making my hair-growing formula, send fifty cents to "Secretary to Valeska Suratt, Thompson Bldg., Chicago." It will be forwarded to you at once.

• • •

MRS. F. G. L.—You can scrub and scrub until you are blue in the face and you will never get rid of dandruff. There is only one way and that is to dissolve it. The only thing that dissolves it is eggol, which drug stores sell for twenty-five cents, and it lasts you for over a dozen of the most exquisite shampoos and headwashes you ever had. Dissolve a teaspoonful in half a cup of water, and it's ready.

FORMLESS—"How can I develop a flabby bust?" Ans.: No sincere person, my dear, can positively promise you success. Yet, a mixture of two ounces of ruetone, half a cup of sugar and half a pint of water, has done the work for countless women I know. It is without question the only thing to use. Of the above mixture, take two teaspoonfuls after meals and at bed-time.

MISS N. X.—You'll squeeze and squeeze until you've ruined your face trying to remove blackheads. I'll tell you what to do and you'll get rid of them, not in a few weeks, but in a few minutes. Yes, I mean just that. Sprinkle a little powdered neroxin on a wet sponge or cloth and rub it on the blackheads. Then look in the mirror and see the difference.

CURIOUS—I had to laugh when I read your letter. The very formula your friend is using on her complexion with such wonderful success, and which she calls zintone, and won't tell you how to make, is my own. Here it is—use it and get back at her in a hurry. She'll see the difference in you in a few days. Get one ounce of zintone at the drug store and mix it with two tablespoonfuls of glycerine and a pint of water. You'll get the same results she obtained, without any question. Don't say a word to her. You'll see her open her eyes. This certainly is a marvelous complexion beautifier.

MRS. FANNY F.—I never used a face powder yet, no matter how costly, that wasn't chalky. So I have my own made up from my formula. Such fineness and smoothness you never, never experienced. Try it and get a new powder delight. You can get it in drug stores now for fifty cents in white, flesh or brunette tints. Ask for "Valeska Suratt Face Powder."

• • •

MRS. "SHORT"—What will stop my hair coming out by the combful?" Ans.: Your hair simply lacks growing strength. Your hair will grow longer and more beautiful than you ever saw it before if you will use what hundreds of my friends say is a truly magic hair treatment. It's my own formula, and I can guarantee you results. Get one ounce of beta-quinol from your druggist. Mix with water and alcohol, half a pint each, or with one full pint of bay rum. Apply to scalp and hair freely and every day. There's nothing more economical—nothing known that will do what it does. Try it.

GALA FILM PROGRAMME.

NOTED FEATURES AND STARS TO DAZZLE FANS.

This will be red-letter week in local motion-picture circles, ushering in, as it does, the long-anticipated showing of D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, "Intolerance." This is the first picture the great director has made since the success of "The Clansman" created a new order of things in the film world.

The week will be a notable one also in that many favorite picture stars will appear in plays especially well-suited to their talents. Among these is June Caprice in "The Ragged Princess," Nance O'Neill in "The Iron Woman," Jane Gray in "The Flower of Faith," Vivian Martin in "Her Father's Son," Sir Herbert Beerbohm-Tree in "The Old Folks at Home" and Tyrone Power in "Where are My Children." A screen debut of a celebrated actor will be E. H. Sothern in "The Chattel."

Clune's Auditorium.

D. W. Griffith's huge production, "Intolerance," will be the attraction at Clune's Auditorium, beginning Tuesday night. The great spectacle will be shown for three weeks. After the premiere performance there will be two showings daily except Sundays. "Intolerance" is the first and only production Mr. Griffith has made since "The Clansman," and during the past two months, while it has been shown in New York, it has been duplicating the success of the former sensational feature.

Griffith's new offering carries four parallel stories of different ages of human history. Some of the greatest characters in the world's development are pictured at war with the irresistible currents of thought which dominated their ages.

The entire conception is poetic and epical. The amazing magnitude of the production, including the most gigantic settings ever erected and the use of thousands of persons, combined with the thrilling and heroic story, is said to make the feature a surpassing one. Ancient Babylon is shown; Judea is reproduced, and Paris of the middle ages is reconstructed as the reel unwinds.

High-power sparklers,

Who will keep your eyes riveted on the screens at the picture-houses this week.

Palace.

"The Return of 'Draw' Egan," a vivid play of western life, will be at the Palace, starting with the matinee today. William Hart and Louise Glaum, two of Thomas H. Ince's best-known stars, have joined forces in this production. Hart has the role of a typical "bad man" of the West, while Louise Glaum has a part well fitted to her "vampire" talents, that of a dance-hall siren. "The Return of 'Draw' Egan" is a gripping play of a "bad man," who goes straight, a worse one who would like to prevent his reformation, and a girl who makes it possible. The action takes place in Yellow Dog, a tough town infested with reckless gunmen who make life miserable for the few respectable citizens. Hart is said to have given another unusual characterization to the screen and is once again at home with two guns on his hip and a chip on his shoulder.

"Puppets," a rollicking two-reel comedy, with Pauline Stark in the leading role, will complete a big double bill.

Symphony.

Nance O'Neill will appear at the Symphony this week in a film version of Margaret Deland's powerful novel, "The Iron Woman." Miss O'Neill has a role in this picture calling for all her dramatic powers. She plays a hard-willed woman whose husband, dying, leaves her the care of his mills. Her nature is as inflexible as the metal her employees work in; she will allow no levity even in her home.

Love for her son is really her motive in all she does, but she hides this behind an exterior so cold that he is driven from her. He squanders money and openly flouts his mother. A love interest enters when he becomes enamored of a girl of whom his mother does not approve.

The story throughout is a very human one dealing with a conflict of wills, and is said to be a masterpiece of its kind.

A clever Sidney Drew comedy completes the bill.

Woodley.

"Her Father's Son," which will be the attraction at the Woodley, beginning tomorrow, is said to give Vivian Martin, whose popularity is waxing steadily greater, the best opportunity of her career. The story is brimful of human interest and there is a happy seasoning of bright comedy. The progress of the story demands Miss Martin's masquerading as a young man within the household of her rich uncle, with the result that a gallant lieutenant wavers between his love for "Frances" as a girl and his fraternal regard for "Francis" as a young man. Meeting her in both roles, and believing the feminine one in which she so bewitches him to be the assumed one, the lieutenant is properly bewildered. The story unfolds most entertainingly.

Herbert Standing and Helen Eddy appear in Miss Martin's support.

A specially-arranged musical programme under the direction of Harry Pike, organist and musical director, will accompany the picture.

Garrick.

"Where are My Children?" the photoplay dealing with birth control, which caused more than ordinary comment when presented here previously, will be given its final showing in Southern California at the Garrick Theater, starting with the matinee today. With Tyrone Power as the star, supported by Marie Walcamp, the film play produced by Lois Weber has been generally accepted as one of the photo sensations of the year.

It is based on a big, vital, gripping story, that of a district attorney, who, after relentlessly prosecuting a fashionable physician because of his illegal practices, finds that his own wife is numbered among the doctor's patients.

Clune's Broadway.

Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, the noted actor-manager, who was knighted for distinguished service to the theater, will be the drawing card at Clune's Broadway commencing today, in "The Old Folks at Home." This is a phodramatic version of a story by Rupert Hughes. This story is a simple and natural one, portraying the unselfish and self-sacrificing love of parents for their children.

Sir Herbert plays the part of an American farmer who has risen through honest striving to be the Congressional candidate of a large district, only to find dishonor in his family. The story of his heart-broken sacrifice is said to be one of the most appealing ever shown on the screen. Josephine Crowell and Spottiswoode Aitken support the star.

Superba.

E. H. Sothern will make his film debut today at the Superba in "The Chattel," a story of American life. Peggy Hyland, the noted English beauty, will play opposite him.

Sothern in the opening scenes appears as Blake Waring, a wealthy financier, whose life code is getting what he wants regardless of price and considering any price fair. He desires possession of a beautiful painting and leaves no stone unturned to get it. Next his fancy turns to a beautiful girl and he persistently woos her until she consents to mary him. Life finally chastens him until his viewpoint becomes entirely changed and the ending is a happy one.

"The Scarlet Runner," second episode, will be the added attraction, with Earle Williams in the leading role.

Miller's.

June Caprice is to be the star at Miller's Theater, starting today. She will appear in the new Fox photoplay, "The Ragged Princess," described as the winsome story of a waif's adventures. It is an adaptation of Frederic Chapin's charming story of the same title. The role of Alicia Jones, the heroine of the tale, is said to be exactly suited to the new film queen and she makes that merry little lady the most captivating sort of a heroine, with her laughing blue eyes, her winning smile and her delightful, girlish manner.

The plot deals with a girl who runs away from an orphanage, and, after appropriating a pair of overalls she finds in someone's barn, hires out as a farm hand. She is later adopted by a rich man from the city, and, after many thrilling and exciting adventures, eventually falls in love.

Tally's Broadway.

"Marvelous Maciste," featuring the giant who appeared in "Cabiria," will remain the attraction at Tally's Broadway this week. This picture is unique among screen attractions in that it features the marvelous strength of Maciste without resort to faking any of the exploits of the hero. Before the vision of the beholder the modern Hercules uproots trees and drags them away; makes children's play of throwing people about; breaks through the ceiling of a room with the mere use of his head and shoulders, and does a thousand other amazing stunts of this order.

The film tells an exciting story and is proving one of the biggest successes every shown at the local picture house.

Alhambra.

"The Flower of Faith" is to be shown at Miller's Alhambra Theater on Hill street, starting today. This is a powerful motion-picture drama with Jane Grey as the star and Frank Mills as the featured player. It portrays love scenes and thrilling adventure, and has many spectacular and beautiful natural high lights.

"The Flower of Faith" was written by Charles T. Dazey and Frank Dazey, the former the author of "In Old Kentucky."

The added attraction is two reels of new Triangle-Keystone fun called "The Danger Girl," featuring Gloria Swanson and Bobbie Vernon.

UNWINDING THE NEWS REEL OF BUSY FILMLAND.

By Grace Kingsley.

Edith Storey, Vitagraph star, who arrived in Los Angeles last Friday, accompanied by her mother, will appear at the Superba Theater tomorrow night, and make a short address.

Miss Storey will begin work some time this week on a big feature in which she plays the role of an Arabian girl. Another picture in which she will star for the Vitagraph will be "Aladdin of Broadway."

Trouble with her eyes as the result of working under lights in the studio is one of Miss Storey's reasons for coming West. She says that one night when going home after a long day's work, she found not only that her eyes burned but that she had partially lost her sight, and she realized that she must either come West where she could work out of doors, or quit altogether for a time, so although she has a delightful home on Long Island, she chose the former course, especially as she has a big liking for California.

Miss Storey's household goods are still in the East. She brings with her only her favorite copy of Kipling, some ravishing New York gowns and her "lucky" peacock feathers. Behind her remain a big library of the best books, her riding horse, and "Oley," her dog, who (she won't allow you to call him "which") she describes as "part French poodle, part Irish skye terrier, part English bull, with a dash of black-and-tan, and my brother says," continues Miss Storey, "the rest of him is Billikin."

Antonio Moreno, who appears with Miss Storey in most of her pictures, may come to California later.

Star Ray's New Rays.

Charlie Ray, the remarkable [illegible] actor of the Ince forces, is [illegible] to be starred, supported by Marjorie Dalton, in a new Triangle feature.

Use Cut-back Method.

The management of the popular Miller Theater down at the junction of Spring and Main streets, announces that contracts have been let and leases signed for the enlargement of the picture-house. When the contemplated changes are completed the theater will seat about 200 persons more than at present. Many innovations will be made also. The management has arranged a sort of fade-out and dissolve method of reconstruction, so that the house will not need to close down at all during the work of enlarging.

U's Blue Ribboner.

While German U-boats were on their voyage of vengeance, the other night, a crowd that would have filled the Studebaker Theater, Chicago, twice over thronged to see the first presentation of the Universal submarine photo-drama, "Twenty Thousand League Under the Sea," with its story of how the first submarine in fiction terrorized the ocean. The play was filmed at the bottom of the ocean by the marvelous inventions of the Williamson brothers, who have solved the secret of sea photography.

The picture contains many thrilling scenes from the depths, including a terrifying combat between the actors and a monster octopus after it seized a pearl diver, the hunting of sharks and dramatic episodes in the marine gardens. President Laemmle and the Universal staff from New York, as well as Ernest Williamson, who himself fought a shark under water, were at the first performance. The picture contains 900 scenes and required nearly two years to complete.

The picture is scheduled for Los Angeles in the near future.

Some Shot is Hart.

When Inceville's cowboys' sporting blood is up hereafter and they want to bet their wagers will have nothing to do with William Hart's shooting ability. These cowboys used the demands of some scenes in "The Return of Draw Egan," in which Hart is starring, recently to decide such a bet.

Ever since Hart associated himself with the Ince players the rough-and-ready lads who wear the chaps and six-shooters have been debating the question of the noted actor's ability with a gun. Most have stoutly maintained that he was an expert shot; others, perhaps in a spirit of joke, have declared that as a marksman Hart is a fine plumber. One of the episodes of the scenario which one of the cowboys chanced to read before the filming, reads as follows: "Scene 155: Show Hart whip out his gun, level it and fire at water barrel. True aim must be taken, for the water must spurt from the puncture."

"Ho, ho!" shouted the cowpunchers in glee. "We'll decide the question now, all right." They made it a point to be present at the making of the scene above described. Hart selected the bung of the barrel and fired. As the pistol shot cracked a thin stream of water burst from the hole it had caused. And the loser of the bet exclaimed, apologetically:

"We knew you could do it, Mr. Hart, but we just wanted to be good gamblers."

SHOWS CHAMPION BALL PLAYERS.

LINE-UP FOR WORLD SERIES IS FEATURE IN WEEKLY.

Los Angeles is Represented by Two Different Subjects in Latest Issue of "Times"-Universal Animated—Trolley Car Crash on Bridge Makes Vivid Picture.

With the world series an absorbing news topic of the past week, the pictures of the ball players lining up for the contest shown in the current issue of the "Times"-Universal Animated Weekly, has been holding the interest of fans who have visited the screen theaters where the feature is on view.

Los Angeles comes in for representation in two different sections of the reel. There are pictures of the one-man submarine which lately attracted so much attention here, because of the fact that it may revolutionize naval warfare. In another portion of different type freshmen and sophomores of Occidental College are shown vying with each other in a hog-tieing rush.

There are some remarkable views of a trolley crash on a bridge in Cleveland to add a sensational element to the pictures, while the welcome to the Duke of Connaught on the occasion of his last visit to Montreal as Canada's ruler draws particular attention.

A novelty in the film is the portion showing the city of Astoria, Or., being put on props to raise the grade of the streets. Other happenings chronicled are a raid on pig pens in the outskirts of New York, by health officers, in the cause of infantile paralysis prevention; a visit of the delegation of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry to President Wilson to discuss censorship, and women armed with axes splitting wood for a clubhouse in Seattle.

WAS HANDCUFF KING.

Willard Describes Origin of His Stretching Stunt.

Willard, "the man who grows," who comes to the Orpheum this week, is able to increase his height at will by seven and a half inches, without the dislocation of joints, and without moving heels or toes from the floor. He also can increase the length of the arms from four to seven inches without dislocation or separation of the joints. He is able to stretch his neck two inches with perfect ease and without an effort.

Says Willard anent the origin of his act: "Recognized as a handcuff king in 1901, I was introducing a feature of releasing myself from handcuffs. While showing one of the demonstrations at a jail in San Francisco, I saw a height machine, which is used by the officials as a means to identify criminals. It then occurred to me that if a man could increase the height so as to avoid identification by the measurements taken by this system, it would be a novelty. I believed that by developing certain muscles which were not commonly used by the average person, this could be accomplished. Strange as it may seem, I achieved the desired effect, and gave a demonstration in three years. I can always increase my height but

LINE-UP FOR WORLD SERIES IS FEATURE IN WEEKLY.

Los Angeles is Represented by Two Different Subjects in Latest Issue of "Times"-Universal Animated—Trolley Car Crash on Bridge Makes Vivid Picture.

With the world series an absorbing news topic of the past week, the pictures of the ball players lining up for the contest shown in the current issue of the "Times"-Universal Animated Weekly, has been holding the interest of fans who have visited the screen theaters where the feature is on view.

Los Angeles comes in for representation in two different sections of the reel. There are pictures of the one-man submarine which lately attracted so much attention here, because of the fact that it may revolutionize naval warfare. In another portion of different type freshmen and sophomores of Occidental College are shown vying with each other in a hog-tieing rush.

There are some remarkable views of a trolley crash on a bridge in Cleveland to add a sensational element to the pictures, while the welcome to the Duke of Connaught on the occasion of his last visit to Montreal as Canada's ruler draws particular attention.

A novelty in the film is the portion showing the city of Astoria, Or., being put on props to raise the grade of the streets. Other happenings chronicled are a raid on pig pens in the outskirts of New York, by health officers, in the cause of infantile paralysis prevention; a visit of the delegation of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry to President Wilson to discuss censorship, and women armed with axes splitting wood for a clubhouse in Seattle.

WAS HANDCUFF KING.

Willard Describes Origin of His Stretching Stunt.

Willard, "the man who grows," who comes to the Orpheum this week, is able to increase his height at will by seven and a half inches, without the dislocation of joints, and without moving heels or toes from the floor. He also can increase the length of the arms from four to seven inches without dislocation or separation of the joints. He is able to stretch his neck two inches with perfect ease and without an effort.

Says Willard anent the origin of his act: "Recognized as a handcuff king in 1901, I was introducing a feature of releasing myself from handcuffs. While showing one of the demonstrations at a jail in San Francisco, I saw a height machine, which is used by the officials as a means to identify criminals. It then occurred to me that if a man could increase the height so as to avoid identification by the measurements taken by this system, it would be a novelty. I believed that by developing certain muscles which were not commonly used by the average person, this could be accomplished. Strange as it may seem, I achieved the desired effect, and gave a demonstration in three years. I can always increase my height but am not sure exactly what the increased height or the length of my arms will be. The difference will be from four to seven and a half inches, depending upon my physical condition.

"I find the exercise very beneficial, and have never had an ache or a pain or any trouble with my stomach since I began working in this way.

"As far as I know I am the only man in the world who has ever been able to demonstrate this growth at will, and I am willing to submit any demonstration to any committee of scientists or medical men at any time, to give what information I can by explanation of the peculiar condition which enables me to accomplish these feats."

CLOSE AEROPLANE SHAVE.

Propellers of Machine Barely Miss Director and Cameraman.

By the narrow margin of six inches Robert Mattingly, an exhibition aviator, escaped striking Jacques Jaccard, director of the Universal serial, "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A.," and Jaccard's chief photographer, Milton Moore, and at the same time wrecking the camera which is operated by Moore.

Jaccard was taking some scenes for the tenth episode of the thrilling serial at Griffith Park, Los Angeles, a few days ago, and Mattingly, whose aeroplane was being used in the pictures, miscalculated his distance in descending, flying just six inches over the heads of Jaccard and Moore, who were standing by the camera. The blades of the propeller barely missed them. The nose of the machine plowed into the ground nearby and part of the stearing gear and one of the planes were damaged. Mattingly jumped from the aeroplane just as it landed, and escaped unhurt.

Having completed his big Universal production, "We are French," in five reels, Director Rupert Julian expects to picturize "The Mistress" as a feature.

It is said that perfectly rational persons who have viewed Lew Fields in the new World-Brady picture, "The Man Who Stood Still," refer to Fields as the "Warfield of the screen."

Gail Kane plays the double role of twins in the new World-Brady picture, "The Scarlet Oath."

The name of Marie Dressler's new assemblage of moving-picture fun for the World film has been changed from "Tillie's Night Out" to "Tillie's Day Off."

instance, who is playing opposite Marie Walcamp in Jacques Jaccard's U serial entitled "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A." Mr. Holt spent several years in Alaska, yet never performed any real stunts, he says, until he joined the Universal. Nevertheless Alaska doubtless gave him nerve and courage, and in the above-named film he performs a number of hair-raising feats. In one scene, he is required to "bull-dog" a steer, which is considered one of the most dangerous pastimes of the cowboys. Holt refused to let anybody double for him, and when all was ready he sat quietly and let a huge Texas steer charge at him. At the right moment he stepped quietly aside, and seized the huge beast by the horns. Then came the battle between man and beast. Inch by inch Holt twisted the head of the animal until in exhaustion it sank to the ground with its conqueror sitting triumphantly on its head. The young actor won the applause of the cowboys of the company, and is now declared to be "one of them."

Face Card in Fox Pack.

Harry Leonhardt, one of the best known theatrical men in the country, arrived in the city Thursday. Mr. Leonhardt was formerly coast manager for the William Fox Film Company, and is now that company's special representative in the Middle West, with headquarters in Chicago. This is his first visit to Los Angeles for many months, and he is especially interested in seeing the big movie plants of his concern that are now located in Edendale and Hollywood. He expects to be in the city for about ten days, and then will go direct to New York City to the annual convention of the managers of the various Fox exchanges.

Lion-Tamer Too!

While Director Douglas Gerrard, of the Universal, doesn't pose as an expert lion tamer or anything like that, he proved himself one one day last week, right there with the comeback, when a big, surly lion named Peter tried to start something in the film play "The Mouse," in which Gerrard is playing, as well as directing.

The lion was to be used in a number of scenes, and these scenes were being made in the jungle arena. A mouse was also being used, the unhappy rodent being placed on a fine net covering the beast. Rex de Roselli, superintendent of the zoo, who was playing a part at the time, found Peter in rather bad humor, and warned Gerrard and the others to be careful.

Now being told to exercise care with a lion, is something like being instructed to manifest gentleness with a volcano, but Gerrard did his best. After much time and patience had been expended in getting the lion under the net, Peter suddenly broke loose and charged directly for Roselli. The latter in trying to evade the beast, fell over a log, and Peter with a roar that echoed through the hills, pounced upon the prostrate superintendent. Enter Director Gerrard, who without waiting to strike a favorite Gerrard attitude, struck the lion on the head with an iron bar, felling the animal to the ground stunned. Roselli escaped with a few scratches and a twisted ankle.

Another War Drama.

Director William V. Mong has nearly completed at Universal City, a two-reel Civil War drama, "The Last of the Morgans." Mong and Nellie Allen play the feature leads. The story is by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude.

Too Busy to Work.

Roscoe Arbuckle, Keystone star, has been almost too busy to work since his arrival from New York. He has been wined and dined and motored and golfed and otherwise entertained every day. His alibi is that they haven't a scenario ready for him at the studio, and that among the dozens he has been reading, submitted to him by aspiring authors, he hasn't found one which affords opportunity both to his genius and his avordupois.

Dazzling Note.

"The Police Chief" is the name of a Keystone just produced with many of the company's stars. The roll call includes Ford Sterling, Harry Gribbon, Hugh Fay, Gene Rogers, May Emory and others, almost equally well known.

Mabel on Advertising.

Mabel Normand was the guest of honor at a luncheon party given by the Los Angeles Ad Club last Tuesday of this week. She extolled the virtues of advertising, especially of that brand for which the Ad Club stands, and was riotously applauded.

Dry Literature.

George Bronson Howard has written a scorching arraignment of the liquor evil, which has been filmed by the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, and is now ready for State right buyers. "The Power of Evil" is the title of the photodrama and it aims to lay down a moral lesson. The interest, it is said, is enhanced by the featuring of Marguerite Nichols in the leading role.

Signal People Dance.

The management of the Hotel del Portal last week gave a ball at El Portal in honor of Miss Helen Holmes and members of the Signal Film Corporation, who are now working in the Yosemite Valley.

Financial Note.

Norma Talmadge, noted film star, is engaged to wed Joseph Schenck of New York, motion-picture producer.

Dainty Doro Busy.

Marie Doro, Lasky star, who has been vacationing, is to begin a new picture this week.

Diana Stunt.

Helen Holmes, leading woman with the Signal Film Corporation, last week killed her first deer. Miss Holmes had decided to hike to Cinaquapin Falls, several miles from the hotel, and to be prepared against the happy accident of starting a deer, she carried a rifle. She actually did see one, and shot him. She shows the antlers to prove it.

To Film Father of Waters.

Myrtle Gonzales and her company expect to take a trip to the Mississippi River this winter for the purpose of filming some scenes in a new feature.

Realism Note.

Permission was this week granted to Director J. P. McGowan by the Yosemite Valley Lumber Company, to use their camps in the production of the Helen Holmes serial, "The Lass of the Lumberlands." In addition, the motion-picture people were granted the privilege of using the lumber company's inclined railway for whatever purposes they may see fit. The railway in question is approximately 8700 feet long, and in that distance rises 3400 feet to the top of a range of mountains. This week it will be used for the double purpose of "snaking" logs from the cuttings to the valley, and providing thrills for the "cold storage" drama.

Hand it to Desmond.

It is probably unnecessary to state that Frank Keenan and William Desmond, Ince stars, are both Irishmen. So also is John Lynch, senario writer. The other day the three were lunching together, when the talk turned upon things Irish. All agreed that their fellow-countrymen were sometimes more valorous than wise.

"They are too temperamental; too moody; too sensitive," said Keenan.

"They are really the most uncomfortable people on earth to get along with," commented Lynch.

"It's true," agreed Desmond musingly, "the Irish are the worst people in the world; the only thing that can be said for them is—they're a d—— sight better than anybody else."

"Childlike and Bland."

Ah Woo, an 85-year-old Chinese, is the newest acquisition to the Ince acting forces at Culver City. He is a little wrinkled-up old man, whose pig tail is streaked with white. He is to appear in the current Ince-Triangle play in which William S. Hart stars.

Realism Quest.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison, with Producer Fred J. Balshofer, have left for San Francisco, where the first scenes of Harold MacGrath's "Pidgin Island" will be staged by the Yorke-Metro company pany. Part of the story transpires in Chinatown, and the trip is for the purpose of procuring the real oriental atmosphere, San Francisco being the locale of perhaps the most picturesque Chinatown in America.

Educational Item.

Louise Glaum and Director Raymond B. West are spending their spare time this week in the "prop" room of the Ince-Triangle studios in Culver City, where they are endeavoring to train one of the smallest animals ever seen on the screen. It is a marmoset, one of a number which recently arrived in Los Angeles from South America. The little creature is very wild, and its teeth are as sharp as needles. Miss Glaum and Director West are kept extremely busy, therefore, holding its chain at arm's length and nursing injured fingers. They assert the animal will be trained in time so that he will appear like a gentleman when the camera's eye is turned on him.

Miss Rich with Farnum.

Vivian Rich, who has been starring in American productions for the past four years, has joined the Fox company, and will play leads opposite William Farnum, under the direction of Frank Lloyd. "The Price of Silence" is the first picture Miss Rich will do for the Fox people.

Clifford with Fox.

William Clifford, who has done such excellent work for both the Metro and the Mutual, has joined the Fox forces.

Other Shooting Stars.

Other recent additions to the Fox forces include Monroe Salisbury and Harry Carey. Both are well-known screen actors.

And It was Rejected!

Here is a scenario recently received at the Fox studios. Undoubtedly it is a masterpiece of its kind. The manuscript is called "The Rival Lovers," and its author describes it as a five-reel feature in fifteen scenes! If brevity be still be considered the soul of wit, the author certainly deserves high rank among America's leading humorists. Judge for yourself:

"Cast of characters: Philip Dale, clerk in clothing store—very dressy; Harry Smart, assistant in automobile store; Emma Stiles, milliner's apprentice girl.

"Tricks do not always win the game.

"Scene 1—Bust scene, Philip Dale.

"Scene 2—Bust scene, Harry Smart.

"Scene 3—Bust scene, Emma Stiles.

"Scene 4—The young man's room.

"Scene 5—Same scene. Philip shows kitten to Harry.

"Scene 6—Same scene. Philip puts kitten in box and places it on mantel.

"Scene 7—Same scene. Philip leaving.

"Scene 8—Harry takes kitten out of box and puts frog in its place.

"Scene 9—Miss Emma's room. Philip talking to her.

"Scene 10—Same scene. She opens box and frog leaps out.

"Scene 11—Same scene. Emma faints.

"Same scene—Same scene. Harry appears, astonished at result of trick.

"Scene 12—Same scene. Harry leaving.

"Scene 14—Same scene. Philip and Emma embracing each other.

"Scene 15—Same scene. Minister marries them."

Rawlinson's Reward.

Herbert Rawlinson of the Universal, who was injured several weeks ago while appearing in scenes being filmed for the U, is recovering rapidly. He will shortly begin work in a big new U feature, which the Universal, in recognition of both Rawlinson's talent and his recent martyrdom, is planning to make one of the biggest films that concern has ever produced.

Miracle Stuff.

Ukuleles stir fond memories within the breast of William Clifford, Fox photoplayer. They remind him of a beautiful afternoon in Hawaii when a six-inch centipede took such a strong fancy to his right leg that it just refused to let go.

The natives rushed about frantically and uttered Hawaiian prayers for him, but this did not prevent his recovery.

Loves Science.

Walter Law thinks so much of this old earth that his hobby is geology. Some one asked the Fox actor recently how such a subject can be of such absorbing interest to him.

"Here's one of the reasons," said Law. He pointed to an advertisement in the back of the book which he held in his hand. It read:

"Blank and Blank, publishers, take pleasure in announcing a new work called 'Extinct Animals,' illustrated with a portrait of the author."

Anna Now a Sad Film.

Anna Luther of the Fox forces, has just begun work on a new feature photoplay, in which she plays the most serious role of her rather frivolous film career.

Why Not Watts?

Gladys Brockwell says she doesn't know whether she's a motion-picture star or a Cook's tourist.

A large part of California is being used in screening Miss Brockwell's new photodrama for William Fox. The first work was done at the Edendale studios. Then the company boarded a special train for Sacramento. Not content with that, they journeyed from there to San Francisco, where several more scenes for the photoplay were snapped. The San Bernardino Mountains were also included in the company's itinerary.

"Every place except Watts," says Miss Brockwell. "And why this invidious reservation? Why not Watts?"

Sincere Indian.

When William S. Hart has to play the role of an Indian he doesn't have to learn how to do it out of a book, nor does he take lessons from the resident Inceville Indians. He just dives down into his memory and brings up the facts he learned when, with his parents on the plains of North Dakota, he mingled with the redskins who inhabited that region. Altogether he spent several of his boyhood years among the Indians.

This knowledge, he asserts, came in very handy in his recently finished picture, "The Dawn Maker."

Plays with Wireless.

Howard Hickman of the Ince forces, has a new hobby. It is wireless telegraphy. Hickman took some lessons from a licensed operator, during the making of his recent picture, "Somewhere in France," in order that he might make no "breaks" in his impersonation of a wireless operator. He became really interested, and is studying the art during his leisure moments.

William Tell Note.

Roy Neill, a newcomer to Triangle patrons, encountered an embarrassing and unscheduled experience recently, during the production at Inceville of "A Corner in Colleens," in which Bessie Barriscale is appearing as star. Neill says that William Tell has nothing on him now.

In the role of Dan Allen, Neill is called upon to offer himself as the target for an apple thrown by Miss Barriscale, who, as Shammie, a tomboy colleen, is concealed in the branches of a tree. Preparing to film the scene, Director Charles Miller selected what purported to be an ancient apple in a fairly advanced state of decay, the selection being made with a viewing to guarding Neill against injury from the missile. But Miller proved himself a bad judge of apples, for, when hurled with feminine might by Miss Barriscale, it struck Neill squarely between the eyes, and proved not spoiled at all, but in sound and healthy condition. Neill saw more stars than comedy in the collision.

Just Like Weary Willie.

William Reed of Balboa, has a grievance, in spite of the implied compliment to his genius.

Reed saw a hobo at Long Beach the other day, and as he was having to play a tramp he fed the man who begged breakfast from him, meanwhile studying the hobo's make-up carefully, and duplicated it as nearly as possible when preparing for the scene. Next day a policeman approached him as he was walking past the Virginia Hotel.

"Sorry that happened yesterday," said the patrolman.

"What?" asked Reed in surprise.

"Why, didn't I try to arrest you for a hobo yesterday?"

"Me? Why, no," answered Reed.

"Well," explained the policeman, "he sure was a good one. He told me he was Reed, the motion-picture actor, that he was on his way to a scene, and I'd better let him go."

Should be Looked Into.

Even the squirrels take note of Ruth Roland's new car. Anyhow, as she was driving to Balboa studio the other morning, a nice fat gray squirrel deliberately sat up and gave the car the close up, the up and down, and the several times over. He wouldn't budge, declares Ruth, and she had to pull over to one side rather than risk running over him. When she told the story at the table in the Balboa Cafe, Director Harry Harvey asked:

"How do you know the squirrel was looking at the car?"

BITS OF VERSE.

Immortality.

The time will come, when you and I shall be Part nothingness and part eternity;
Two flowers on one stem; two flames of fire;
Two notes of music from Apollo's
  lyre;
Two essences forever wafted on,
Through many forms, till earth itself be gone;
And other suns and planets take her place,
To bear a great and godlike human race.
Philosophers and scientists today
Aver that we are born but to decay;
Why reason, then, why educate or teach,
Why strive so hard to practice or to preach,
If you and I no meaning have or cause?
Why love or hate, why make or keep the laws,
If nothing rules our fate but nothingness?
The poet, Omar, says we'll "not be less"
Than nothing; but no optimist is he.
Can it then be too much to hope that we Shall find ourselves in immortality?

Amateur Philosophy.

What's the sense, when stars are shining,
Wasting time and thought in pining
  For the sun?
When your fortunes you're computing,
Why seek trouble by repenting
  Things you've done?

When the girl you love's beside you
And quite willing to provide you
  With a kiss,
What on earth's the sense in sighing
When you might be gratifying
  That sweet miss?

You can always pick up trouble,
And you'll find it, twist-d double,
  If you look;
So take what the gods have handed
  you,
And if trouble seeks to hound you,
  Get the hook.

You.

You are the twilight when the last is through,
The restfulness when the long day goes by,
You are the dayspring and the sunrise, too,
The rose-dawn on the sky.

You are the blessed rain on desert
  sands,
The river that redeems the wilderness,
The healing stream that runs through weary lands
Alone to bless.

You are the water when I faint with thirst,
You are the food when I am famishing,
You are the drop of honey in the first
Wild flower of spring.

You are the azure herald of the spring,
The first glad robin song when
  March is long;
My heart laughs back in rapture welcoming
The first spring song.

You are the Sabbath in the June of year,
The rarest, fairest day when June is come,
The gracious autumn with fruitage
  here,
The harvest home.

You are the strength when body and soul are faint,
The only perfect rose without a sting,
Why hope to tell you all you are, my saint,
For you are everything.

The Rev. Dr. Hughell E. W. Fosbroke, professor of history and religion of Israel at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass., has been elected dean of the General Theological Seminary of New York. Dr. Fosbroke will succeed the Rev. Dr. W. L. Robbins, who resigned.

Frederick Hale, who will restore the title of United States Senator to a citizen of Portland, Me., after a lapse of nearly half a century, is of Senatorial stock, his father, the former Senator Eugene Hale, having been replaced five and a half years ago by Charles F. Johnson, a Democrat. The Senator-elect was born in Detroit in 1874, and his earliest days were spent in that city. He is a graduate of Harvard and of Columbia Law School, having been admitted to the bar in 1899. He was chosen to the Legislature in [illegible] and served one term. He was the Roosevelt leader in Maine in the spring of 1912 and was rewarded with a clean sweep of the four districts, and the State delegation went to Chicago, under his leadership, solidly for the Oyster Bay candidate. In that memorable mix-up he remained with Roosevelt as long as Roosevelt was in the Republican party. He was named as Maine's member of the national committee and is still serving in that capacity.

Complexion Fresh As a Daisy—Not a Wrinkle in sight—Remarkable discovery of skin osmosis quickly enables women with sunken cheeks, wrinkles and marks of age again to become most beautiful, youthful and charming.

By Mlle. Mareix, France's Great Prize Beauty.

It's wonderful to look beautiful and youthful. The Countess de Chevanne, who at seventy years of age possesses a marvelously soft, smooth, velvet-like skin and an almost girl-like complexion, without a wrinkle in sight, told the writer personally in Paris that she owed it all to the discovery of skin osmosis. With this marvelous discovery every complexion blemish can be banished in three nights in many instances, and you can awaken in the morning with a beautiful natural rose-colored complexion as fresh as a daisy.

I have known dozens of hollow-cheeked, wrinkled, aged-looking women, who had given up all hope of ever looking beautiful and youthful again, to "Come back" and again become most beautiful, youthful and fascinating in from two to three weeks' time by this wonderful simple method.

No matter what your age or what you have tried unsuccessfully, skin osmosis will positively bring you new beauty and youth. Merely wash your face in warm water at night and rub in a teaspoonful or two of any good pure roseated cream, which you can obtain from your druggist. In the morning wash the face with cold water and rub in more cream.

In three weeks or less watch the magic transformation. See how the old, hardened, coarse, rough skin turns into new, fresh, soft, youthful looking skin almost before your very eyes, all due to simple skin osmosis produced solely by warm water and roseated cream. But be sure to use only pure roseated cream, as it is an entirely different thing from ordinary face creams and must not be confounded with them. I personally prefer Creme Tokalon (Roseated,) but any good brand will do. If you have wrinkles get a box of Japanese Ice Pencils and use them in connection with the cream and you get quick action on the deepest wrinkles, no matter of how long standing, in one night's time and awaken on the morrow to witness most astonishing results.

I personally guarantee success in every case, in any of my newspaper articles which I write on subjects relating to beauty, or I will refund the amount paid for any products which I recommend, provided you take your dealer's receipt at the time you make your purchase. My American address is Simone Mariex, 20 West 22nd Street, New York.

NOTE:—The manufacturers of Cream Tokalon Roseated have such unbounded confidence in their particular brand, that they offer to forfeit $200.00 to any charitable institution, if it can be shown that it will not banish every complexion blemish and give most astonishing new beauty to wrinkled, care-worn, aged women in three days' time in many instances. It can be obtained absolutely fresh and guaranteed pure from The Sun Drug Co., B. & B. Drug Co., Dickinson's, Boswell & Noyes, The Owl Drug Co., Coulter's, or most any good druggist in this city.

PONDEROUSLY HIGHBROW AND RECKLESSLY MELODRAMATIC.

H. G. Wells writes "Mr. Britling Sees it Through" as a Story of the War—J. McDougall Hay, the Scotch Realist, Pipes for Pennies in "Barnacles"—In "The Mark of the Beast" Mr. Kauffman Draws a Theatric Picture of the South—Francis Tynde Has Another Hero Defeat Evil Corporations.

"Mr. Britling Sees it Through."

H. G. WELLS, as though a little apprehensive that some might not comprehend his latest novel, rewards those that persevere through 210 pages with the information that "this story is essentially the history of the opening and of the realization of the great war as it happened to one small group of people in Essex, and more particularly as it happened to one human brain. It came at first to all these people in a spectacular manner, as a thing happening dramatically and internationally, as a show, as something in the newspapers, something in the character of a historical epoch rather than a personal experience; only by slow degrees did it and its consequences invade the common texture of English life. If this story could be represented by sketches or pictures the central figure would be Mr. Britling, now sitting at his desk by day or by night and writing first at his tract 'And Now War Ends,' and then at other things, now walking about his garden or in Claverings Park or going to and fro in London, at his club reading the ticker or in his hall reading the newspaper, with ideas and impressions continually changing, expanding, developing more and more abundantly in his mind, arranging themselves, reacting upon one another, building themselves into generalizations and conclusions."

—And there you have it.

"Mr. Britling Sees It Through" (The Macmillan Company) is a prodigious effort to record with minutest fidelity everything that the commonplace, dull Mr. Britling thought and did for a period of some months. This novel is a pyramid of sand, and the reader must watch every little grain hoisted into place; and great labor Mr. Wells makes of it, for he always in these later days seems to use a derrick to get his sentences into position, whether or not they are weighty.

And though the book concludes with Mr. Britling in the painful throes of emotional political economy, floundering helplessly through a vague, but anguished, letter to the German family of his German tutor that has been killed—as has Mr. Britling's son—yet in the beginning, and for a third of the way, the book is made up of the ponderous, elephantine humor that Mr. Wells has succeeded in making many people—particularly those that are awed by a "reputation"—believe is satirical and amusing.

No doubt what Mr. Wells has tried to show is the contrast of England before and after the war—the contrast of a man muddling through domestic affairs, the care of pets and flowers and a new and wayward automobile, and the same man trying to comprehend the martial cataclysm that has turned his country topsy-turvy and left his beloved son among the innumerable dead "somewhere in France." And as such, the book may be as authoritative and as valuable as a statistical report—it is scarcely more interesting. Excepting the letters that Hugh writes from the front (which have the literary quality in them that Mr. Wells abandoned about the time he wrote "Tono-Bungay," and he has not written a real novel since then;) the style is laborious; there is a dullness in such imitative Rabelaisian exaggeration as: "Mr. Britling was a flame of exalted voluntaryism, of patriotic devotion, that day. . . . He was prepared now to spread himself like a valiant turkey-gobbler, every feather at its utmost, against the aggressor. . . ." And such as this in a "serious" book is surprising: "In the dim light the sentinel saw the remarkable figure of Mr. Britling make an extravagant gesture, and wondered what it might mean. . . . Mr. Britling was at that moment killing Count Zeppelin and beating out his brains. Count Zeppelin was killed that night and the German Emperor was assassinated." It is as though Mr. Wells were making fun of the man; though it is much easier to believe Mr. Wells quite serious and wholly unconscious of being ridiculous than it is to believe typical Englishmen indulge in imaginary slaughtering, like youngsters chopping Indians to death in a patch of weeds.

Mr. Wells, in his own person, expresses in reference to the "paralyzed [illegible]"—"the withered arm" of the Kaiser (the Crown Prince is "this narrow-fibered, sly, lascivious son") [illegible] he doesn't need be so very important to see a kind of cabalistic [illegible] in thus emphasizing a physical deformity.

Hugh's letters to his father are the [illegible] and best part of the book; [illegible] they are no better than [illegible] not so good as some de[illegible] that have come from the [illegible] and showing the mental attitude of the men that have gone to the front and something of their [illegible]. But those letters are good. Hugh is attractive, admirable, but has no place in the story except as (to use Mr. Wells's word) "reacts" on his father.

Another feature of the book is Mr. Direck, an American, who is more [illegible] continually in contact with [illegible], and who is also rather [illegible] and befuddled. But Mr. Direck furnishes opportunity for Mr. Wells to speak his mind about America and America's attitude. Curiously enough, at these times—[illegible] at any other, except on the Irish question, Mr. Britling expresses clear and definite ideas, and his criticism, though not pleasant to see, is in the opinion of many Americans themselves correct.

As near as we can make out, the vital paragraph of the book is in the letter Mr. Britling indites to the German parents: "Let us pledge ourselves to service. Let us set ourselves with all our minds and all our hearts to the perfecting and working out of the methods of democracy and the ending forever of the kings and emperors and priestcrafts and the bands of adventurers, the traders and owners and forestallers who have betrayed mankind into the morass of hate and blood in which our sons are lost—in which we flounder still."

Noble sentiment, indeed, but a small diamond to be at the apex of such a heap of sand, and a sentiment that does not appear so bright and lustrous when taken in connection with the entire text of the letter.

"Barnacles."

Three years ago J. MacDougall Hay's "Gillespie" appeared. It was a lonesome critic that did not praise the book. It deserved, too, every word of praise that it had—and more. But somebody evidently whispered into the young Scotchman's ear that he would have to "sweeten" up his tales if he wished them to make money. "Gillespie" was grim, severe—and great. It contained passages that moved the ossified souls of professional readers of fiction—but it did not sell in a way anything like commensurate with the praise given to it.

"Barnacles" (George H. Doran Company) should move the ladies to tears; though Barnacles, with his warty face and single eye, is physically such an unattractive hero that there may be some difficulty in stimulating palpitating interest in his poignant love for Mrs. Normanshire, whose wicked husband has caused her much distress.

Part of the plot is riotously melodramatic; and the wicked husband comes to a ghastly death at the hands of his avenging brother, who thus clears the way for an estatically happy-ever-after ending. A fine mess of sentiment, indeed, for the dour young man who wrote "Gillespie" as an indictment of the avarice in his countrymen.

But "Barnacles" is not wholly, nor largely, maudlin. Barnacles himself is a Scotch shadow of The Beloved Vagabond, of whom W. J. Locke has written. Barnacles, too, is a lover of the violin and the guileless, tender friend of the waifs and poor; and those chapters relating to the companionship of Barnacles and wee Kitchener, motherless son of the fish seller, hold both the interest and admiration. Barnacles's ludicrous experiences with sheep; his innocent, star-gazing attitude toward the world and its ways; his kindness of heart and quick, permanent sympathy for all whom he meets—in pain or sorrow, make of him a character that is appealing—but the last man on earth for an intense romance with a cultured woman.

Of course, Mr. Hay has tried to convey the impression that Barnacles is such a man that this woman looks beneath his bumpy face; behind his drooping eye, and has seen the great and good soul; all of which is quite laudable, if those that read are convinced that Mr. Hay has succeeded. But the melodramatic background in the woman's affairs is so incongruous to the whole temper and character of the story, that this "excitement" appears to be nothing more than a carefuly measured portion for the satisfaction of those people that must have their pound of flesh and hour of blood-letting, or they will refuse to believe that any book is "good."

"Olga Bardel."

Stacy Aumonier in "Olga Bardel" (The Century Company) tells of an ugly duckling that, winged by musical genius, emerges with a piano from the London slums as the child prodigy and the hypothetical reincarnation of Chopin. And to make her more interesting to the gaping crowds, her exploiters publish romantic stories no more truthful than those frequently met with on the stage, of how her family was massacred by Turks and how she escaped (wearing the identical dress in which she sometimes plays) from the gleaming scimiters by hiding in a basket of vegetables.

Olga's girlhood is described at length, in detail, and contrasts somewhat with the more hurried and subsequent story of her late life; for she is twice married and expresses herself as willing to be the mistress of a third man.

But she is no common woman, though she is one of nine children, all of whom, other than herself, came to no good end; and her mother before her had a shadowy record. This record, however, is rather cleared by the will of Uncle Grubhofer, the monstrous old man that maintained an enigmatic, malignant protectorate over the Bardels. In his will, Grubhofer leaves his £9000 to the crown, and does so, apparently, because he had never forgiven the mother of the Bardels for rejecting his passionate importunings.

Then it is that Olga discovers that one brother is much better than the other; one curses his mother for not having been a harlot and the other strikes him for the curse. A disreputable family, indeed are the Bardels; but Olga rises to fame and to social graces.

Her first marriage is not unhappy—at least not until she finds that Harry has gone to another woman. And it is characteristic of Olga that she is ready to have a divorce when she understands that he will then be able to marry the "other" woman. Olga endures much for other people, and even does not cast off her disreputable brothers and sisters from her when it is shameful to have them remember her.

The novel is one that cannot please the sentimental arbiters of what shall and what shall not be "popular;" for when it seems that fortune redeems her long suffering patience and unpharisaical goodness of heart by a second marriage to a man of fine character and enviable position, it is soon after that Olga experiences the most poignant of her suffering—it is then that she finds the one man whom she loves above all else, and who in turn loves her.

Mr. Aumonier has a grace of narrative that is attractive; he is vivid and his characters have the quality that is meant when we say that they "live;" and Olga appears as an unusual woman whose story is well worth the telling.

"The Mark of the Beast."

In his preface Mr. Kauffman is at pains to deny that he had any other purpose in writing "The Mark of the Beast" (The Macaulay Company) than to tell a dramatic story; and says that the dramatic complications of which he wished to avail himself practically forced him to choose a southern setting. However, the publishers announce: "Since 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' nobody has dared to write the truth about the South until now. Kauffman has done it in his fearless novel, 'The Mark of the Beast.'"

We are not, however, inclined to believe that Mr. Kauffman wishes to represent that it is typical of southerners to lynch negroes for the lustful crimes of white men. But the publishers seem to put that construction on the story—there is no other construction that can reasonably be surmised from the sensational language of their advertisement. So we do not consider "The Mark of the Beast" as an attempted indictment of southerners, and view it from a basis upon which it has the possibility of some merit; that is, as a sensational story.

Calhoun Ridgeley, though his father "ran away at Shiloh"—"the first Confederate in history to turn tail from sheer fright"—and though Cal has much the same explosive temper that made his father dangerous, is nevertheless respected by the best of the southern families that Mark Sanborn, the New Englander, meets when he comes into the community to build a railroad.

Florida Treville, daughter of Col. Treville, hesitates indecisively between the wooing of the handsome Cal and the gentlemanly Ollie Witherspoon. Cal's bullying and violence toward negroes does not revolt her. He seems in a way to have her magnetized, though she admits that she rather played with him as one tests out one's skill with a high-spirited horse—her own simile and one that reflects no credit on her horsemanship. After Cal has brutally killed a negro for frightening his sister and has represented to the crowd that the negro intended to do what negroes are always killed in the South for doing, he goes to keep an appointment in a lonesome spot with Florida. There she tells Cal definitely that she cannot marry him.

Some hours later, when the girl's unconscious body is found, Cal adroitly turns suspicion toward a mulatto youth—and the mob is up and away and after him, and short work they make of the boy, too.

When Florida recovers and learns what has happened she seeks her own means of forcing justice upon Cal—but Cal seeks his own means of evading her.

The story is sensational, disagreeably so. To us it is not convincing, not even interesting. It has not one bit of the adroit character work that Mr. Kauffman made use of in "Jim," his previous novel. "The Mark of the Beast" is obviously intended to be a novel with a "punch," to be something that will overwhelm and crush and astonish the reader; and it is nothing more than theatric.

"After the Manner of Men."

Francis Lynde is addicted to the Jack Londonesque hero who goes into the rough parts of the country and successfully fights wicked corporation tools, and incidentally has a lot of excitement and the inevitable romance.

"After the Manner of Men" (Charles Scribner's Sons) is a story of the kind, written with Mr. Lynde's usual vigor and is held together with a plot conventionally complicated.

Tregarvon goes into the mountains of Tennessee to rehabilitate a mining property that has been abused by speculators and to which a lawless clan of mountaineers, the McNabs, has a fancied claim.

A very peculiar will of a late uncle does much to tangle the plot: The will leaves millions to Elizabeth Wardwell on the condition that she marry Tregarvon (to whom she was engaged before the uncle's death;) and the millions are to go to Tregarvon in case she throws him over.

Tregarvon feels that he must make good before the wedding takes place so people won't say that he merely took advantage of his wife's millions; and after he discovers Richardia Birrell in the Tennessee mountains and loves her, he feels that he still must marry Elizabeth, for otherwise, by the terms of the will, she would be left impoverished. The complications are wrenched all the more because Elizabeth does not love him; and the man whom she does love plays at being devoted with Richardia.

Stacy Aumonier,

Author of "Olga Bardel" (reviewed on this page.)

However, the lacerating affairs of the heart are worked out to the satisfaction of all parties involved—and of course Tregarvon discovers that the strange man with whom Richardia kept the mysterious tryst is merely her outlawed brother; and it is through the confession of the brother that the attacks made on the mine in which Tregarvon is interested are explained.

"After the Manner of Men" is a characteristic American novel; well enough written as far as stirring narrative goes, and its plot is put together with skill; but the plot is the same old blue printed complications that does service on an average, honestly and literally, in about one novel out of ten.

A HINDU POETESS.

THE GOLDEN THRESHOLD. By Sarojini Naidu. Introduction by Arthur Symons. John Lane Company.

In speaking of Sarojini Naidu in his introduction, Mr. Symons says: "Through that soul I seemed to touch and take hold upon the East. And first there was the wisdom of the East. I have never known anyone who seemed to exist on such large draughts of intellectual day', as this child of seventeen, to whom one could tell all one's personal troubles and agitations, as to a wise old woman."

It was at Mr. Symons's persuasion that the poems are now published. The earliest of them were written when the author was seventeen—some 20 years ago.

Most of poems are lyrics, lilting and clear and simple—simple except for the vivid, oriental phrasing.

"Indian Weavers," complete, with the last line of the second stanza noticeably defective, goes:

"Weavers, weaving at break of day,
Why do you weave a garment so gay?
Blue as the wing of a halcyon wild,
We weave the robes of a new born-child.

"Weavers, weaving at fall of night,
Why do you weave a garment so bright?
Like the plumes of a peacock, purple and green,
We weave the marriage-veils of a queen.

"Weavers, weaving solemn and still,
What do you weave in the moonlight chill?
White as a feather and white as a cloud,
We weave a dead man's funeral shroud."

"The Indian Dancers," of which the last of three stanzas is given, shows how effectively she can use the words of an alien tongue:

"Now silently, now singing and swaying and swinging, like blossoms that bend to the breeze or showers,

Now wantongly winding, they flash, now they falter, and lingering, languish in radiant choir;

Their jewel girt arms and warm, wavering, lily-long fingers enchant through melodious hours,

Eyes ravished with rapture, celestially panting, what passionate bosoms aflaming with fire."

Most of the poems are like "songs," with a musical swing and a simplicity of idea; and the oriental attitude is what gives the verse its distinction. "Suttee" is wholly oriental in idea and imagery; and a beautiful poignant, bit of verse it is, too, as these lines show:

"Lamp of my life, the lips of Death
Hath blown thee out with their sudden breath;
Naught shall revive thy vanished spark.
Love, must I dwell in the living dark?

"Trees of my life, Death's cruel foot
Hath crushed thee down to thy hidden root;
Nought shall restore thy glory fled.
Shall the blossom live when the tree is dead?

"Life of my life, Death's bitter sword
Hath severed us like a broken word,
Rent us in twain who are but one.
Shall the flesh survive when the soul is gone?"

Newspaper Loyalty!

Don C. Seitz, business manager of the New Work World, relates in his new book, "Training for the Newspaper Trade," a story illustrating the "loyalty" which newspapers observe toward their subscribers. He says: "When Robert H. Davis, the editor and playwright, was a boy he served as printer's devil in the office of the Carson Appeal, of which his brother Sam was editor. Late one night as they were rattling off the modest edition on the Washington handpress, a shabby little man crept in and asked if there were any old clothes about that 'a feller' might have. The hooks on the rear office were full of garments discarded by tramp printers after picking up a couple of weeks' pay. He was told to help himself. Shortly he came back to the press side comparatively transformed and watched the clumsy machine curiously.

"'What does the paper cost?' he asked.

"'Eight dollars a year.'

"He dug $8 out of his pants pocket and started to leave.

"'Hold on,' said the foreman, 'where do you want it sent?'

"'I'll let you know,' he replied, 'when I git settled. I'm traveling.'

"He stepped out into the moonlight. In half an hour there was a clatter of hoofs and rattling of arms outside. In came the Sheriff of Carson and a brace of deputies. Had the printers seen anything of a little man, half dressed and unshaven?

"Little Bob was prompt to make reply: 'Yes. He was here half an hour ago.'

"'Which way did he go?'

"Bob started to reply, giving the correct information.

"'Shut up,' said the foreman in his ear, 'I'll attend to this.'

"He went on glibly to lay out a route for the stranger just opposite to the one he had taken—down the main road to the canyon.

"The Sheriff made it known that the visitor was Black Bart, an eminent highwayman who had just escaped from the Nevada penitentiary, and rode away with his deputies—on the wrong trail.

"'What did you lie for, Jim?' Bob asked the foreman.

"'Hell,' he said, 'you wouldn't go back on a subscriber, would you?'"

"Spiritual Writers of America."

George Hamlin Fitch, in "Great Spiritual Writers of America" (Paul Elder & Co.) has very nearly written an introduction to American literature. He comments on the lives and work of Whitman, Emerson, Washington Irving, Hawthorne, Cooper, Longfellow, Lowell, Holmes, Whittier, Poe, Thoreau, Francis Parkman, Mark Twain, Bret Harte, William Dean Howells and Edwin Markham. Throughout he observes the more or less conventional opinion, with one exception: Markham.

Mr. Markham is the only one who has not been, to a large degree, definitely placed in our literature; and Mr. Fitch uses his influence to make that place exceedingly high. In speaking of "The Man with the Hoe" he says that had he written nothing else "he would have been worthy of a place among the great laureates of labor;" and Mr. Fitch says that to his mind it is "the finest thing that has been produced in American literature since the Civil War." He also says that Mr. Howells "easily ranks first among our living novelists"—a statement that with some acerbity some bright members of the younger generation have disputed.

Anne Douglas Sedgwick.

Anne Douglas Sedgwick, author of "Tante" and "The Encounter," says: "Among novelists the Russians are far and away my favorites—Tolstoi first and then Dostoievsky. Turgeneff has never meant so much to me as these two. I have always had immense pleasure in reading Meredith and Henry James, and for the later Henry James I care far more than for the earlier.

"My American friends have sometimes complained a little to me that I should so often seem to choose 'funny' Americans to draw in my novels; but I think that any novelists interested in international contrasts and clashes will understand that; it is the types that still embody the racy, primitive flavor (now, alas, they tell me fading,) who give one one's telling oppositions. . . . And here let me say that I have never 'put' a 'real' character into a book. I have been accused of doing people whom, as a matter of fact, I have never met! My novels always take shape in my mind through an imaginary picture. I mentally see someone, usually a woman, looking so-and-so in such-and-such a room; and I find myself becoming so much interested in her and her room that conjectures start and inferences are drawn and the story begins to grow."

Mrs. Rinehart's Humor.

In commenting on Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Tish," the reviewer, presumably a woman, says in the New York Nation: "Mrs. Rinehart may be described as one of the most industrious and versatile among American entertainers of the younger generation. She knows her audience thoroughly and can do a variety of turns which are bound to please. She can write a mystery story or a farce, or a heart-interest sketch, and 'get across' every time. And she has a keen and rather studiously vulgar sense of humor which has found an effective vent in the present series of tales. It is an odd fact that the women humorists—or let us say comic entertainers—of the day make a great deal of play with coarse jests and gestures . . . Away with prudery! for our soul's salvation and the good of the race and the ears of the groundlings, let us out-male the male with quips about our female anatomy and physiology and dress—to put it badly, our legs and our underclothes."

Ruth Comfort Mitchell.

The Century Company will shortly publish "The Night Court and Other Verse," a collection of poems by Ruth Comfort Mitchell informed throughout by the spirit of communal sympathy and social purpose. The title-poem, "The Night Court," originally published in The Century Magazine, has already achieved a popularity somewhat comparable with that of "The Man With the Hoe." It was written under the pressure of a sudden inspiration. The author had witnessed a session of of the Women's Night Court in New York, and so filled was she with the impression of the scene that she began the poem on the back of an old envelope while going home in the subway, completing it during two or three subsequent subway trips. Once published, it was reprinted all over the country, and has now become known more widely through lectures and recitations.

A Critical Dispute.

The critics disagree as to the reality of Inga Sanderson, the heroine in Owen Johnson's "The Woman Gives." The New York Tribune says Mr. Johnson succeeds in giving her "the living touch; she is the eternal feminine in one of its highest manifestations." The Boston Herald is "convinced of the existence of Inga," and the New York World says: "she is a complex creature and quite creditable." But the Boston Transcript reviewer does not believe that "Inga's hard-won conquest of Dangerfield would be abandoned for the sake of her passion for abstract helpfulness;" and the Chicago Examiner professes to be "amused, grateful and stubbornly incredulous, knowing full well that women like that do not exist."

Not For Wife Spankers.

The man who spanked his wife for refusing to let him kiss her, the wife who submitted to the spanking, and the judge who upheld the man who did the spanking are not the ones to enjoy Charlotte Perkins Gilman's "Women and Economics; A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women as a Factor in Social Evolutions." The author thinks that if anybody in this world is to be spanked it is the husband rather than the wife.

A "CIVILIZED" INDIAN.

FROM THE DEEP WOODS TO CIVILIZATION. By Charles A. Eastman. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

"I am an Indian; and while I have learned much from civilization, for which I am grateful, I have never lost my Indian sense of right and justice"—says Mr. Eastman in closing his autobiographical chapters.

Mr. Eastman is a Sioux; for the first fifteen years he was a "child of the wilderness" as the poets say. Then his father who had both fought white men but had also been impressed by their ingenuity and dominance, made his son go among them to learn of their knowledge and acquire benefits of their civilization. In 1887 Mr. Eastman was graduated from Dartmouth, and after studying medicine at Boston, he took up work as a government physician on the Pine Ridge Agency in South Dakota among his own people. He was there during the "Ghost Dance War," when the Indians, who understood just enough Christianity to know that the white men were not following the precepts of Christ, developed the cult of the "red Christ" that would appear to punish the white men.

Mr. Eastman relates how, after this disturbance, he engaged in a losing fight against political grafters that were robbing and swindling the Indians. But neither his nor the influence of his friends was sufficient to defeat the politicians; so he withdrew to practice medicine at St. Paul—where his fathers and forefathers had lived and hunted. "My great-grandfather's village is now a part of the beautiful park system of the city of Minneapolis," he writes. But he was soon back into work for the benefit of the Indians, a work which he has continued with distinction down to the present.

The story of his life is unique, and has in it big elements of tragedy, and not the least of these elements is the simple indictment of the men that have crowded his people from their hunting grounds, and made in the words: "I have never lost my Indian sense of right and justice."

"YOU KNOW ME, AL."

Any fan having a bad attack of hammockitis and being unable to reach the ball park will find Ring W. Lardner's "You Know Me, Al" (George H. Doran Company) a fairly good substitute for the kaleidoscopic diamond.

A bush leaguer, having been sold to the Chicago Americans, writes from day to day his experiences to his friend, explaining how glad the big leagues are to have him, and what all he is going to do to the fellows that come to bat against him.

Jack is not lacking in a good opinion of himself, either on the diamond or among the ladies, and his love affairs, though rapidly developed and brief, lend much interest to the narrative as unfolded by the young and cocky ball player.

Mr. Lardner has succeeded in giving a unique and interesting personality to the conceited, but perhaps capable, Jack; and also in pervading the story with intimate baseball "atmosphere." The book takes its title from the phrase "You know me, Al," as an idiomatic statement, frequently used, to the effect that "you know, Al, I can always be depended upon effectively to take care of myself in the situation."

THE GOOD OLD GAME.

TRAINING FOR THE NEWSPAPER TRADE. By Don C. Seitz. J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia.

Since Mr. Seitz began the newspaper "game" as a printer's devil and has scrambled up to one of the loftiest perches in the country, being business manager of the New York World, he may be said to have the right to write a book on the newspaper trade.

It is written in newspaper style, which is something different from "journalese," of which tedious essayists complain laboriously; that is, it is simply, directly written; and he reviews briefly all the departments and their work involved in getting out and selling a newspaper.

From the depths of much experience he has written: "The usual editorial view is that there is something nefarious about the business office. . . . The editor can never understand why the business office sells a page which he could use to better advantage for news or a feature. The business office folks cannot comprehend why editors are always accumulating libel suits, or printing things offensive to advertisers; why a reporter can never explain his expense account. . . . It is this wholesome variance that insures independent and reliable editing. Nothing could be more fatal to a newspaper than supine obedience on the part of 'upstairs'"—that from a business manager! Horrors!

He laughs at the fashion among certain types of moralists to decry the newspaper, and points out that a newspaper never prints anything worse than the public does. Also he points out that capitalists are not rich enough to subsidize a newspaper and make it stand long on its feet; and he says that newspapers succeed or fail according to the "personality" put into them.

The editorial, commercial, mechanical departments, including the circulation methods, the art work, and advertising features, are commented on and somewhat explained. Considering his brevity, Mr. Seitz has done "wonders" in telling the story of the newspaper so completely in 163 pages. But then, he was a newspaper man before the business department got its fingers on him and that explains much.

Concerning the ability of an editor, he says:

"The gentleman of Wodsworth's line to whom

'A yellow primrose by the river's brim
A yellow primrose was to him
. . . and it was nothing more' would not do as an editor. The editor is one to turn the primrose into decorative garlands, into a bloom rivaling the orchid, into a decoration for the fairest scenes. . . . (He must) state the facts, nothing but the facts, but state all of them attractively, and if possible, amazingly."

DOUGLAS BECOMES PIOUS.

According to a news dispatch from London, George Moore's new book, "The Brook Kerith," has been made the subject of an application to a magistrate for a summons against the author and publisher on the ground that the novel was "a blasphemous libel on the Holy Scriptures and the Christian religion." Lord Alfred Douglas was the instigator of the application. "His solicitor," to quote the New York Times review of the affair, "contended that what the author portrayed in The Brook Kerith was a perversion of the Gospel narrative which was intended to hold up the Christian religion to ridicule and contempt by suggesting that Jesus Christ was an ignorant, deceitful, violent-tempered and vainglorious impostor."

The magistrate declined to grant the process explaining that he had read the book and that in his opinion it did not come within decided cases in reference to blasphemy.

"INTERNATIONAL"

The catholicity of Mr. Huebsch's Fall list is indicated by the variety of nations represented. There will be a volume of stories by Artzibashef, a Russian; dramas by Hauptmann, a German; two books by James Joyce, an Irishman and "Amores," a volume of poems, and some other books by D. H. Lawrence, and Englishman, and "Young India" by Lajpat Rai, a native of the country whose spokesman he is. Though the majority of books on the list are by foreigners, American authors have a plurality.

PLAN TO CO SYSTEMS

Railroad Commission
California Com
Home Prop

The question whether Los Angeles shall have one telephone system or continue the two existing systems is at stake in a hearing of the State Railroad Commission to begin tomorrow morning, with Commissioners Thelen and Gordon sitting. The hearing is to be on the application of the Southern California Telephone Company to take over and merge the properties of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company in the Los Angeles district.

According to City Attorney Stephens, the attitude of the municipality at this time will be one of watchful waiting—to see that the best interests of the people are safeguarded, and there is said to be no prospect the city will openly oppose the application now. On the other hand, it is probable that if the city is not satisfied with the forthcoming action of the commission the fight will be made before the City Council when the matter of the transfer of the Home franchise to the Southern California Telephone Company comes up for disposition, assuming the application for consolidation is granted.

The appearances tomorrow will be:

For the City—City Attorney Stephens, President Lane of the Board of Public Utilities and Chief Engineer Howells.

For the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company—Attorney H. D. Pillsbury of Pillsbury, Madison and Sutro, San Francisco; C. F. Mason, general superintendent; James T. Shaw, special counsel.

For the Home Telephone Company—Attorneys Robert Frick and H. M. Robinson, President A. B. Cass, Secretary E. P. Morphy.

For the Southern California Telephone Company—Attorneys John Mott and R. J. Dillon.

CITY TO PROTEST.

As the Home Telephone Company has not preferred a request to the City Council to sell its plant to the Southern California Telephone Company the Council yesterday instructed City Attorney Stephens and President Lane and Chief Engineer

PLAN TO CONSOLIDATE 'PHONE SYSTEMS AT STAKE TOMORROW.

Railroad Commission will Hear Application of the Southern California Company for a Merger of Pacific and Home Properties—Big Physical Problem.

THE question whether Los Angeles shall have one telephone system or continue the two existing systems is at stake in a hearing of the State Railroad Commission to begin tomorrow morning, with Commissioners Thelen and Gordon sitting. The hearing is to be on the application of the Southern California Telephone Company to take over and merge the properties of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company in the Los Angeles district.

According to City Attorney Stephens, the attitude of the municipality at this time will be one of watchful waiting—to see that the best interests of the people are safeguarded, and there is said to be no prospect the city will openly oppose the application now. On the other hand, it is probable that if the city is not satisfied with the forthcoming action of the commission the fight will be made before the City Council when the matter of the transfer of the Home franchise to the Southern California Telephone Company comes up for disposition, assuming the application for consolidation is granted.

The appearances tomorrow will be:

For the City—City Attorney Stephens, President Lane of the Board of Public Utilities and Chief Engineer Howells.

For the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company—Attorney H. [illegible] Pillsbury of Pillsbury, Madison and Sutro, San Francisco; C. F. Mason, general superintendent; James T. Shaw, special counsel.

For the Home Telephone Company—Attorneys Robert Frick and [illegible] Robinson, President A. B. Cass, Secretary E. P. Morphy.

For the Southern California Telephone Company—Attorneys John [illegible] and R. J. Dillon.

CITY TO PROTEST.

As the Home Telephone Company has not preferred a request to the City Council to sell its plant to the Southern California Telephone Company the Council yesterday instructed City Attorney Stephens and President Lane and Chief Engineer Howell of the Board of Public Utilities to appear before the commission tomorrow "and present in the name of the city a protest against the issuance of any order by the commission relative to the sale of the Home Telephone Company's plant and equipment unless such order be predicated upon the approval of the sale by the city of Los Angeles, evidenced by ordinance, before any such ordinance becomes effective."

A resolution introduced at the Council session yesterday states that "the Council understands" that the Home Telephone Company and the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company have applied to the commission for authority to sell their telephone apparatus and plant to a new company called the Southern California Telephone Company. It points out, however, that in accordance with the terms of the franchise of the Home Telephone Company no sale can be made except with the approval of the city expressed by ordinance.

CITY'S ARGUMENT.

Such opposition as the city has developed is based, according to President Lane of the Board of Public Utilities, on the ground that while the people want the convenience of one telephone system, under the plan now proposed by the companies there would be no adequate way of insuring satisfactory rates and service or reasonable extensions. Under this reasoning Mr. Lane has publicly advocated interchange of service.

This is true at the same time it is shown the city is in a position to force one of the telephone companies to offer interchange but unable to force the other company to accept.

This situation is brought about by a ruling of the Supreme Court, that interchange cannot be forced on any company without compensation. The Pacific company might be forced to grant interchange with the Home as the price of the renewal of the former's franchise, which is to expire in November, but the Home company has a franchise good for thirty-six more years and could not be required under the California law to accept interchange without payment, particularly for the loss of patrons who might desire, through interchange operation, to give up the Home service.

A year ago, when the Pacific Telephone Company applied for a new franchise, the One Phone League fought the application on the ground that there should be consolidation. The people voted that if the franchise should be granted, universal service must be given, through interchange.

PHYSICAL PROBLEM.

In this vexed matter is involved a complicated problem of physical equipment. There are now in the Los Angeles district 60,000 Home telephone stations and 65,000 Sunset stations. The property of the Home to be taken over, under the proposed consolidation, includes Home phones in South Pasadena and in the Los Angeles district, which embraces small bits of territory outside the actual municipal limits in some directions and the city itself.

It is declared by the companies that if interchange should be established, an interchange plant

By Legislative Enactment.

TO LICENSE REALTY MEN AND DRIVE CROOKS OUT.

Remarkable Answer to Growing Menace of Unscrupulous Swindlers.

WITH the solid backing of the principal organizations of real estate men in California and the hearty indorsement of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges, a bill will be introduced at the next session of the State Legislature to place realty brokers under State license to do business, in the same manner as physicians are licensed. This is the answer of honest real estate men to the swelling menace of the realty crook in California, whose activities have never been more pernicious and extensive than now.

W. W. Mines, president of the Los Angeles Realty Board; Samuel G. Buckbee, president of the San Francisco Real Estate Board, and Fred Burks, president of the Oakland Realty Board, are now in constant correspondence over a plan of action for getting a real estate license bill effectively before the legislators. Each has the entire support of his own powerful organization.

"Reputable realty men are determined if possible to put the real estate business on the same professional plane as the law and medicine," said Mr. Mines yesterday in commenting on the widespread depredations of crooked and irresponsible operators now being so startlingly revealed in numerous cases before the District Attorney's office. "We want a law," he added, "that will compel every man handling real estate in any capacity as an agent to take out a license, this license to be revoked in case he is detected in fraud, just as the license of a doctor is revocable. We want a law so strict that it will be dangerous for a man who has ever had his license taken away from him to attempt to put through a deal of any kind whatever. There can be no such thing as adequate protection either to the honorable realty men or to the public until the business is regulated in this way. The license fee need not be so large as to discourage any honest man from entering the real estate business, and none but the crooks can seriously object to it."

The complaints of wrongdoing laid before the District Attorney's office and the Realty Board by victims of unscrupulous and criminal practices among scoundrels going under the name of real estate men range from the "rough stuff" pulled off by the free excursion ticket peddlers, who make a specialty of browbeating their "guests" out of "first payments," to grand larceny. Some of the bigger "stunts" of the sharpers rival in their complexities the doings of Wallingford.

BIG LEAGUE CROOKS.

The real "big leaguers" among the real estate harpies are the swindlers who regularly and successfully deceive unsuspecting owners of property into encumbering or disposing of their holdings in such a manner that they lose them entirely or are able to recover them only subject to ruinous mortgages and trust deeds, a species of criminal manipulation that takes many forms and has led to wide-spread disaster. Many of those engaged in this kind of crookedness have shown such cunning and intimate knowledge of the delicate procedures involved in skating on the thin ice of legality as to cause the authorities almost to despair at times of stamping them out. Their victims include not only those types of ingrained gullibility, the persons who believe whatever they are told and sign anything and everything without

HUGHES CAMPAIGN PRESSED BY COUNTRY'S BRIGHTEST WOMEN.

BY ALMA WHITAKER.

CANDIDATE CHARLES EVANS HUGHES has the brightest, cleverest and most sincere women of the country campaigning for him. That special train which has sped across the continent bears a score or more of the best feminine characters and intellects. And they are devoting themselves to culling votes for Hughes. And at each city they visit they are met by a reception committee of its best women, ten of whom board the train and escort the distinguished travelers to their next destination. The party will arrive in Los Angeles the 18th inst., when the local committees will include fifty or more of the best feminine brains of the community. Every city of importance boasts its Hughes Alliance, organized and managed exclusively by women with amazing efficiency.

Charles Evans Hughes is the first Presidential candidate who can claim such a compliment. Women have made monster campaigns for suffrage, but this campaign, this amazing special train, is for Mr. Hughes. These brilliant and distinguished women are speaking for Mr. Hughes, devoting all their energies to awakening the country to the importance of making Mr. Hughes the next President. They believe Mr. Hughes stands for the best interests of the nation, that the present administration has been tried and found wanting. And to that end they are giving a month of life to political missionary work, to explaining just why their faith in Mr. Hughes is taking such practical, co-operative and strenuous form.

LOAD OF BRAINS.

That special train carries a freight of intellect, achievement, distinction, the pride of women the country over. For instance, Mary Antin is one of them, the wistful little Jewess, a one-time Russian immigrant to this country, born in a Russian ghetto, and now developed into one of our foremost authoresses. Who has not read her "Promised Land," "They Who Knock at Our Gates" and her many amazingly sympathetic and illuminating articles on the foreign immigrant? A magnetic speaker, too, impressive, sure of her facts, sincere, simple, keen, imaginative. She studied at Columbia University and is married to Prof. Graban of that institution.

Dr. Katherine B. Davis of New York is another, who as superintendent of the State Reformatory for Women, as chairman of the Social and Industrial Conditions Department of New York, and as chairman of the Board of Parole, has won an enviable reputation for her high-mindedness, her executive ability, her sympathetic understanding, her faith in redemption of broken humanity. She is a Vassar graduate, to the credit of that great women's college.

Helen Varick Boswell was chosen by the United States government as investigator of social conditions at Panama. She is chairman of the social and industrial conditions department of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and president of the Women's Forum of New York. A clever speaker, primed to the teeth with knowledge and experience.

Mrs. Raymond Robbins of Chicago has held many important offices in connection with social and industrial conditions in that city. She is president of the Women's Trade Union League, member of the executive board of the Chicago Federation of Labor, chairman of the Committee on Industrial Education, member of the Advisory Committee for the Illinois Free State Employment Bureau and chairman of the Industrial Committee of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs. Associated with labor as she is, her plea for Mr. Hughes takes the form of intense appreciation of many first-class and far-reaching legislative measures for the betterment of labor conditions, pointing to his record as Governor of New York.

Mrs. Nelson O'Shaughnessy, wife of the former Charge d'Affaires in Mexico, author of that entertaining and enlightening book, "The Experiences of a Diplomat's Wife in Mex-

THE REPUBLICAN CALL TO ARMS.

One Great, Dominating Issue Before the People of California—Don't Forget It.

GATHERING their reserves for the closing weeks of the campaign to wrest the control of the national government from the stupid, vacillating and incompetent hands of Democracy, Republican leaders are calling from East to West for a united offensive that will bring into action the full strength of that splendid organization that has welded our republic into a world power of the first magnitude—the Republican party. This tocsin sounded in 1860; it was the call to guarantee freedom from bondage, personal independence for the individual and unity for the nation. It sounded again in 1896, when the forces of unrest, emboldened by a brief period of Democratic rule, sought to destroy the national credit which a century of untiring industry had established and to open the sluices to the floods of social anarchy. These two calls, so nobly heeded, marked the opening of the two great modern eras of our national prosperity. A third occasion has arisen. Again our republic stands at the parting of the ways. There is a tide in the affairs of nations, as well as of men, that must be taken at the flood, and the ship of state must be manned by able navigators.

DRIFTING.

For four years our nation has been drifting, the sport of every contrary wind. Fortunately for us the winds have been light; but the destruction of commerce off our east coast, threatening coalition beyond the rim of our insular possessions in the West, and anarchy steeped in the blood of our own soldiers and citizens to the south of us—all these are portents of an early tempest. It is the time when the nation itself needs the services of every loyal Republican. We must replace a professor of platitudes with a man of action in the citadel of the republic. Great crises produce great men by preparing a field worthy their endeavor. Woodrow Wilson has been tried and failed; he has shown that his greatest strength is in negative action, and never yet in nature, in art or in the human species has aught great or lasting come out of negation.

Excuses and explanations have had their day in court; we must now look to results. We find ourselves facing a world crisis and wholly unprepared for action. Two years of valuable time has been frittered away, simply drifting. Our coasts are unprotected by reason of an inadequate navy; our products, our industry and our labor are unprotected by reason of a Democratic free-trade tariff; the lives and property of our citizens in foreign countries are unprotected by reason of incompetence in our State Department and ignorance and nepotism in our consular service. Wearied by the receipt of meaningless notes from Washington, the English government has adopted a policy of ignoring our State Department and dealing direct with our manufacturers and exporters through Boston and New York offices.

THE TEST.

There is no surer method of judging the capacity of a man in high place than by the caliber of those about him, by the ability of his chief lieutenants. Who are the great men in the Wilson Cabinet? How many average citizens can call as many as three of them by name? Who are the successors of Roosevelt, Taft, Lodge and Root?—each the product of a Republican department. By all these standards Woodrow Wilson and his administration have been tried and found wanting. The one issue that overshadows all else is the return to power of a Republican President and a Republican Congress, and closely allied with this a Republican Legislature. In this year of wars and rumors of wars the first allegiance must be to the national government.

The main issue must not be obscured by a fog of local differences. The burning question is not the wet-and-dry campaign; it is not State highways; it is not the single-tax amendment; it is not our unspeakable elections laws, but the return to power in the State and the nation of the Republican party. In this way alone can the Republican principles of preparedness protection, of efficiency in office and economy in public expenditure be written into the statutes of the State and nation.

California is far removed from the seat of national government, and the average citizen is apt to get his perspective confused, imagining that the ant hill in the foreground is as large as the mountain on the remote rim of the horizon. He places fuel in his orange orchard to smudge against a threatened frost and forgets that the alteration of two figures in a tariff schedule framed 3000 miles away can destroy those trees more surely than the heaviest black frost that ever struck the California citrus belt. He gazes with esthetic pleasure upon the panorama of the island-studded Pacific stretching from our populous southern shores over the edge of the western horizon, and forgets that to safeguard himself and those who will come after him one at least of those islands should be converted from a goat range into a second Helgoland. He receives in return for his days of toil a pay envelope at each week's end, and forgets that the value of that envelope depends much less on the good-will of his employer than on schedules that are argued, compromised and finally signed over on the rim of the continent.

But this is the year when our minds must turn from petty State differences to higher things. All government action is simply the organized action of its component parts; this organization is effected through great political parties, and the greatest of these in the western world is the grand old Republican party, on whose membership rolls appear the names of nearly half the electorate of California.

CONGRESS AT STAKE.

This year Congressmen are elected, eleven of them from California. Do not make the fatal mistake of passing the Republican nominee by and thinking that a Progressive or a Democrat will do as well. Republican principles will never be embodied into laws except by Republicans. Democrats and Progressives running for Congress in California make the plea that they will vote for protective tariffs on California products. Such a plea is worse than charlatanism. If there are not enough Republicans elected to Congress to organize the House and control the Ways and Means Committee there will never be any adequate California tariffs recommended from committee. Those making such a plea are incapacitated by their own words, either through ignorance or dishonesty.

Finally, there is a State Legislature to be selected, one that should permit the State government to work in harmony with the higher authority of the national government. Republicans must be placed on guard at Sacramento. There is an opportunity to cut $5,000,000 from the State tax roll next year; but this work cannot be trusted to mongrels and Democrats. While containing a few weak spots, the Republican ticket on the November ballot is a good ticket. Republicans who vote as they registered will make no serious mistakes. The prosperity of the State and the safety and integrity of the nation demands that this shall be a Republican year. To attain this end every Republican must do his duty. Let us make the big fight for the big thing!

FILIPINOS BARRED FROM CITIZENSHIP.

ACTION OF HAWAIIAN COURT MEETS OPPOSITION.

Local Examiner Jones to be Sent to Island to Make Special Report on Proceedings—Filipinos Held to be Malays and not Eligible to United States Citizenship.

The recent action of the United States courts in Hawaii in admitting a Filipino to American citizenship, has aroused the naturalization bureau at Washington, and Frederick Jones, the local naturalization examiner, will be sent to Honolulu to look into the situation.

So far as known no authority of the national government excepting the Hawaiian courts has declared the eligibility of the Filipinos to become American citizens. They have universally been held as belonging to the Malay race and therefore under the naturalization laws of the country, not eligible to citizenship. Hawaiians were automatically made American citizens when the islands were annexed to the United States during the Harrison administration, but this condition does not obtain as to the Filipinos, who are under the American suzerainty only, and this does not confer American citizenship.

In a few cases, where it has been shown that Hindus applying for citizenship belong to what are known as the "white" caste of East Indians, applications have been granted, but there is a difference of opinion among the courts whether this is proper, and the naturalization laws in that aspect, at least, are somewhat confusing.

The naturalization bureau maintains no agent in Honolulu, and it will be the task of Mr. Jones to not only examine into certificates that have been granted, but to turn back the thousand or more applications of Filipinos that poured into the American courts following the favorable decision admitting a single applicant.

The Filipinos in the Hawaiian group of islands have for some years been endeavoring to secure American citizenship, and they at once took advantage of what was supposed to be a change of front on the part of the American courts, by making applications in a wholesale way. The policy of the naturalization bureau and the laws on the subject are set against the admission of Filipinos, and it is for the purpose of impressing this view upon the Federal authorities in Honolulu that Agent Jones will make the trip.

RIDICULES PLEA.

Judge Sentences Man Despite Unwritten Law Suggestion.

Ridiculing the suggestion that Jose Saragosa had invoked the unwritten law when he killed Pasqual Ramerez, Judge Willis yesterday declared the killing was cold-blooded murder, although the verdict of the jury had only been manslaughter. He detailed the well-conceived plan of Saragosa to get rid of Ramerez when he led him out of the house and around the back of a chicken coop, when he pulled a revolver from his pocket and shot the visitor.

He then sentenced Saragosa to five years in Folsom, stating the sentence was as light as possible under the circumstances.

BURGLAR ROUTED.

The screams of Mrs. Abraham Rosecrans early yesterday morning routed a burglar who was attempting to gain entrance to her home at No. 940 Francisco street. The man had entered through a side window and was proceeding to loot the dining-room of its silverware when Mrs. Rosecrans awoke. Her screams aroused the neighborhood, the burglar escaping during the excitement.

Telephone Merger.

would have to be built, and arrangements made for charging, as in long distance service, the patrons of the one company for service by the other. An alternative for the creation of a central station large enough to handle all the rush business of the two companies would be "hooking up" all their exchanges, which engineers state would be a tremendously expensive proposition.

Further, it is declared each interchange call would have to be paid for separately, and that the process of interchange telephoning would be as slow as long-distance talk at present.

Then it is estimated a single central station would require a six-story office building, fully equipped, with perhaps 300 operators working in three shifts of eight hours each.

An argument for consolidation rather than interchange is based on the fact that with interchange the complete overhead expenses of the Pacific Telephone Company and the Home Telephone Company would have to be maintained, as now, plus the exchange system, with cables connecting every exchange in the city. Cables now laid would be needed to carry the present business handled. But under consolidation many of these cables, as they lie, could be used to connect exchanges. Thus, it is declared, the cost of establishing interchange would be greater than that of consolidation, in the first place, and the cost of operation and of billing separate calls would be higher later on.

DUPLICATION, ALSO.

The duplication argument is also advanced against interchange—double overhead charges, double sets of officers, double corps of engineers, double sets of exchanges and other forms of duplication that now obtain. It is said the people would pay their present telephone rates plus the cost of slow interchange messages, and be worse off in the end; that business men would simply maintain two sets of phones, as at present, to save the delay and expense of interchange service. Moreover, in constructing the interchange plant, installation of both manual and automatic equipment would present problems, while for consolidation it is argued that the best of both types of instruments used in this city could be kept.

The application for this consolidation shows that the present claimed valuation of the Home company is $7,711,000, which is to be taken over at 91½ per cent. by the issuance of $8,427,000 worth of guaranteed bonds of the Southern California Telephone Company. This 91½ per cent. represents the present market value of a 5 per cent. bond

The Pacific company is to receive for its property bonds of the Southern California of a par value of $1,500,000 and stock of the par value of $6,171,500.

This means that the total bond issue of the new Southern California Telephone Company will be at par $9,927,000, or about 65 per cent. of the value of the property, which is set in the application at $15,225,000.

TO SWALLOW SHRINKAGE.

This plan of financing the merger means that the Pacific company, which is to hold the stock issue of the new Southern California Telephone Company, really proposes to pay holders of Home securities the full value of the property and is prepared to swallow, at the expense of its own stockholders, the "shrinkage" that would follow consolidation. This shrinkage would be due to elimination of duplicate equipment and the fact that in this State public utilities' earnings are based on allowed physical valuation of property "used or useful" to the business. Thus, rates, in case of consolidation, will finally be based on the shrunken physical property and no consideration will be given to outstanding stocks and bonds.

It is true the Railroad Commission takes into consideration the cost of money, but in this case the total cost of the money would be only 65 per cent. of the value of the property, as this is the amount of bonds which would be outstanding, while the stock issue would represent only the 35 per cent. equity in the property. It is on this 35 per cent. that the shrinkage in value must fall.

WHAT OF RATES?

Stipulation will be entered into before the Railroad Commission that following the consolidation, if it is allowed, there will be no change of rates for at least two years. Moreover, it is stated the rates for residence telephones in Los Angeles are as high now as good business would dictate; that if the rates were raised too many phones would come out. Thus, it is argued, if at the end of two years, there should be an advance in phone rates, it would fall on the business houses. These now have both Home and Pacific phones, at $6.75 a month each, or a total of $13.50 per month. So if under consolidation the rate for a business telephone should be advanced even $1 a month, the bill would still be $5.75 per month less than now.

Any increase in rates, however, cannot be made by the telephone companies themselves but must be by order of the State Railroad Commission, delegated by the people to exercise jurisdiction over public utilities. This, moreover, could only be done after another hearing, at which the matter of valuations and cost of service would be exhaustively examined and every opportunity given to show cause why rates should not be increased.

The consolidation, if carried out, would be controlled, as to rates and service, by the Railroad Commission and the city.

The advance of Home stock on the local exchange, which has been steady of late, is ascribed in part to the fact that the officers of the company are buying and the securities put on the market have been in considerable part out-of-town holdings, largely from the Pacific Northwest, where there is a demand for ready money.

PROBABLE PROCEDURE.

Should the decision of the Railroad Commission be favorable to consolidation, application would be made to the Federal government for permission to consummate the merger under the plan approved by the commission. This application would go to the Attorney-General because of the relation of the Sherman act to this proposed merger.

With approval secured from the Attorney-General, the matter of transfer of the Home franchises to the Southern California company would have to be taken up with the City Council. After the clearing of legal difficulties, would come the physical merger, on a piecemeal plan, so as not to interrupt business in the city, while the exchanges were being tied together and duplicate equipment and working forces eliminated.

All plans for the physical merger have been worked out in detail, as this is required by the Railroad Commission in considering the application. These data are to be used by the commission's engineers, who will make their recommendations after testimony is taken, but before the decision is handed down.

Rate fixing for the proposed consolidated system would be the final step. The Railroad Commission would appraise the merged property for fixing of charges, which meantime would remain at the present levels, under stipulation.

SORROWFUL HISTORY.

Salesman Files Divorce Suit with Array of Charges Against His Wife, Including Threats, Roaming Habits and Leaving Home.

That "the female of the species is more deadly than the male" is the text of the story of the wedded life of Tony A. and Helen I. Ziegler, as told in his divorce complaint filed yesterday through his attorney, C. B. Conlin.

Mrs. Ziegler, according to her husband, refused to cook his meals for him unless he turned over his entire salary to her. He says that, on the 8th inst., after she had stayed out all night and refused to tell him where she had been, she informed him she had a gun hidden and had a good notion to shoot him. Mr. Ziegler is a saleman for a rubber house.

He says he was caused great mental pain and suffering and humiliation. He declares that on the same day his life threatened his life, she also accused him in the presence of others of having beaten her with his fists, and that she was in constant fear of him. This, he says, is untrue.

His wife has refused since the 13th inst., to live with him, he alleges. He further alleges that his wife has frequently spent the night away from home this month and on each occasion afterwards flatly refused to tell him where she had been. The Zieglers made their home at No. 421 West Fifty-seventh street.

DRUNKARDS.

Dead! yet they live and stagger on, alone,
They wander in a dream, life's purpose gone;
They feel no higher call, their races run,
Their hopes die like the setting of the sun.
Ere their minds dimmed, before ambition's fall,
They saw the heights of art, heard music's call;
Now from their sodden brains all, all is fled—
Mere drunken sots, who live and yet are dead.
No beauty of the earth or sky can fill
Their soulless eyes with admiration's thrill;
No love of kin or friend, or mother's kiss
Can touch their hearts or wake their souls to bliss,
While honor, manhood and all virtues sink
In cesspools of the hellish lure of drink.

Young though they are, drink's swift-decaying drain
Gangrenes their strength of soul and brawn and brain;
Their service scorned, their presence shunned by all,
The world turns from them and they hear no call;
For blear and bloat and rum-rot of the breath
Are warning signals of decay and death—
Decay and death of virtue and of soul
Which social morgues alone can dare enroll.
No friendly hands take theirs to lead the way
To labors or to homes where virtues stay;
The voice of honor and the call of fame
They hear no more along the road to shame,
As, led by vultures and despoiled of all,
They drink again but to forget their fall.

The sands of time they waste in reckless ways,
And nevermore through all life's golden days
Can their dead minds count half the fearful cost
When hope of soul and joy of life is lost,
In drunken sweat and stupor of the mind,
And bleary eyes to all life's glories blind,
Their fortunes plundered and their souls profaned—
Sweet heaven's loss is hell's most awful gain.
Is it a friend who fills the poisoned cup
For sodden souls with swollen lips to sup?
A brother he, who wrecks a brother's hopes
And steals his purse, while drunk and blind he gropes
And calls for friends and help and light of day
To grasp the hand that takes his hope away?
They cannot shun that wizardry of hell
Which drink and idleness weave in their spell,
As in decay of all life's fondest hopes,
Crazed with misguided rage of misanthropes,
They curse the world, the fate that o'er them fell—
Drunk on the lees of liquors brewed of hell.
Of life's poor derelicts the saddest they
Who cannot follow help, nor break away
From the accursed bonds and chains of drink—
Doomed in each glass to forge another link.
Who claims the right to wreck these helpless lives?
Who takes the pound of flesh, and gladly thrives
Upon those wrecks of manhood, and extols
Such goulish gains on dying minds and souls?

Is there no surcease from the greed and strife
That barters hell for heaven, death for life?
Oh, builders of the better plans of men,
Can you contrive to call them back again?
Our brothers who in chains are led away,
Whose silent pleas cry out to us each day,
Whose weal or woe their tongues can never tell,
Who have no power to break that grip of hell,
They are your brothers, all, and once like thee
Each in his soul and mind, God's image, he Had promise of life's glories, heaven's gain;
Shall their dumb, pleading call for help be vain?
Will you, their brothers, sad and silent stand,
Or strike the curse of liquor from the land?

THE THREE-CENT FARE.

Is a word to the wise sufficient? The Times has no desire to butt in and believes in minding one's own business; but it rises to remark that a 3-cent fare would abolish the jitney nuisance and relieve the traffic congestion and make railroad managers sleep easier o' nights.

A STRIKE IN THE TROPICS.

The people of Porto Rico are advancing to the higher levels of American citizenship as expounded by Gompers and Wilson. One thousand harbor and dock laborers at San Juan have tied up the shipping in the harbor by a strike, and workmen from other localities who were brought in to break the strike promptly joined the strikers on receiving satisfactory assurances that unless they did so there was a beating in store for them. Thus from frozen Alaska to tropical Porto Rico is union labor coming into its own and trying to come into what is not its own but will be if it can perpetrate robbery with impunity. "Civilization on her luminous wings soars Phoenix-like to Jove."

RISING PRICES.

It will not be forgotten that until Europe's unforeseen war demand arose, the record of the Democratic administration was idle mills, and in spite of the trade depression, rising prices. This is a fact that should be kept in mind by the voters.

The child labor bill as passed by Congress is a shameless hypocrisy and a fraud upon the people. There is a joker in the law that nullifies it completely. In the Senate a proviso was inserted limiting the operation of the act to goods in the production of which the children had been employed within thirty days before the goods are offered for shipment. The adoption of that amendment was an insult to the humane sentiments of the American people.

BIRDS OF THE AIR.

This is the season when wild geese and wild ducks are flying southward to avoid the cruel blasts of winter. The cheerful honk of the geese can be heard as their harrow-shaped flocks course along the sky, and the ducks remind one of a physicians' convention with—as the poet states it—

"A quick quack here and a quick quack there
And here a quack and there a quack and everywhere a quack."

It is all very well for hunters to hide in the rushes and from their covert shoot innocent wild fowl who alight for a supper of wild celery, but to use an aeroplane to hunt them is unfair and unsportsmanlike. Let the birds have one element for their exclusive use—if they fly high enough.

PROHIBITING THINGS.

If people are to be ruled by law as to what they shall drink, why not extend prohibition to articles of food and raiment? Prohibit the use of lard in cooking because, in the language of Byron, "'tis Greece but living grease no more." Embargo coffee because it promotes biliousness, and authorize street car passengers to carry scissors with which to snip the long feathers on the hat of the lady on the seat in front—feathers which tickle his nose and brush the cigarette from his lips and cause him to mutter cuss words that no Sunday-school teacher ought to use.

Colonial Connecticut once had a law to prohibit a man from kissing his wife on Sunday. If California had a law prohibiting a married man from kissing another man's wife on week days it might lessen the alimony-seeking industry; and everybody will agree that girls between 12 and 20 years of age should be prohibited from chewing gum.

CONTRADICTORY GOMPERS.

Sam Gompers, who has declared himself (for favors received) a supporter of President Wilson in this campaign, some time ago, when he had made a study of labor conditions in Europe, wrote:

> "Living is cheap to the wage-worker in Europe, only because he does without what in America soon becomes a necessity to him—food in good quantity and quality, presentable clothes among his aspiring fellow-workmen and their families, and a comfortably furnished home in quarters responding to his awakened desires for equality with his American neighbors and in general a larger and freer life."

All that is as true today as it was when it was written. Living has to be cheap for European wage-workers because their wages are low. And because their wages are low and the hours longer than those of American workers, their employers have the benefit of low cost of production. And because European manufacturers have that benefit, they are often able to undersell American manufacturers in the latter's home market when the Democratic party lets down the bars of an adequately protective tariff.

If the Democratic anti-protection policy should become a fixed institution, the wage-workers in the United States would be reduced to the conditions in which the workers of Europe live. Mr. Wilson is the President and the candidate of the party that stands stubbornly against protection and high wages. Yet contradictory Gompers supports him.

WHISKERS, TURBANS AND POETRY.

"The young princess came slowly down the marble steps
Into the garden that was aflame with flowers.
The jeweled dew, cast by the star-decked hand of Night
On every leaf and petal, glistened in the morning sun.

"The princess swayed caressingly above a tender rose bud
And as she touched it lovingly,
A crystal drop was shaken off, and fell
And splashed upon her silver sandal.

"And the princess sighed, 'Ah, woe is love!
So do our tears fall upon the toes of the gods
E'en when they bend caressingly above us!'"

—Is that beautiful or is it not?

Is it like an echo of forgotten songs, chanted softly in a templed grove at twilight—or is it nonsense?

Is the imagery rich and vivid, and do the lines convey soulfully the mystic charm of a great poet, or is it commonplace stuff such as you or I might acquire the knack of writing if we set ourselves to it and practiced assiduously?

Many people won't know what to think of it until they know, or make a comforting guess, who wrote it.

If they could be made to believe that it was written as a joke by a cub reporter, they would know at once that it was lacking in beauty and spirituality. But if they guess that it was written by a venerable gentleman with patriarchial beard and flowing drapery and an international reputation for spirituality, they will judge the lines, not by their intrinsic merit, but by his renown.

There are many people able to find an oracle in the grounds of an emptied coffee cup, so it is not so incredulous that many people should discover beautiful metaphysical messages in such empty lines. And in this day of poetical empiricism it is a rash spirit, indeed, that will face the frowning brows of aesthetes and say with a kind of desperate frankness that the quality of poetry is in its lines—not in the long beard and yellow turban of the man that writes it.

But as the aesthetes of the ancient Greeks sneered at the ragged Diogenes and pondered, awestruck, over the nonsensical, ambiguous jingles of the be-robed and mysterious Delphian priestess, so now, particularly on the distaff side of the nation, we see a breathless adoration for vague allegories that nobody is quite sure she understands, but which must be quite wonderful and which can be appreciated with nothing less than rapturous phrases and a nervous fluttering of tear dampened eyelashes.

If John Jones, who is bald and short and a bit fat and wears a close cropped mustache, should arise and recite "The young princess came slowly down the marble steps" as his own composition, there would be snickers a-plenty and nobody would see the slightest beauty or sense in the verse.

But if John Jones should add a cubit to his stature, should take unto himself some such strange name as soothsayers make use of, should grow a thick beard that reached to his waist, should wear a long and flowing robe, should darken his skin and adorn his head with a turban, should press his finger tips gently together, and then recite it—oh, oh, oh, but there would be such rolling of eyes and ecstatic gasping, and whispering of awed phrases as there is, presumably, among the new arrivals in heaven who hear for the first time the angelic voices and the golden lyres.

We do not mean that all who wear beards and turbans and robes are pretenders. We do mean that pretenders are fully aware of what a blessing those trappings are to their trade. We do mean that if they were shaved, tailored and hatted like Occidentals, astrologers would have to work honestly or starve; and that there would be nothing "wonderfully wonderful" about such lines as these if they were written and recited by plain, fat, little John Jones, viz.:

"A child stood in the doorway looking at a rooster,
And the child called to its mother,
And she came and looked at the rooster.
And the chickens about the yard
Eagerly came running and clucking
And gathered about the rooster
At which the child was looking.
And the soft breeze whispered to the child
And it laughed.
And the mother looked tenderly at the child
And wondered why it laughed."

Ah, Ah, Ah! "Isn't it perfectly lovely? Isn't he just simply adorable? Such a sweet picture of child life! Oh, oh, oh! Somebody fan me!"

Ah, Ah, Ah!

FOR FAIRNESS AND COMMON SENSE.

In the time of the great American Civil War, some pious and patriotic soul invented a war cry which became very popular. It ran thus: "Shoot as you pray." The intention was admirable, but the thought in it was confused. Some men pray wrong, and therefore if they shot as they prayed would shoot wrong. Others pray right and try to shoot as they pray, but miss the mark lamentably.

Later, some pious and patriotic soul invented the war cry, "Vote as you pray." This is on all fours parallel with the previous one. For some men pray wrong and therefore vote wrong if they follow the advice of the war cry. Others miss the mark as egregiously as some of those who shot in the great war.

The Times is an advocate of temperance, and yields to no man and no institution in the country in its condemnation of intoxication. It has very many friends who are prohibitionists. It acknowledges their good intentions and would be with them heart and soul if it were not persuaded that they are voting and praying in a confused and wrong manner. We think that our good friends among the "drys" are not going about their work in the right way. The saloon is the institution that does all the harm, and not the vineyard. We know that many of them say that the drinking of wines and light beers is the entering wedge to drunkenness. They have all the courage of ignorance founded upon inexperience in this matter. The Times is with them heart and soul, and will be with them, in their warfare against the saloon. It is the root of nearly all the evil that enters the criminal courts of the country. It is easily attacked, for it is within the police powers of municipal authority, of county officials, and of the State, to suppress every saloon in every district and in every city in the country. It requires no change of the Constitution, but can be done peremptorily. We think that due time ought to be given, even to the saloon-keeper, to get out of business without loss of his property, for the reason that the business was built up under the arm of the law, and therefore it would seem to us an injustice to deprive him of his property without any opportunity to compensate himself, or without compensation by the public.

That part of the programme of our friends that looks to the summary suppression of all vineyards seems to us wrong, both from the standpoint of fairness and of common sense. This thought is founded on the most careful and deliberate consideration of the whole question. It is the common testimony of every person who has ever visited countries where light wines are used that there is less drunkenness in them than anywhere else on the face of the globe. Spain is the country of all nations where wines are the purest and the cheapest. The Spanish people are the most temperate by all odds of any people on the globe. Men, women and children are in the habit of daily partaking of the pure light wines of the country, and one can be in Spain for a year, traveling about among all the cities, and not encounter a single drunken person. Light wines contain less than 10 per cent. of alcohol, which is about one-fifth of that contained by most stomach bitters.

In California there is property invested in vineyards amounting to $150,000,000. These investments have been made under the aegis and by the encouragement of the laws, and it would amount to cruel confiscation to condemn them by law unless the owners are compensated for the value of their investments. We know it is claimed that the grape farmers can turn their vineyards to other uses, but that does not answer the objection at all. A vineyard twenty years old is worth much more than one one year old, and the older the vines the better the product. The wine grapes will not do for shipping for table use at the East.

We would not plead for an instant for the vineyard or the winery did we not think that these light wines are the greatest temperance advocates in the world. Distilled liquors come under a different category, and it might be well to curtail the production of these by heavy taxation, and then forbid their use except upon a physician's prescription. It is a moot question whether these strongly-alcoholic beverages are of any use to the human system medicinally or otherwise.

We say these things with a full sense of the terrible effects of drunkenness upon old and young. And we say them with the firm conviction that we are right, and that conviction is founded upon careful study and experience.

MARCH OF CIVILIZATION.

There has been paid to the Oklahoma Indians by the Indian Bureau at Washington during the last three years for royalties on oil lands the sum of $5,563,000.

"Lo, the poor Indian whose untutored mind Sees God in trees and hears Him in the wind," is no longer a hunter of buffaloes or even of grasshoppers or the garbage cans in mining camps. He can order a French dinner from potage to cafe noir. He flutters the tail of a dress coat where once he wore a wampum belt, and his squaw jingles a piano, and dances the two-step in an electric-lighted ballroom instead of hopping around a bonfire where a captured enemy is roasting. Thus does American civilization with stately step march through the morning of the twentieth century—or words to that effect.

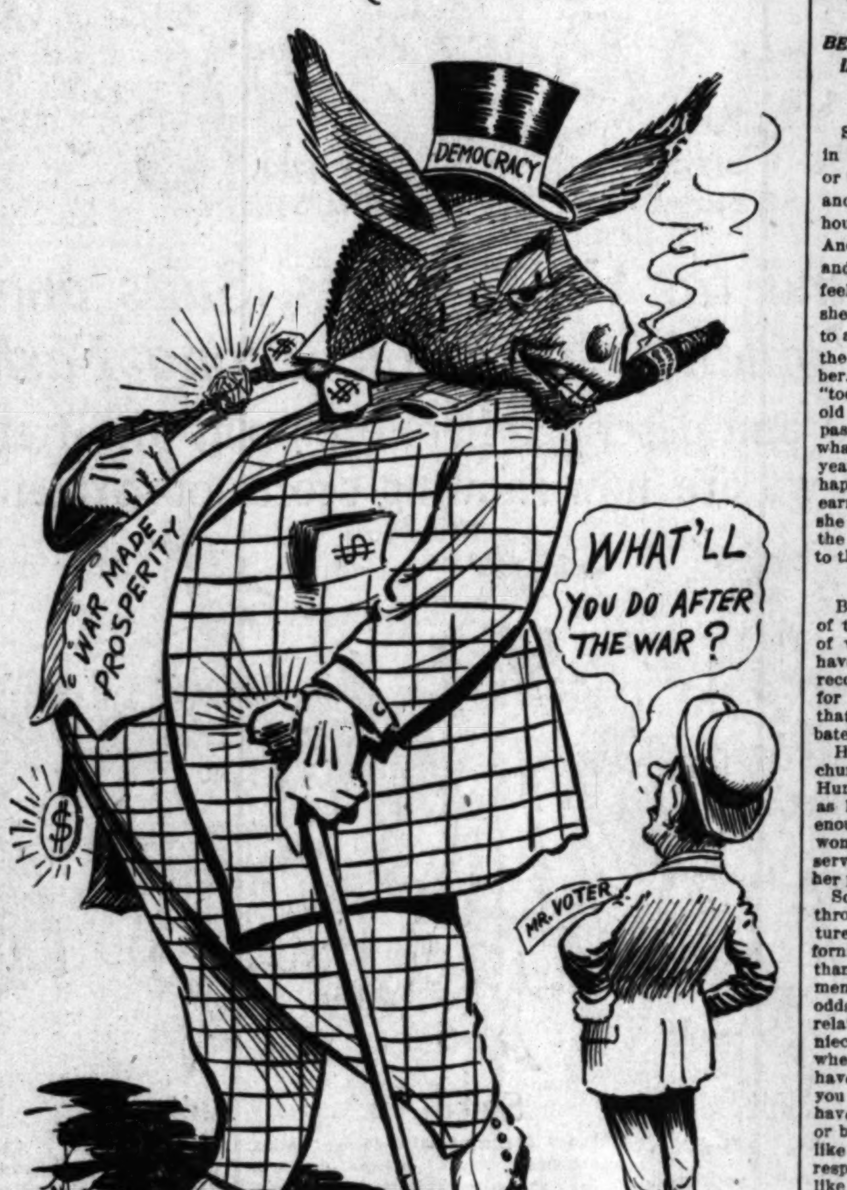
The Question.



PROPOSITION NO. 5—BEWARE OF IT.

Equity in modern taxation demands that he who takes the most from a community shall make the greatest return in the form of revenue for the support of that community. This system has produced property taxes, inheritance taxes, gross revenue taxes, income taxes, corporation taxes and indirect taxes in the form of licenses and statutory fees.

Our present tax system has been 3000 years in building; it is a human product and is not free from inequalities and imperfections. Like everything human it is subject to abuses; but it has endured and the century that has seen it universally adopted is the century in which enlightenment, morals, education, science and sanitation have registered their greatest achievements.

California's progress during the last quarter of a century has been one of the marvels of modern social and economical development. But just at the time when the effects of our prosperity are the most marked, new prophets come to tell us that it is all wrong; our prosperity has been a cruel mistake; we shouldn't have done it. We have been growing rich when we should have remained poor; we have been compelling those who made the most money to pay the most taxes when they are the ones who shouldn't have paid taxes at all. It isn't right to tax incomes, or inheritances, or the liquor traffic; it is an economic crime to compel the railroads to return to the State in the form of taxes a part of the money they take from us for tickets and shipping receipts. The soil is the source of all wealth, therefore we should tax land values only. Heap everything on the land! The titles are all filed with the State, the owners cannot take their land with them if they run away; so we must tax the land and let all the rest go free.

Such is the doctrine that the Single-Tax advocates are expounding. It is difficult to believe that such a philosophy could secure sufficient following in this era of modern enlightenment to become a menace to the prosperity of the State. But there are on file in Sacramento petitions signed by 75,000 registered electors of California favoring this plan of taxing the land only; and on the November ballot is proposition No. 5, providing that all revenue, State, county, municipal and district, shall be raised by a tax on land values only.

Every century and every nation has its real and false economists. The false economists are visionary minds that weave economical romances of ideal utopias; minds that permit the ideal to dominate the reality. The ignorant and the venal come after them and seek to have these day dreams converted into fixed laws for the direction of humanity. Germany had its Karl Marx, France its Saint-Simon and the United States its Henry George.

George's philosophy was perhaps the most faulty of the three; it is wholly ideal and unpractical; his theory of single tax has been tried elsewhere and quickly abandoned; but that did not keep the single taxers from making use of the initiative provision of our State Constitution to place the proposition on the ballot.

There is but a single argument which will appeal to any class in its favor; in the wreck of material prosperity that would follow its adoption there might be a chance for political plunder. Its proponents are the little group of single-tax theorists, the idlers and the union labor despots. Its opponents are the producers, the bread-winners of California. The union agitators are organized; the bread-winners must organize in turn; and a good form of organization against this communistic and confiscatory amendment is for each reader of The Times to consider himself a committee of one to warn his neighbors of the danger lurking in proposition No. 5, to see that they go to the polls on election day and vote NO.

CHILE CON CARNAGE.

BEING THE PARTICULAR PEPPER IN SOME PERSONAL OPINIONS

Of Don yo de Chiltepin.

Some years ago an old woman died in California without particular kith or kin, but with a very sizable balance at the bank, not to mention houses and lands of further import. And having no family obligations, and being a woman of deep religious feeling and daily personal charity, she bequeathed most of her property to a noble philanthropy conducted by the church of which she was a member. Luckily, that was before we had "too much Johnson;" and this Gentle old woman was permitted by law to pass on to the cause of humanity what she had accumulated by seventy years of thrift, shrewdness and perhaps good fortune. Anyway, she earned it fair, used it nobly while she lived—and the charity got it. And the old woman's money is doing good to this day.

But just then we had elected one of that peculiar brand of legislators of which we in California seem to have become proud. There is no record that he ever gave up a dollar for his fellow man—and I am sorry that his will has not yet been probated.

He happened to hate the particular church the old woman loved. As for Humanity or Philanthropy, he knew as little as he little cared. It was enough for him that this childless old woman—after "remembering" her servants and friends—left the bulk of her property to That Damned Church.

So he framed a bill, and sheeped it through our Distinguished Legislature, and it is now the law of California that you cannot bequeath more than a third of your life's achievements to Humanity. It makes no odds whether you have direct or correlative heirs—children, sisters, nieces, cousins or bastards—whether any or all of them, if you have any, have milked and robbed you during your life—whether you have inherited or earned your money or been given it—whether you would like to do good with it, and think a responsible trusteeship the business-like way to see that your money continues your decent wishes, even as you would wish to have children to perpetuate your name. No, you can't do it in California. If you have no heirs at law, you can bequeath exactly one-third of you to your church, pet orphan asylum, Y.W.C.A., Y.M.C.A., Humane Society, Old Women's Home, Museum, Art Gallery, Women's Clubhouse, and all the rest, all put together One Third to Mankind and the Future.

The other two-thirds? Why, the State needs that. What for? Asylums? Museums? Art Galleries? Churches? Ya! Where withal do you fancy the $5000 per annum Commissioners are paid, of the Commissions with which the "Reformers" are rabbiting us. Twenty years ago we had a Belgian Hare Fever. Everybody was doing it. I knew one extreme case where $250 was paid for a long-eared Gentleman of royal Belgian descent. Their fecundity was the key to our fortunes. Seven litters a year, thirteen to the litter, and all at "breeder's prices!" Wealth while you don't have to Wait!

Being "nacherl-born victims," we insist on having the Gold Brick—either in its simple ancient form or some new guise. Belgian Hares were perhaps the cheapest of our fads. Long-ears at Sacramento cost us a good deal more than $250 per.

We who have helped to make California seldom have to blush for it. Those who are trying to make it a Fool's Paradise don't know how to blush for it—for they don't know it. All the mistakes ever made in California by the humble people who found and civilized it, and by the rough Argonauts who Americanized it—all put together never so much "made a monkey of" this wonder State as have the Mentally Unoccupied faddists that have come in since it was made habitable for them.

Nothing has ever so mortified, shamed and angered me as a Californian as this which comes back to my text:

Today, one of the foremost of Californians (not only here but in the world's recognition) is on his way East to renew citizenship in his native State so he can make "An Honest Will"—to quote his words. A poor boy, he has by brains, self-control and skill acquired in old age what I presume would rate him as a moderately wealthy man. He is childless. He has provided most generously not only for dependent relatives, but for many young persons he thought deserved a "chance." No man in California has done more in more ways for art, music, education and philanthropy. No public benefactor is less notorious—for he detests publicity. I do not know his politics, but apparently he does not care to have two-thirds of his hard-earned estate go to the Sacramento cormorant commissions. He wishes most of the fruit of his life work to keep on perpetuating his life thought—Education.

And he has to go back to the Effete East to make his will to give his money to Education in California! To be able to endow California boys and girls and men and women with better opportunities at the best in schools, art, music and science, he has to go 3000 miles from California! Say! I'm proud—not this minute of California, but of a man that will do this.

And don't you think we'd better elect a few more Freaks to our Legislature? We can pass Kansas yet, if we try, try again. We can vote California dry, and "Single-Tax" it out of the semblance of its present life. We can do any crazy thing we are crazy enough to do. There is no law against it—and that's the last law our Sacramento will ever debate, much less pass. And I feel abashed and profane when I mention that geographic term. "Sacramento" was named by reverent men for the Holy Sacrament. Now, Holy — fill this to suit yourself.

THE CHURCH AND THE STATE.

[CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

BY MGR. BAUDRILLART.

Vicar-General of Paris; Rector of the Catholic University.

THE truly Christian populations of every country have been scandalized by the obligation imposed on French priests by the French legislation to participate in the war as fighters.

This sentiment has been so exaggerated by some among those, who only view the war at a distance, that they have asked themselves the question whether a good priest did not have the right to resist such obligation, no matter what would be the consequences of such resistance. Others, more numerous, at least consider as irregular those priests who fight and draw blood.

There are today three categories of priests mobilized in this war and serving in the French army.

There are chaplains, numbering several hundreds, who perform in the army a priest's duties. There are priests non-combatant, mobilized for the services of the administration or of health according to the law of 1889 and these form by a great deal the largest proportion of the 25,000 priests mobilized at present.

And there are the priests actually fighting, that is to say the youngest, called into service during the last ten years and who have for one reason or another not been placed in the so-called auxiliary service.

For this last category what then is their situation from an ecclesiastical standpoint?

I use the word combat, that is to say bear arms and make use of them, for to take part in the war in another way has never been forbidden to priests.

A priest may take part in the war in order to exercise his sacred mission; he may take part in it in the exercise of charity to the wounded, to the sick; he may heal bodies as well as souls; he may even, in the degree to which he may be called to exercise civil and political functions, participate in organizing and preparing war.

If it were in itself an evil, a fault, a crime to fight, certainly the priest should suffer everything rather than submit to such an obligation.

But war is not in itself an evil; to fight is not wrong in itself and may even become meritorious.

And so if Christianity is scandalized to see a priest take up arms, it is because this act, good in itself for others is not fitting for a priest.

There is a divergence between the character of the priest, the particularly charitable mission that is his and the actual violence of warfare, the shedding of the blood of his brothers. Because, even if enemies, men are still brothers. It is a question merely of what is fitting. The priest who fights does not commit an immoral act but an act that jars with his functions. The Christian's instinct is correct.

It is not progress for humanity to call all mankind to arms. It would be much better that it were still as formerly in Christian society of the ancient regime, that services were specialized, that an army made up of a sufficient number of soldiers by profession would assure the country's defense and the respect of its rights, as that a body of magistrates should dispense justice, a body of professors should teach, the clergy should give the necessary succor to souls. Unfortunately for Europe and the world, the twentieth century war has pitted entire nations against each other and has put the very existence of some of them in danger. Military service has ceased to be the calling of a few. It is now the task of everyone. Following Prussia's lead nearly all nations have, like her, ended by adopting obligatory military service for all. Does not this change the problem somewhat even for those of the church? In a world where faith has diminished, where the sense of the supernatural has ceased to exist for many, where the desire for equality has spread, being at the same time the cause and the consequence of the democratic rule of nations, the problem is a new one. Would it not tend to make the priest odious to continue the ecclesiastical privilege?

RIPPLING RHYMES.

OLD ENGLISH.

When Chaucer lived there were some other bards, with inspiration loaded to the guards. And there were highbrows in that distant age, who looked with scorn upon great Goeffrey's page, and said, "Gadzooks, he writeth middling fair, for one whose soul is of afflatus bare; as crossroads jingler he may cut some grass, but who'll recall him when ten years shall pass? If you'd read verse of the great, majestic power, you must peruse the gorgeous works of Gower." Now, it is true that in G. Chaucer's time, the critics joshed him for his paltry rhyme, and held that Langland, of "Piers Plowman" dope, had moderns skinned beyond all hint of hope. How vain the judgment of the critic clan! They heap their laurels on some ten-cent man, and say his harp will never be unstrung, while there are men to read his native tongue. Their petted poet crosses the divide, and is forgotten ere he's fairly died, while some unknown, who smarted 'neath their jeers, lives in men's hearts through all the rolling years.

WALT MASON.

Proof Positive.

Little Janet, reports the Southern Woman's Magazine, came running into the house one morning sobbing. Throwing herself into her mother's arms, she cried:

"Dod doesn't love me any more, mother!"

"Why, Janet, dear," said the mother. "Why do you say that? God loves everyone."

"No, mother. He doesn't love me," wailed the little girl. "I know he doesn't. I tried Him with a daisy!"

TAMALE CART'S A LAW COLLEGE.

Vendor of Hot Stuff Studies as He Peddles Wares.

Now He is Almost Ready for Bar Examinations.

Has Made Himself a Notable Figure on Broadway.

Like Abraham Lincoln, who read law from a volume of Blackstone perched on the handle of the plow with which he tilled the soil all day, Charles de Forest, a French peasant, pursues his study of law while at labor. But Mr. De Forest's books grace the handle bar of a tamale push cart.

He is a middle-aged man, and poor. All his life his greatest ambition has been to be a lawyer and to help the people with whom he is most familiar—the immigrant French, Italians and Spanish, as well as those from other countries.

But as years passed by new and heavier obligations fell to his lot and kept him from study. At last, however, he made and saved enough money, by peddling tamales, to buy a second-hand copy of Blackstone.

Never before had he been so happy. The book was his greatest treasure. He had little time to peruse its pages of knowledge—but "when there's a will there's a way." He placed it on the handlebar of his push cart and gleaned information from its pages as he wheeled the tamales along Broadway.

The contents of the book were more interesting to him than anything he had ever read, for he had had little opportunity to obtain good books. Soon he almost knew it by heart. He bought other books on law, and in turn read them in the same way, until he had advanced far enough to enter college.

"He scorns delights and lives laborious days," and by so doing had saved enough at the end of three years from the sale of his tamales so that he was able to enter the night classes of the law department of the University of Southern California.

This was two years ago and more. Soon he will take his examination, and it is certain he will be admitted to the bar. He has been a hard student and has advanced rapidly.

In the years when he has pushed his little old cart along North Broadway for many weary blocks he has become one of its best-known figures. He is regarded by many people on North Broadway as their mediator—an arbitrator to whom they can do in time of dispute and always get justice.

So, although the road leading to the goal of his ambition was a hard one, and it has taken thousands and thousands of hot tamales to pave the way, the time spent in peddling his wares will prove his most valuable asset when he is admitted to the bar. For the people he has come to know will be his clients.

Unlike the majority of lawyers who hang out their "shingles," he will not have to wait for clients to come—his clients have been waiting for him. They all know him. And they are proud of him because he is one of them and has made good. He is familiar with the French and Italian languages, which he learned in France when a boy.

Papa and Mama Sell Booze Without License or Permit, so When They Go to Jail for Six Months Infant Also is Prisoner.

The whole Martinez family yesterday took up a six months' residence in the County Jail. There was papa Francisco Martinez, mama Martinez and baby Margarita, formerly of Azusa. Baby Martinez is only three months old, the youngest prisoner on record, probably.

For many months the family has been a serious problem. The father has been repeatedly arrested for selling liquor without license or permit and has served time and paid fines so often that recently, when a witness before the Board of Supervisors, he declared he couldn't remember the number of these occasions.

While he was in jail, it is alleged, Mrs. Martinez carried on the same kind of traffic, so yesterday Mrs. Martinez was found guilty and sentenced with her husband, and their place in Azusa closed by deputy sheriffs.

At the end of the sentence a special effort will be made to start the family in proper channels of endeavor.

Now He is Almost Ready for Bar Examinations.

Has Made Himself a Notable Figure on Broadway.

Like Abraham Lincoln, who read law from a volume of Blackstone perched on the handle of the plow with which he tilled the soil all day, Charles de Forest, a French peasant, pursues his study of law while at labor. But Mr. De Forest's books grace the handle bar of a tamale push cart.

He is a middle-aged man, and poor. All his life his greatest ambition has been to be a lawyer and to help the people with whom he is most familiar—the immigrant French, Italians and Spanish, as well as those from other countries.

But as years passed by new and heavier obligations fell to his lot and kept him from study. At last, however, he made and saved enough money, by peddling tamales, to buy a second-hand copy of Blackstone.

Never before had he been so happy. The book was his greatest treasure. He had little time to peruse its pages of knowledge—but "when there's a will there's a way." He placed it on the handlebar of his push cart and gleaned information from its pages as he wheeled the tamales along Broadway.

The contents of the book were more interesting to him than anything he had ever read, for he had had little opportunity to obtain good books. Soon he almost knew it by heart. He bought other books on law, and in turn read them in the same way, until he had advanced far enough to enter college.

"He scorns delights and lives laborious days," and by so doing had saved enough at the end of three years from the sale of his tamales so that he was able to enter the night classes of the law department of the University of Southern California.

This was two years ago and more. Soon he will take his examination, and it is certain he will be admitted to the bar. He has been a hard student and has advanced rapidly.

In the years when he has pushed his little old cart along North Broadway for many weary blocks he has become one of its best-known figures. He is regarded by many people on North Broadway as their mediator—an arbitrator to whom they can go in time of dispute and always get justice.

So, although the road leading to the goal of his ambition was a hard one and it has taken thousands and thousands of hot tamales to pave the way, the time spent in peddling his wares will prove his most valuable asset when he is admitted to the bar. For the people he has come to know will be his clients.

Unlike the majority of lawyers who hang out their "shingles," he will not have to wait for clients to come—his clients have been waiting for him. They all know him. And they are proud of him because he is one of them and has made good. He is familiar with the French and Italian languages, which he learned in France when a boy.

BABY'S NEW HOME?

Papa and Mama Sell Booze Without License or Permit, so When They Go to Jail for Six Months Infant Also is Prisoner.

The whole Martinez family yesterday took up a six months' residence in the County Jail. There was papa Francisco Martinez, mama Martinez and baby Margarita, formerly of Azusa. Baby Martinez is only three months old, the youngest prisoner on record, probably.

For many months the family has been a serious problem. The father has been repeatedly arrested for selling liquor without license or permit and has served time and paid fines so often that recently, when a witness before the Board of Supervisors, he declared he couldn't remember the number of these occasions.

While he was in jail, it is alleged, Mrs. Martinez carried on the same kind of traffic, so yesterday Mrs. Martinez was found guilty and sentenced with her husband, and their home in Azusa closed by deputy sheriffs.

At the end of the sentence a special effort will be made to start the family in proper channels of en-

How You Can Remove Every Trace of Hair

(Toilet Talks)

A stiff paste made with some powdered delatone and water and spread on a hairy surface about 2 minutes will, when removed, take every trace of hair with it. The skin should then be washed to free it from the remaining delatone. No harm can result from this treatment, but be sure it is delatone you get and you will not be disappointed.

Was it a Shining or Horrible Example?

NEITHER "WETS" NOR "DRYS" TELL THE TRUTH ABOUT SEATTLE, WHERE A DRY TOWN IS WET.

Candid Examination of What Really Happened in the City that is Held Up Before Los Angeles as an Inspiration and a Warning—Prohibition Didn't Prohibit—The City Authorities were Obliged to Resort to Carrie Nation Methods to Fight the Blind Pigs.

BY HARRY CARR.

SEATTLE, Oct. 11.—Having called myself to the witness stand:

Does prohibition prohibit?

No. The dry city of Seattle has replaced the saloon problem with a blind-pig problem.

Does prohibition hurt business?

It has a tendency to lower rents and hurts the tourist trade. Some other lines of business are unaffected. Others are helped.

Is Seattle a fair parallel to what might happen in Los Angeles?

No.

Is there anything in Seattle that time cannot wither, prohibition blight, or old age corrode?

Yes. The love and veneration that Maj. Clarence Blethen, editor of the Seattle Times, has for himself.

Gen. Otis sent me to Seattle to find out what really did happen when the town went dry.

On average of once a day, some one comes into the office of The Times in Los Angeles, and, in a hoarse whisper, tells us the truth about the effect of prohibition upon the city of Seattle.

No two of them agree upon any one point and they all have statistics to absolutely prove what they say.

Most of the bunk in this world comes wrapped up in statistics. Give me a World Almanac and the last United States census reports and I will prove that infantile paralysis was caused by interpretative dancing; that prohibition results from volcanoes; that Maj. Blethen of the Seattle Times is a great editor; that Tagore is a roughneck or pretty nearly anything you say.

Seattle is in the position of the young lady who permitted the doctors to shoot infantile paralysis germs into her veins. Everyone is now standing around, feeling her pulse, and looking at her tongue. In the opinion of the Wets the thing to do is to ask if she has any last message for the family and get the crepe ready. The Drys insist that she was never so husky and so strong.

NOT THE SAME CONDITIONS.

The first thing that impresses you when you arrive at the bedside is that Seattle is suffering from a different disease than the one that threatens California.

Seattle and Los Angeles can no more talk prohibition together than a hen and a centipede could weep together over the loss of a leg.

Without expressing any opinion as to the rights and wrongs of the question, it is clear that in adopting prohibition the State of Washington erased a comma. The Drys of California propose to burn up a library.

In the State of Washington, it was purely a question of closing saloons. Except for four or five breweries, that State had no property interests to put in jeopardy by the adoption of a prohibition law.

Putting the vast viticultural interests of California to one side, I should say that the property interests concerned in this fight in the whole State of Washington were about equal to the liquor interests of the city of Los Angeles.

Prohibition in California would destroy $150,000,000 worth of vineyard property.

With the understanding then that we are speaking only of the effect of closing the saloons of a city of 350,000 people, let us approach the patient.

In making a diagnosis, it is the duty of a good doctor to examine the fever chart and the history of the malady.

At the beginning of the European war, Seattle was suffering from the after clap of a big real estate boom. It began at the time of the Klondike gold rush. As in the case of most of the Coast cities, real estate values and rents soared to an abnormal figure.

With a big water front full of shipping, Seattle was a town full of saloons. They occupied real estate sites of more importance than in Los Angeles. Los Angeles would be like Seattle if there were a saloon on the corner of Seventh and Broadway, another in the Hamburger Building and another in the Athletic Club.

Saloons were on some of the finest corners of the business part of town. Down on the water front was a district called "Skee Road," which was something like the Barbary Coast in San Francisco.

One of the assets of Seattle was an influx of miners, who came down from Alaska every winter to find a place in the sun. Some of them went to the best hotel and some of them went to Skee Road.

Commercially speaking, the meal tickets of Seattle consisted of her port and her lumber.

Beginning with the war, ocean commerce almost came to a standstill and the demand for lumber slumped. Seattle went down for the count, as prize fighters say.

She was gasping for breath when at the first of the year the State of Washington went dry.

Seattle had, at this time, 329 saloons, representing a property value of $15,000,000, paying 7 per cent. interest. Assuming that each saloon took in at least $100 a day, the income of the Seattle saloons was $987,000 a month.

In addition to these saloons, there were four or five breweries in Seattle and the neighborhood, the largest being the Rainier brewery, which had a pay roll variously estimated at from $1,000,000 a year downward.

On account of the voters in Eastern Washington the State went dry; but the city of Seattle did not vote dry. Te hcity went wet by 10,000 majority. So wildly alarmed was Seattle at the prospect of prohibition that an initiative petition was placed in circulation to go back wet again.

RENTS WENT DOWN.

The immediate effect of the closing of the town was to bring about a reduction of rents. For instance, the famous Sutherland saloon on Second avenue in Seattle paid $800 rent; the place was rerented as a railroad office at $450.

The show piece of Seattle is a great forty-three-story building erected by the L. C. Smith typewriter people. The store next to this building rented for $575. After the town went dry, the rent was reduced to $250. A well-known piece of property on Occidental avenue went down from $600 to $150. A candy man on Pike street was paying $650 before the election; he now pays $350 for the same property.

Down in the Skee district the slip in rents was still more alarming. The assessed valuation of the property in Seattle fell $8,000,000. One Seattle business man tells me that his income from an office building has dropped from $3600 to $2600.

Having written thus far, I can see the Wets nodding with approval and saying, "Ah, there's a man who can find out the truth."

This rent slump is the star argument of the Wets. Like most of the arguments of the Drys it is bunk. The figures are true, but they don't really mean much.

My candid opinion is that neither the Wets nor the Drys are telling the truth about Seattle.

Rents and property values certainly did tumble when the town went dry. I say when the town went dry; but not necessarily because the town went dry.

Rents in Seattle were excessive and property values were inflated. They were due for a tumble. Any commercial or industrial disturbance would have jarred them down. The closing of the town furnished the disturbance.

On the other hand, Seattle has partly recovered from the depression that obsessed her. To this fact, the Drys point with pride and exultation. More bunk! The saloons are not all that has been closed. Ice closed the Russian port of Archangel. The war material which formerly went through Archangel has lately been going through Seattle and thence to the front via Siberia.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914 the exports from the United States to Siberia were less than $1,250,000. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, the exports rose to more than $23,000,000. During the last six months of 1915 the Washington customs district alone exported commodities to the value of more than $9,000,000. During the first eight months of this year this district's exports were $78,510,387 or $55,557,236 more than the total for the United States during the fiscal year of 1915. There are now more than $25,000,000 worth of shipbuilding contracts in the Seattle ship yards. In the face of these facts, it is an absurdity to say that prohibition either ruined or saved Seattle.

Seattle was hurt by the cessation of trade at the time of the European war. Prosperity came surging back as the result of the opening of oriental traffic.

Saloons had something to do with both the fall and the rise of the tide; but not very much.

A DEBUTANTE EDITOR.

Parenthetically, I might remark that one theory for the remarkable fall and rise of Seattle was that Maj. Blethen, editor of the Seattle Times, at first frowned upon prohibition and the city promptly went into the dumps. He changed his mind and smiled. Whereupon traffic began to increase on the streets. The sun shone upon the waters of the Sound. Money began to move freely again. Everybody loved his wife and children and all was happiness. This is Maj. Blethen's own theory.

Maj. Blethen is a debutante editor who is in a terrific lather of excitement over his own importance. The Seattle Times was formerly edited by Col. Blethen, who was a man of force and ability. He died and the editor's chair was inherited by his son Clarence, who is a major in the militia. The major carries upon one shoulder the responsibility of the military defense of the Northwest and the commercial destinies of the great Northwest. On the other shoulder he carries his own personal diginity. He sags down on the side that is weighted with personal dignity.

Some time ago, it is related that one of his own boyhood friends rang him up on the telephone and said, "Oh, Clarence." He got no further. In a terrible voice, the new editor roared, "Sir, you are impertinent," and hung up. On the occasion of the recent moving of his newspaper the youthful, but dignified, editor posed for his photograph before The Times photographer and devoted nineteen pages to telling how he did it!

Who can doubt that when Maj. Blethen stated that prohibition would hurt the town, rents simply had to go down. When he wrote his famous article beginning, "I have been mistaken," a trembling providence hastened to change conditions.

THE BOOZE SOLD.

For a town enjoying the blessings of prohibition, there is a most ungodly traffic in booze going on. Prohibition does not seem, thus far, to have prohibited in Seattle.

As soon as the saloons closed the excited and frantic crusade of the thirsty began at once. There is a kind of man who has "just gotta have it."

Well, he got it. So far as I have been able to discover, there were no deaths from thirst in Seattle after the town went dry.

Under the law as it passed, each householder was permitted, on application to the Auditor, to bring in half a case of beer and two quarts of other liquor each month for his own use.

During January, the first month after the passage of the dry law, there were 2117 applications to bring in booze. The following month there were 4269 applications; in March, 6215; in April, 8940. Seattle maintained a growing thirst.

During the month of August the auditor gave out 18,901 permits, authorizing liquor to the amount of 453,624 pints to be brought in for individual use.

This figures about a pint and a half brought in legally for each man, woman and child in Seattle. Blind pigs probably bring much more.

THE BLIND PIGS.

Blind pigs came squealing into town in droves—as was expected. Sixty-nine new drug stores have been started since the passage of the law. For a city that claims to have the lowest death rate in the United States, this seems a pretty liberal growth of trade in medicine!

Hiram Gill, Mayor

Of Seattle, and his famous Carrie Nation police squad at work.

For September, the Auditor issued individual permits to 18,012 persons for 9006 gallons. And during the same month permits were issued to the drug stores of Seattle to bring in the following commodities: Whisky, 1626 gallons; raw alcohol, 8097; gin, 175; wine, 220; brandy, 265; vermouth, 15; total, 10,396 gallons.

During the month of July the police department destroyed 2730 gallons of booze captured in blind pigs; in August, 1974½ gallons.

The "piggers" are bringing the stuff in by every conceivable method. The favorite way is to ship a carload of booze from San Francisco bound for Alaska via Seattle and consigned to a transfer company. At Seattle it was taken off the train to go to the Alaska steamer—but it never got to the steamer.

No true friend is supposed to visit Seattle without bringing a supply of life-saving material in bottles for the benefit of the parched.

Of course, a very obvious way of evading the law is to fake the permits from the County Auditor. The thirsty persuade their friends to take out applications for booze for them. I know of an auto dealer who gets liquor in the name of all his employees. While I was in Seattle an enterprising individual was arrested for having started a little brokerage business in Auditor's permits. He was hiring men to take out liquor licenses for him for the very moderate sum of 25 cents per application.

MUCH DRUNKENNESS.

During recent months nearly as many arrests for drunkenness have been made in Seattle as during the wet days. But I attach no importance to this fact. This is largely bunk handed out by the wets and is about as silly and insincere as some of the bunk handed out by the drys.

The chief reason for the large number of arrests is the vigor of the police in taking up everybody who can't walk straight, whereas in the wet days any worthy citizen who could stagger along without knocking all the paint off the telegraph poles got safely by and was allowed to depart in peace. No one could seriously contend that as much drunkenness now exists as during the saloon days.

With a complacent police department, the blind-pig industry might have rivaled the old-time saloons in the amount of booze consumed, but the police department did not "stand in."

The Mayor of Seattle at the time the town went dry was Hiram Gill, and Hiram is still on the job. He is a quaint character—a little nervous man who smokes a corncob pipe and swears when his pen won't write. Hiram had been elected on a wet ticket; had been recalled from his job; then re-elected again as a wet. But when the town went dry Hiram camped on the trail of the blind pigs. He organized a squad of police for the special purpose and put it in charge of an incorruptible police sergeant named Putnam.

The efforts of this dry squad were not at first cheering to the cause of prohibition. Booze advanced in price to three or four times its normal figure. The piggers sold—and still sell—a 75-cent bottle of gin for $3, and other stimulants in proportion.

At this price they could afford to sell in open defiance of the law and pay the fines. With gin at $3, any pigger could drive right along and put his Police Court fines down to profit and loss.

FROM OKLAHOMA—HUH!

A whole family of young men named Billingsley came from Oklahoma with the open and declared intention of opening a piggery. One of them had an interview set in double-column measure type down the whole front page of an evening paper, in which he said that some laws were better broken than kept, and the dry law was one of them.

They started a big pharmacy on Stewart street and made no secret about the fact that they were selling the stuff. They had a dispensary in the store and a Jap downstairs in the cellar manufacturing strange concoctions out of alcohol and other mixtures.

Hiram pretty nigh bit the end off his corn cob pipe. He called up the police squad and gave the sergeant certain instructions.

Sergt. Putnam went down to the Stewart-street Pharmacy and he carried an ax. What he did to that drug store left Carrie Nation in the amateur class. By the time he got through with it, the Stewart-street Pharmacy looked as though a cyclone had been romping through.

A terrible yell of protest went up from the wets and many of the drys.

"You're high handed," they told the Mayor.

"You bet I'm high handed," yelled Hiram. And to the police sergeant, said, "Smash 'em up; smash 'em all up."

AND THEY SMASHED.

So the dry squad next moved on "Kelly's Art Palace," a magnificent bar room with the usual plate glass mirror back of the bar and paintings all over the shop. The sergeant looked the situation over and opened the conversation by heaving his trusty ax through the plate glass mirror. Then the squad went through the place. Before the eyes of the horrified Kelly, the cops literally broke up everything that would break. They smashed up all the glassware and spilled [illegible] worth of booze out onto the floor. They finished the job by getting a big logger's saw and cutting up Kelly's famous mahogany bar into wood stove lengths.

The liquor men hired lawyers to get out injunctions; so Hiram beat them to it by ordering the dry squad to do all the Carrie Nationing early in the morning in a hurry before the courts could convene.

Finding they couldn't head him off with injunctions, some of the piggers tried violence.

A Jap who was making booze out of alcohol and cheap whisky down in a basement tried to make a fight. He was shot and killed. When the dry squad tried to break up the bar in the Furgueson Hotel, they found a special officer on guard over it. There was a gun fight and three officers were shot, one being the special employed by the piggers.

The outstanding fact of this picturesque campaign seems to be that it has not been found possible to enforce prohibition by legal methods.

Beyond question, a lot of booze is still being sold in Seattle in spite of all the efforts of the dry squad. To get a drink has become a fascinating adventure.

This is one of the arguments against prohibition. Personally I do not drink. I wouldn't step across the room for the finest wine that ever sparkled in the glass of a king; but down in Arizona, a few weeks ago, I sneaked down alleys, rapped on mysterious doors and would have cheerfully crawled down dark tunnels to get to a place where they were secretly selling a very vile concoction that they called whisky. I didn't want the drink when I got it; but I liked the fun of getting it.

Well, a slam bang fight has been going on for a year between Mayor Hiram Gill and the piggers, with first Hi and then the piggers on top.

A COMPARISON.

Seattle hasn't the metropolitan appearance of Los Angeles. There is more traffic down Broadway, Los Angeles, than in the whole city of Seattle. You miss, here, the evidences of wealth that we have in Los Angeles. There are few very fine homes; most of the automobiles you see on the street are cheap ones. They have no big stores to compare with our best ones. Seattle impresses one as being a lively struggling middle class town with a stupendous harbor.

I have seen a lot of people in Seattle. One of the characteristics of this place is the frankness with which men talk. It is like the old days in the West.

Without opinion or prejudice I am going to set down the views of Seattle as to the effect of prohibition on their own town. I made no attempt to pick out either wet or dry people. I took them just as they came. Only this: I tried to duck all the cranks on both sides and tried to confine myself to those who seemed reasonably sane and did not pad statistics.

The first man I met with anything interesting to say on the subject I met on the train. He was a commercial traveler representing a big eastern firm, with branches in both Seattle and Portland. He looked like a man who got a big salary.

He was strong for prohibition and said the effect upon both Washington and Oregon had been good. He said the effect upon his line had been especially pronounced. Workingmen were buying better goods; the clothing business had improved; he mentioned that the 5-cent coffee houses had suffered a slump, and that the better class of eating houses had shown an increase of trade. In his mind this showed that the workingmen were spending for better food money that formerly had gone for booze.

In the same Pullman car was another gentleman who fell into the conversation; he turned out to be a prominent city official in Seattle. He said that crime had fallen off to an astonishing extent in the city of Seattle since the town went dry. He told us about a municipal golf course that was building near the city prison stockade. Since the advent of prohibition there were so few prisoners in the stockade that they were seriously considering the advisability of moving the whole thing away to make room for golf.

He said the general effect upon Seattle had been good, but there were some ridiculous features of the law which ought to be repealed. For instance, the Rainier brewery was driven out of the State of Washington, but is allowed to sell its beer to the holders of permits from the auditor. The result of this has been to deprive Washington of the benefit of the Rainier brewery's pay roll while the beer is still sold in the State. The money for the beer now goes outside of the State.

On the surface, he said, the abolition of the saloon had been of benefit in Washington, but he wondered if some other outlet for the excitement provided by the saloons would not have to be found. Industrial Washington had found it possible to get along without [illegible], but he was not sure what [illegible] would show in other directions.

It seems to me that the two men I have quoted do not take [illegible] industrial facts sufficiently into consideration. The drummer from the men's furnishing house is obviously in error in thinking that the ability of workingmen to buy good food depends upon the closing of saloons. Saloons had something to do with it, but the return of general prosperity to the Northwest, due to the opened trade with the Orient, should not be lost sight of as a contributing cause of the improved conditions in Seattle.

The first person I met in Seattle was a professional politician. He had been employed as a paid political manager for the wet party during the wet or dry election campaign.

He was very candid. He said that he had been surprised that business had suffered so little by the dry law. He was inclined to think prohibition had been a good thing for the city. A lot of booze, he said, was still being sold. He said the line-up in front of the auditor's window where the liquor permits [illegible] given out looked like the [illegible] [illegible] of the ball park the day of the world series.

He said that the savings banks had shown greatly-increased deposits since the town went dry; the deposits at the Bremerton navy yard had shown an increase of $126,000. He didn't know how much of this increased prosperity was really due to the closing of the saloons and how much to the return of better conditions all along the Coast.

I asked him what had become of the buildings which had formerly housed the saloons. By way of answer he suggested that we should take a tour of the town and look them over—which we did.

BILLY SUTHERLAND'S.

He took me first to Billy Sutherland's old saloon on Second avenue, once the most famous place in the Northwest; it was the gathering place of politicians. Billy himself happened to be standing out in front of the old resort gazing mournfully into the front windows, gazing into the past.

It was a somewhat painful meeting. It was the first time Billy had seen his former lobbiest. His resentment was bitter.

"You guys did a fine job," he said. "All you ever did was to come and lean over the bar and tell me everything was getting along fine and ask for more money. That's the trouble," he added, "the saloons always got the worst of it. When it comes to the showdown the big liquor interests threw them down."

Billy was very pessimistic over the liquor trade. "The wise ones will get out of it," he said. "I tell you that it is coming. It will only be a few years until we have national prohibition. I'm afraid that saloons are a thing of the past."

I asked him what effect he thought the dry law had had in Seattle.

"It brought rents down," he said. "I used to pay $800 a month for this saloon and now it is bringing [illegible] as a railroad office. Still, that is not absolutely conclusive, they were charging me too much for that saloon. The rent was due to come down."

In spite of the lowered rent, Mr. Sutherland said he would not go on record as saying that going dry had really hurt business in Seattle. He said that liquor had been voted out of business largely by the votes of workingmen, who thought they would have more money to spend at home without the temptation of the bar. "But," he said, "as far as I can see, it hasn't made much difference. They spend the money now in blind pigs. They have 'pigs' scattered all over town—in drug stores and office buildings and even in private houses. They are selling a lot of rotten doped booze and paying three to four times the regulation price for it."

The place formerly occupied by Sutherland's saloon is now filled by railroad offices. A large saloon which stood almost next door now stands vacant. This is one of the very few cases I saw where saloon property has not been rerented.

"SKEE ROAD."

We went down to "Skee Road," a district adjoining the water front and formerly the tough part of Seattle, something on the order of the Barbary Coast. The rents in this district have fallen more than in any other part of the city. The explanation given is that saloons were able to pay more than other business in such a quarter. In other words, the old Skee district was a star location for a certain kind of saloon, but no kind of location at all for any other business. Yet we did not find the Skee district by any means deserted.

In one corner saloon we found a moving-picture-and-phonograph arcade; in another a barber college, in another a cigar stand. Another we found with its old bar and its old bartenders in their white ducks. They were theoretically selling soft drinks. With the advent of prohibition, the brewers have put out an imitation beer which, by a violent stretch of the imagination, is supposed to taste something like beer.

The nearest that science has come to a perfect vacuum is temperance beer.

REAL ESTATE.

Henry Broderick is to Seattle real estate what W. M. Garland, or R. A. Rowan is to Los Angeles. From the real estate signs, however, I should say that he makes a specialty of renting.

He told me that the effect of prohibition had been much exaggerated on both sides. He said he didn't think the closing of the saloons had a great deal of direct effect either way. Rents in the old water front district had been maintained at a high figure and were bound to go down anyhow because the town was moving away. It was true that a big shrinkage in crime had been noted since the town went dry. He thought this was due more to good industrial conditions than to the "dry" law. When so many men were out of work, the parks were filled with hungry men and holdups were of nightly occurrence. There was a nightly avalanche of crime. When work became more plentiful, the crime died away. It happened that the industrial depression caused by the war began to lift about the time the saloons went out of business. Rents, he said, had shown a marked fall in certain districts. Saloon property in the water front district had, in some instances, fallen from $300 or $400 a month to $100, or even $75. He didn't think prohibition had much effect on the value of real estate, especially front foot values in the business district.

KILLING BUSINESS.

J. F. Sweeney is the proprietor of the Butler Hotel. He is the head of the committee which is making the political campaign to modify the prohibition law. The principal change demanded is to give hotels of fifty or more rooms the right to sell liquor with meals.

Sweeney was violent on the subject. He said that there was about as much drunkenness as ever and that the blind pigs were making an awful booze that would kill a horse. He said prohibition was killing business.

He said the tourists had been kept away and the receipts of his hotel had dropped 35 to 40 per cent. He is interested in an office building in which the income was $3600 a month until the town went dry. It is now $2600 a month. He said the closing of the Rainier Brewery alone had taken nearly a million dollars a year out of the town.

He said that prohibition had done harm in a moral way. It had substituted crime, surreptitious drinking of chemicalized liquor for the open saloons. What had been open and above board, conducted under the law and every one else could see and regulate, was now done secretly, criminally and attended by evils of which no one could complain to the authorities without confessing himself a co-offender.

IT DID HURT.

After seeing Sweeney, I had a long talk with the manager of a big business concern who cannot be quoted as he is obliged to preserve neutrality. He comes into intimate contact with business conditions in Seattle.

"Both sides lie about it," he said. "That's the long and short of it. "Prohibition did hurt Seattle in a business way. The town was hurt severely . . . particularly as regards property values. The assessed valuation of Seattle dropped $8,000,000 when the town went dry.

"Saloon property representing an investment of $15,000,000, which was drawing 7 per cent. interest, was simply blown into mid-air. The closing of the town threw 1500 men out of good jobs. They, with their families, had to leave town. Seattle lost 10,000 to 15,000 people by prohibition.

"Prohibition did not stop drunkenness. Sixty-nine new drug stores have opened since the passage of the dry law. Many of them are owned by former saloon men.

"The police blotter shows that arrests for drunkenness have not materially diminished. Last January there were ninety-four arrests for drunkenness; in February, 117; March 294. I haven't the figures since then; but in March the arrests were only six less for the month than when the town was wet.

"The permits issued by the Auditor show that Seattle people legally brought in 453,624 pints of liquor for personal consumption during the month of August. In addition to this, large quantities were brought in by blind piggers.

A HARD BLOW.

"The hardest blow we got was from the cutting off of the Alaskan tourist trade. The miners used to come down here every winter to spend their money. They bought their Alaska supplies here when they went back. Most of them now go to San Francisco and they will buy their supplies there. As Alaska continues to grow in importance, this will be felt by Seattle even more than now.

"The impression that Seattle had benefited industrially by closing the liquor selling came from Clarence Blethen. Old Col. Blethen was a big man and a great editor. Clarence rattles around in his chair and makes a lot of noise for fear every one will think he isn't as important as his father was.

"Six weeks after the town had gone dry he began getting himself interviewed in the East and told everybody how prohibition had been a good thing for the town. At the time of these interviews, he had been away three weeks out of the six that had elapsed since the town was voted dry. Everybody wondered how Clarence knew so much about it without being here. His statements have never been corroborated by any responsible Seattle firm."

J. F. Ronald is perhaps the best known judge in that part of Washington. He has been, until lately, presiding judge of the Superior Court of King county and for many years had charge of the criminal trials in the courts of Seattle.

He told me that, since Seattle went dry, crime has been reduced at least 50 per cent. Of that 50 per cent., at least half the cases are prosecutions of blind piggers.

"Criminal lawyers have practically gone out of business," he said. "Most of the criminals in my court are now defended by boys just admitted to the bar who are waiting around to be appointed. When the town first went dry, the blind pig people fought hard and relied upon the belief that juries would not convict them. One day this week, five pool room men came into my court and pleaded guilty."

Judge Ronald is also a man of large property interests. I asked him about the commercial effect of prohibition. He said it had reduced rents, but he thought rents had been too high and that the sudden shock of any great industrial change would have jarred them down to normal.

WHAT THE MAYOR SAYS.

Having pretty well fortified myself with facts, I went down to see the Mayor.

When I came in His Honor was telephoning to the sergeant of the dry squad about a boat coming in from Alaska. He said somebody had informed him one of the officers of the boat was carrying a lot of booze.

The Mayor is a little nervous man with a bald head and a sharp, keen face. He has puffs under his eyes as though he had suffered much from ill health. He smokes a corn cob pipe which keeps going out.

He never has any matches. As we talked, clerks kept coming in with documents for the Mayor's signature. Every time he tried to sign his name the pen went dry and he swore; for he had to take his feet down and turn around to wet it again. After talking for half an hour or more, Hiram took me over to the police station to meet the sergeant of the dry squad. Whenever he met any of the policement, en route, their heels snapped together and their hands rose in salute, but the Mayor only nodded genially and said to them, "Good morning my child; gimme a match.'

This was what the Mayor told me:

"Well I'll tell you, I used to be a wet myself. You know I have had a funny experience in this job. I was elected; recalled; then elected again. As most of my friends were wet, I suppose you would call me a wet. I was a lawyer by profession. Most of my clients were among that class of people. I have lost all those clients now. I'm done as a lawyer. My practice has gone. The drys haven't anything to give a fellow in that line; nothing but a blessing.

"I voted wet at the election when the State went dry. But as long as the law was on the statute books, I began to enforce it. Without the right kind of a police force I couldn't have done anything. It happened that I had at hand an incorruptible police sergeant. He got after them horse, foot and dragoons.

"Very early in the fight we found that a lot of blind piggers were prepared to sell liquor in open defiance of the law. We imposed fines upon them, but they simply put the fines down to profit and loss and went right along. On account of the increased price charged for the booze, they could easily afford to pay the maximum fines. Anyhow, they didn't think the juries would convict them.

"Well, they couldn't get away with it. I sent the police boys around and told them to bust up the places. They certainly did a good job of it. By the time they got through with those places there wasn't enough left to make a toothpick out of. I don't suppose it was exactly legal, but it was the only way. They made a terrible yell and tried to get out injunctions, but I sent the police out early in the morning and we busted the places up before they could get hold of a judge.

"In one instance we found that we had made a mistake and paid the proprietor of the place $300 damages simply as a matter of justice. Many of the blind piggers are threatening damage suits but I figure they won't get very far with them. They can't come into court with clean hands. I don't think they will stand much of a chance before a jury.

"Under the law there is no limit to the amount of liquor that a druggist can get and sell on prescription; but as a matter of practical police regulation we only allow them to get what looks to be a reasonable amount. When we see druggists or private parties bringing in what seems to us an unusual or unreasonable amount we arbitrarily stop them—and we get away with it.

"The City Council is with me in this. They have told me to go ahead, they will stand the damage suits.

"I don't think it has hurt business in Seattle. If it has, the harm has been done indirectly. For instance, it may be that capitalists who contemplated putting up buildings have in some instances delayed doing so. I know one man who was about to put up a twelve-story hotel on Jackson street. The town went dry and he chopped it off at six stories. He told me the other day he was sorry he had changed his mind. He said he intended now going on with the additional six stories. The change in his plans will involve an additional expenditure of $50,000.

"Retail business has been helped by prohibition. This morning there were five cigar dealers in my office trying to get me to help them in the matter of an ordinance relating to dice shaking. They told me they all voted wet, but were all in favor of keeping on with a dry city. They said their business has been better with a dry town.

"Storekeepers tell me they the collecting lots of their old accounts of which they had lost hope. Men who always have been considered deadbeats are now paying their bills.

"Prohibition has especially helped clothing and dry goods stores. The Frederick & Wilson dry goods house is digging the foundation for a new million-dollar building in Seattle.

"One very noticeable effect upon Seattle has been a shortage of tough I.W.W.'s. They don't come any more. There was some violence in the strike just called off on the water front, but the conditions have been much better than in former strikes, when booze was sold on the water front.

"We have lost some population and gained some. Many men were attracted East by big pay in the munitions factories. I think the city directory will show a net gain over last year. We have lost some Alaska tourist trade. I think we will retain the best of it. A lot of good people always come down from Alaska every year; also a lot of bums. The desirable ones will keep on coming. We can get along without the 'tourists who came down for the purpose of getting drunk." So much for the Mayor.

HOTELS SUFFER.

One of the last men I saw in Seattle was the manager of the new Washington Hotel, which is the social hub around which Seattle revolves. His name is Marmaduke. The same company that owns the Washington Hotel also controls a great deal of Seattle real estate, including the Alaska Block.

Mr. Marmaduke is a leader in the movement to modify the prohibition laws in order to permit hotels to serve liquor.

"Prohibition," he said, "has hurt hotels and certain kinds of rental property have been hurt.

"Nearly every large hotel loses money on its dining-room and makes up the loss on its bar. Guests always think they are being robbed in the dining-room of hotels, but the reverse is true. On account of the fierce overhead expense hotels always lose on all meat orders. They make something on coffee, soup, pastry and salads; but on the whole the hotel dining-room is a heavy loss, to be made up only by the profits of the bar. Prohibition has cost our hotel $25,000.

"I try to look at the thing fairly, however. On the whole, I don't think it has been a bad thing for the town.

"Property formerly occupied by saloons has dropped from $800 to $450 and from $400 to $250 in two instances I have in mind. This is not due so much to the effect of a general slump caused by prohibition as by the fact that a saloon can pay a higher rent than almost any other business.

"With saloon-building rents dropping at this rate there is a tendency for other rents to follow. Other tenants in the same block ask for similar reductions.

"My opinion is that prohibition has not hurt front footage values and my experience in the Alaska Building is that the rental price of offices for professional men has not diminished.

"Considerable liquor is being sold in blind pigs and at fearful prices. Gin which is imported at 75 cents a bottle is sold for $3. Whisky shows the same increase."

Here, then, is the testimony in the case, which I have presented for the most part without comment.

Frankly, my conclusion is that saloons have not controlled the slump or the recovery of Seattle, although they have had something to do with it. Seattle went into the dumps along with all the other Coast cities because of the depression following the European war. It is now enjoying good times on account of the heavy trade with the Orient and because of $25,000,000 worth of shipbuilding contracts for its yards, and because lumber is picking up.

Furthermore, as I said before, Seattle does not form a just basis for comparison with Los Angeles. Washington is not a criterion for California.

PROHIBITION HURT SEATTLE TOURIST TRADE: LOOK OUT!

ONE feature of prohibition in Seattle that should be carefully considered by the Southern California voter.

An admitted loss to Seattle as the result of going dry is the tourist trade. Seattle hotel men say that a large share of tourists who formerly came in every winter from Alaska now make a wide circle around Seattle.

The diversion of this tourist trade can be born by Seattle with Christian fortitude and heroic equanimity: Seattle was never much of a tourist town and never banked much on the tourist trade. Seattle is essentially a seaport and commercial city. If Seattle people have lost tourist trade, they can reflect with philosophy that they didn't have much tourist trade to lose.

No one can look into the future and state with absolute certainty whether prohibition would have a similar effect upon the tourist trade in California. But if it should blight the tourist crop in Southern California as it blighted the tourist crop in the State of Washington, we would lose our star asset.

This is the place where the voter in Southern California can well sit down and do a little careful figuring.

Both sides are doing a good deal of lying as to the effects of prohibition in Seattle; but the fact that Seattle has lost her tourist trade cannot be denied.

Slapsticks.

EXPECTED CHICKEN; GOT IT IN SALAD.

HUMOROUS DETAILS ENLIVEN DIVORCE PROCEEDING.

Crated Hog Refused to Stay Crated, and Words Ensued, Says Husband—Wife Retaliates by Saying He Liked the Ladies and Proving it on Him.

If the pig had not got out of the crate, if John P. Proper had not told his wife he could nail the cover so the pig would stay in the crate, and if Mrs. Marie E. Proper had not called her husband, the latter alleges, a d—— fool for thinking he had sense enough to crate a pig, the fishing trip the Propers made to a lake near this city would not have become a record of the divorce court.

But, although the row was serious, Mr. Proper's recital of the pig incident in Judge Wood's court was humorous, though not intended to be such. For when he said the pig sat up in the tonneau of the automobile and gazed complacently at the scenery, not saying a word during the row that followed, the court smiled behind his hand and the spectators tittered.

Mr. Proper recalled the incident as one of the many alleged acts of cruelty he suffered at the hands of his wife. No man likes to be called a d— fool by his wife, or his ability to crate a pig questioned, he said. Nor did it soften matters when one of the young women friends in the automobile offered to sit in the back seat and keep piggy quiet.

Mrs. Proper, who brought the suit for divorce, did not press it. Mr. Proper's cross-complaint was heard and Judge Wood had Mrs. Proper sent for. She told the incident of the chicken salad. She said she found cards of women in her husband's pockets. The idea occurred to her to call up Mr. Proper and in a disguised voice make a date with him. She did and they agreed to meet at a local cafe. Mrs. Proper was there when Mr. Proper walked in, she testified.

"Your 'chicken' did not come," she said sweetly to Mr. Proper "Not to disappoint you, I will order a chicken salad."

On that occasion Mr. Proper said she called him names. She said she did not. Judge Wood denied Mr. Proper a decree. He said neither was entitled to a decree. But it was evident to him that they could not live happily together.

FRED DATO HERE.

Charged with Violating Neutrality Comes to Los Angeles to Confer with Attorneys—J. E. Culver is Arested on Same Charge—Released.

Fred Dato, brother-in-law of Col. Estaban Cantu, military governor of Lower California, arrested in Calexico several days ago, on the charge of violating the neutrality laws in conspiring to purchase and ship ten machine guns to Col. Cantu, was in Los Angeles yesterday, conferring with his attorneys.

Dato was indicted with C. J. O'Reilly and Julian Trens, by the Federal grand jury, and a bench warrant was issued for his arrest, but as he had already given bond in the sum of $5000 before United States Commissioner Walsh, in El Centro, the warrant was not served, the Imperial county bond holding him until his appearance in court here.

Joseph E. Culver, one of the latest defendants in the neutrality case, furnished bond yesterday afternoon in the sum of $2000 for his appearance when needed. He affirms his innocence of the charge against him.

CIGAR MEN INSPECTED.

The Metropolitan Squad, in charge of Police Sergeant Cleveland Heath, yesterday afternoon inspected the cigar stands of the city looking for handbooks. As a result of their investigation two men, Stanley Page and Joe McGregor, were arrested and charged with bookmaking. They were later released in $500 bail each.

SPOUSE CONVICTED, WIFE COLLAPSES.

JURY FINDS THERE WAS FRAUD IN AUTO DEALS.

New Trial or Probation to be Asked for Young Father Held Guilty of Buying Cars on Time, Selling Them and Leaving Accounts Unpaid.

R. J. Davis was convicted yesterday in Judge Willis's court of fraud in automobile deals. When the jury in less than ten minutes found the verdict of guilty, his little son and his wife broke down and had to be led from the courtroom. The court is to pronounce sentence next Tuesday. Attorneys for the defendant stated they will probably present application for a new trial or a petition for probation.

Davis was arrested with R. L. Cramer on a charge of having obtained automobiles by giving small sums of cash and personal notes for the balance. The cars were disposed of and the notes never made good. The specific charge against them was brought by C. P. Shriver of No. 224½ South Burlington avenue.

Cramer, the associate of Davis, is also accused of a number of realty swindles. He disappeared several days ago, at the time his trial was scheduled, and officers have not found him.

HEAD STUFFED FROM CATARRH OR A COLD
Says Cream Applied in Nostrils Opens Air Passages Right Up.

Instant relief—no waiting. Your clogged nostrils open right up; the air passages of your head clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, snuffling, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; your cold or catarrh disappears.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of the fragrant, antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen mucous membrane and relief comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed-up with a cold or nasty catarrh.

You Can't Brush Or Wash Out Dandruff

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this tonight, and by morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

"See How That Corn Comes Clear Off!"

"GETS-IT" Loosens Your Corn Right Off. It's the Modern Corn Wonder—Never Fails.

"It's hard to believe anything could act like this on a corn or a callus. Why, I lifted that corn right off with my finger nail. 'GETS-IT' is certainly wonderful."—You don't have to fool and putter around with your corns, harness them up with bandages or try to dig them out.

"It's Just Wonderful, the Way 'GETS-IT' Makes All Corns Go Quick."

"GETS-IT" is a liquid. You put on a few drops in a few seconds. It dries. It's painless. Put your stocking on right over it. Put on your regular shoes. You won't limp or have a corn "twist" in your face. The corn, callus or wart will loosen from your toe—off it comes. Glory hallelujah! "GETS-IT" is the biggest selling corn cure in the world today. When you try it, you know why.

"GETS-IT" is sold and recommended by druggists everywhere, 25c a bottle, or sent on receipt of price by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago, Ill.

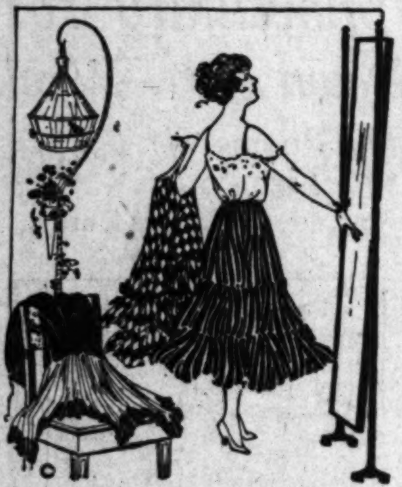
And a Guarantee

FITS LIKE Eppo PETTICOAT A GLOVE



It is with a reasonable amount of pride that we announce to our customers and all women of Southern California the fact of our recently being appointed selling agents for the famous Eppo petticoat. The Eppo petticoat is guaranteed by the label, which is sewn in the waistband of the garment. Added to this guarantee is the patented feature—the elastic waistband at the back and the side opening at the front, making the Eppo Petticoat the choice of discriminating women everywhere.

The mode of cutting and finishing the Eppo petticoat makes them fit over the hips without a wrinkle. The average petticoat is simply a bag with a string run through at the top. The Eppo is different. There are no wrinkles and no loose cloth to interfere with the outside skirt or gown. Eppo petticoats are made in regular sizes and extra large sizes for large women. The large sizes fit as smoothly over the hips as do the medium and small sizes.

WOMEN'S WORK AND WOMEN'S CLUBS

BY DOROTHY B. JOHNSTON.

The Club Woman's Collect.

KEEP us, O God, from pettiness; let us be large in thought, in word in deed. Let us be done with fault-finding and leave off self-seeking. May we put away all pretense and meet each other face to face without self-pity and without prejudice. May we never be hasty in judgment and always generous. Let us take time for all things; make us to put into action our better impulses, straightforward and unafraid. Grant that we may realize it is the little things of life that create differences; that in the big things of life we are as one. And may we strive to touch and to know the great, common Woman's heart of us all, and O Lord God, let us not forget to be kind.

What with the suffrage luncheon of Tuesday—our fifth celebration—and Tagore and the unusually high-class general and departmental club programmes of the past week, the club women have flitted from one place to another in rapid succession. Then, too, we had the opportunity on Saturday afternoon of greeting under the happiest of conditions our new superintendent of schools, Dr. Albert Shiels, and his wife, when the three chief educational organizations of Los Angeles—the Principals' Club, the High School Teachers' Association and the City Teachers' Club—were hosts at a brilliant reception to these newcomers at the Ebell Clubhouse. The members of the Board of Education were present, and several hundred men and women attended.

On Friday afternoon the Los Angeles branch of the Association of Collegiate Alumnae, the College Woman's Club, the Vassar Club, the Mills College Alumnae Association, the Federation of College Women's Clubs and the Browning Club gave a reception to Dr. Aurelia Henry Reinhardt, president of Mills College, the only exclusive woman's college on the Pacific Coast, and for Miss Ethel Moore, national vice-president of the Collegiate Alumnae. Dr. Reinhardt gave the programme at the Friday Morning Club, and is to be the guest of the Pasadena Shakespeare Club on Tuesday.

Looking forward, this week promises even more in clubdom, with all the distinguished women who arrive Wednesday on the Hughes special train to be dined and heard and seen.

The Ebell Club.

Mrs. Chester C. Ashley, president of the far-famed Ebell Club, who served the organization as vice-president last year, and whose opening address, "Ich Dien," so aptly described her whole attitude towards club life, is the mother of three children and makes her home and her club in the order named her chief interests.

She believes that the more cultured people a city boasts the less likely are they to put prosperity to base uses, and enlightened action on current problems becomes more usual.

Under her guidance the Ebell Club will maintain its best traditions, than which there could be no higher.

When the department of music met on Wednesday last, Mrs. Horatio Cogswell presiding, a charming programme was enjoyed. Mrs. Gertrude Ross, a talented composer, played a new suite with California for their theme. Mrs. William Duffield played a group of songs for children which reeked of nursery charm. Two haunting Irish songs were sung by Mrs. May McDonald Hope. Mrs. Abbie Norton Jamison, assisted by Mrs. Fred Begles, a new contralto to Los Angeles, and Miss Virgie Lee Moore all contributed to the general delight of the programme. The Madrigal Quartette concluded the musical repast with a group of songs.

The California and Landmarks section met on Thursday, under the direction of Miss Margaret Phillipson, when Miss Grace Stoermer, grand vice-president of the Native Daughters of the Golden West, gave an interesting talk on California industries, illustrated by motion pictures. The motion-picture industry itself with its forty-five studios, producing 75 per cent. of the films of the country, was a feature of the narrative.

Tomorrow aternoon the programme will be in the hands of Mr. B. R. Baumgardt, noted scientist and astronomer, who will take "The Trend of Modern Thought" for his discourse.

Eschscholtzia.

As chairman of entertainment for this year of Eschscholtzia chapter, D.A.R., Mrs. Dwight Satterlee has some very tangible plans for increasing the funds of the organization to be distributed in the various avenues of philanthropy. And she has a capital committee to assist.

The chapter holds its meetings the first Tuesday each month at the Ebell Clubhouse, No. 1719 South Figueroa street, Mrs. William Henry Dudley presiding. The October meeting was devoted to a musical programme furnished by Miss Irene Zeller, Mrs. Ruth Oney at the piano, and Mrs. George W. Prince talked on the formation, object and aim of the organization.

The City Charter Amendments.

Reynold E. Blight will give an analysis of the city charter amendments at the next regular meeting of the Woman's City Club at Blanchard Hall, tomorrow.

The Hollywood Woman's Club.

Miss Helen Brooks, director of Cumnock School, gave an interesting talk on the English poets, accompanied by slides in which the chief places of interest in England, Scotland and Ireland were realistically depicted, at the Hollywood Woman's Club Wednesday.

Mrs. Alfred L. Bartlett spoke on the community property laws, the Moren Colony Bill and mother's pensions, measures proposed by the Women's Legislative Council of California.

Mrs. H. A. Davidson of Cambridge, Mass., Mr. Richard Odinsky, and Mr. Clarene McGehee were guests of the club at the tea and reception.

Mr. McGehee, who was tutor in the imperial family of Japan, will give the programme at the club on October 18, when he will interpret five scenes from a Japanese classical drama, easily one of the most unusual and interesting drama programmes of the year. He has some marvelous costumes, brought from the Orient, in which he appears on the platform.

The music section held its first meeting on Tuesday last when Miss Macomber spoke on Scandinavian folk lore, members in costume representing Scandinavian countries, sang groups of folk songs, and Mrs. J. G. Grosse discussed musical matters of current interest in the musical world. Miss Margaret Goetz, a guest, spoke of the need of a music settlement in Los Angeles.

The art section met on Wednesday when Mrs. Randall Hutchinson of the Friday Club spoke interestingly on industrial art. American artists are to be the subject of study this year.

This club will keep open house on Sunday afternoons from 2 to 6 p.m. Art exhibits will be a feature of the occasion.

The first of a series of subscription dances will be held at the clubhouse, October 27, when a Halloween party has been planned.

The Wednesday Morning Club.

Miss Lois Thompson, reader, and Miss Edna Thompson, pianist, were responsible for the last programme at the Wednesday Morning Club, when Mrs. M. E. Johnson, the clever and witty president, presided.

The music section will study the opera "Princess Chrysanthemum," which will later be given a performance for the benefit of the club. Mrs. Harold Baily is the leader.

Mrs. J. P. McGue of the Shakespeare section reports a large attendance for the study of "Julius Caesar"

The Glendale Club.

Planned by the board of directors, assisted by Mrs. R. W. Meeker, chairman of hospitality, the Tuesday Afternoon Club of Glendale opened with eclat at Masonic Hall this week. Two hundred and fifty members sat down to the admirable luncheon, the president, Mrs. H. E. Bartlett, presiding.

Miss Ruth Markell, a soloist, [illegible] a group of songs, and Mrs. [illegible] Richardson closed the day [illegible] port of the biennial [illegible] which she attended as a [illegible] tive of the club.

GOOD MORNING! HOW'RE YOUR PIPES?

Read what Good Housekeeping Magazine says about the McDermott Hydraulic Force Cup.

For cleaning clogged drains in Sinks, Bath Tubs, Lavatories and toilets a new invention. It has been tested and approved by the Good Housekeeping magazine and the thousands of readers of that splendid publication know what that means. This is what Good Housekeeping says, "construction good, efficiency of design good, efficiency of operation good."

The McDermott Hydraulic force cup successfully cleaned a stopped drain at Good Housekeeping Institute. This stoppage had been caused by an accumulation of waste thrown into the sink by a plumber's workman and might fairly be called a bad case. The suggestion to make use of hot lye in connection with the force cup is an excellent one.

In general the directions are especially to be commended, enabling the purchaser to make the fullest use of the appliance. Buy one today, don't wait until your pipes stop up. Clean them out every thirty days and keep your home sanitary. You know that when the traps are full with waste matter the water oozes from them and it leaves a bad odor. In your house you save the price of the cup the first time you clean out a pipe and one will last you for five years. You will save in plumber bills, doctor bills and in sanitation. The price is one dollar, guaranteed. If it don't do all we claim for it, you can bring it back with the sales slip and your money will be refunded. You take no chances, it is the best appliance for cleaning clogged drains that has ever been invented. Every plumber in America should have one in his kit. Every janitor should have one so that when a stoppage occurs he knows just how to open up the drain. Every house wife in the world that has a garden hose water pressure should have a Hydraulic Cup in her home. Every Hotel and Apartment House should have a McDermott Hydraulic Cup. They would save the price many, many times every year. To people that live outside of Los Angeles, send one dollar to John McDermott, 1311 West 42nd St., Los Angeles, and he will send you a cup post paid with the above guarantee.

Good Housekeeping says it is splendid appliance. Come in today and get one. They are made in Los Angeles. Sold by Parmelee-Dohrmann Co., The Owl Drug Co. Stores, "The Sun Drug Stores, and Hamburger's. Reference Bradstreet's, Dun's or Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank.

Cured His RUPTURE

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 18C Marcellus Avenue, Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

EAT LESS MEAT AND TAKE SALTS IF KIDNEYS HURT.

Says a Tablespoonful of Salts Flushes Kidneys, Stopping Backache.

Meat Forms Uric Acid, Which Excites Kidneys and Weakens Bladder.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad's Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

Gullible.

WOMEN CHIEF VICTIMS OF REALTY SWINDLERS.

In Great Majority of Those Who Appeal to the District Attorney on Average of Four Daily—Some of the Methods Most Successfully Employed by Crooks—What the Law Can do to Discourage the Practices.

DREAMS of sudden wealth acquired through some fortunate real estate transaction form the basis for most of the Los Angeles real estate frauds of the past few years, according to the District Attorney.

Ceaseless efforts of the authorities to stamp out realty swindles have failed, largely because of laxity in the laws and technicalities that make evasion of charges possible. Some of the cleverest swindlers in the country have gone free from Los Angeles courts because their astute attorneys have been well conversant with the loopholes of jurisprudence in this character of crime.

The foundation of success of real estate sharpers is in the easy credulity of their victims.

HOW IT'S DONE.

"That's why we have to investigate so many complaints and why so so manay persons lose their savings to sharpers here," said Deputy District Attorney Joos yesterday.

"For the gullible brilliant pictures of easy money in the real estate business are painted, usually by some sharper who has ferreted them out. The proposing purchaser never stops to investigate the property, the person he is dealing with or the papers that are turned over to indicate that a deal has been consummated. The first realization of having been bilked arises when the new owner tries to dispose of the purchase.

"Here enter fraudulent deeds, faked abstracts, bogus mortgages, improper titles and a legion of minor technicalities that go to invalidate the property holding. Only then the man or woman in trouble begins to realize that he or she failed to exercise even ordinary prudence in going into the deal."

THREE TO FIVE DAILY.

"There are three to five persons a day coming before me to lay their troubles about property purchases," said Special Investigator Chapelle of the District Attorney's office, whose efforts have uncovered such gigantic swindles as those alleged to have been perpetrated by Robert Connely, Clinton W. Roberts, Charles A. Elder, his associates and many others.

According to the Penal Code of California there must be not only documentary evidence of a crime, but also one or more witnesses to the matters involved, in addition to the plaintiff in the action. The real estate shark usually is aware of this and sees that his transactions with his dupe are alone.

WHAT'S BEING DONE.

Co-operating with the Los Angeles Realty Board, the Chamber of Commerce and other civic organizations, Dist.-Atty Woolwine has succeeded admirably in stopping many questionable practices.

The disposal of "harbor lots" located blocks and even miles from the harbor, through the use of spielers, lecturers, downtown corner touts and similar objectionable appendages was stopped. Tricksters who sold property on little or nothing, merely to secure the contracts of purchase for the purpose of discounting these with banks, building contractors and for exchanges, have had a hard row to hoe for more than a year past, and have practically suspended operations.

THE WOMEN TOO.

Watching the want columns of the newspapers, the sharpers choose individuals who are endeavoring to trade local property, as their victims. Usually they pick a woman. There were five women to one man in the District Attorney's office during the past week telling of their inveiglement into transactions with Connely.

They traded anything from a vacant lot, a corner store or other realty to a business enterprise or an automobile truck. According to their statements, they received deeds to thousands of acres in Louisiana, Missouri, Arkansas, Arizona and other distant places, or if they preferred local property, they were given deeds to almost anything their heart desired.

A wealthy Alhambra man, owning a beautiful small ranch home worth approximately $30,000, decided that he wanted to extend himself as a rancher and gladly traded for several thousand acres in Texas with Clinton W. Roberts, he says. According to his allegations, when he came to take possession of the land, he found that Roberts never had a penny invested in it.

Mrs. Mary Belle Woods, who traded her Thirty-fifth street home for a small empire in Missouri supposedly belonging to Connely, found that all she had to show for the transaction were the spurious abstracts from the days of old Louisiana under Spanish dominion to the present, augmented by forgeries of letters written by Daniel Webster, Rufus Choate and others.

MANY AWAIT TRIAL.

Under the principal charges of false pretenses, embezzlement and forgery, there are no less than twenty men awaiting trial during the remainder of 1916 in the local county courts.

At least 200 arrests were made during the past year on charges incident to real estate frauds, and despite this continued warning to be careful, the investing public apparently keeps on getting involved with swindlers and sharps.

As Safeguard.

REALTY BOARD PROTECTS MEMBERS AND PUBLIC.

BY PHILIP D. WILSON,
Secretary Los Angeles Realty Board.

THE Los Angeles Realty Board is a representative body of men composed of a large majority of the honest and sincere real estate dealers in Los Angeles, and the board always seeks to protect its own members and the public from unscrupulous and unauthorized dealers, who have no responsibility whatever and who masquerade under the title of "real estate" men.

The realty board welcomes all responsibile and honest real estate men to its ranks, but it is forever at war with the unscrupulous men, who are not true real estate dealers, but who seek to prey upon their victims through their ignorance. This war that the board has conducted and which it ever maintains has been responsible for the elimination of many self-styled realty men, but the board, nor any other organization on earth cannot make the criminally-inclined in this line of business, or any other line of business, honest.

Every safeguard possible is used by this board to protect the public in their dealings in real estate and we urge the public to deal with members of this board who have responsibility and whose membership is a virtual guarantee of their reliability. We do not mean to say that no real estate dealers are honest or responsible who do not belong to the board, but we do want to impress the public with the fact that they stand a far better chance of being competently and honestly served and their interests safeguarded if they will deal with members of this organization. If a member of the realty board is convicted of a dishonest act of any nature whatsoever, he is not retained as a member.

Another important fact the public should bear in mind is that, in making a real estate deal of any nature, a buyer should at all times see that his interests are protected by demanding that all deals go in escrow and seeing that title is perfected and guaranteed before finally concluding the transactions.

The realty board believes thoroughly that real estate is a profession and that those who engage in it should demonstrate their fitness and responsibility by an examination, just as doctors, lawyers and other professional men who are not allowed to practice until they have obtained their diplomas, and that they should be licensed by the State. Our organization fostered a realty license bill in the Legislature several years ago and, after a hard fight, the measure was passed by both houses, but the Governor saw fit to veto this measure without giving any reason whatever to responsible real estate men who were so vitally interested. It is our intention to carry this matter before the Legislature again at its next session and we hope to have a just and equitable law enacted that will thoroughly safeguard the public.

Whenever any persons feel that they have been unjustly treated by members of the board in any transactions, we earnestly ask them to bring these matters to the attention of our organization at once.

SAYS BODY IS A POISON FACTORY

Urges Every One to Drink Glass of Hot Water Before Breakfast.

Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken day after day, leaves in the alimentary canal a certain amount of indigestible material, which, if not completely eliminated from the system each day becomes food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels. From this mass of leftover waste, toxins and ptomaine-like poisons are formed and sucked into the blood.

Men and Women who can't get feeling right must begin to take inside baths. Before eating breakfast each morning drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash out of the thirty feet of bowels the previous day's accumulation of poisons and toxins, and to keep the entire alimentary canal clean, pure and fresh.

Those who are subject to sick headache, colds, billiousness, constipation, others who wake up with bad taste, foul breath, backache, rheumatic stiffness, or have a sour, gassy stomach after meals, are urged to get a quarter-pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store, and begin practicing internal sanitation. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make any one an enthusiast on the subject.

Remember, inside bathing is more important than outside bathing, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing poor health, while the bowel pores do. Just as soap and hot water cleanse, sweeten and freshen the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

ONLY ONE BOTTLE.

One bottle of beer does not constitute a "blind pig" in any sense of the word, according to Judge Willis. Recorder Albert May of San Gabriel had convicted Mrs. Santos Medrano of conducting such an establishment and her appeal came up yesterday. San Gabriel City Attorney Earl Wakeman argued against the dismissal of the case, but was overruled by the court after it had been conclusively shown that only one bottle of the liquor was found in her possession at the time of her arrest.

RECEPTION AND DINNER.

The Van Nuys Poultry Association will give a reception and dinner for Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Schofield and Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Olsen, who have recently become identified with the poultry industry in the community, next Thursday night, at 7 o'clock, at Whitson Hall, Van Nuys.

Realty Crooks.

reading it, but, in some instances, persons of supposed sagacity.

In one recent instance a wealthy Los Angeles man traded a costly touring car for a "phony" trust deed, unconvinced of the crookedness of the transaction even after he had been warned by representatives of the title company handling the escrow. This man is declared on good authority to be one of a hundred or more who have been "rooked" out of automobiles (ranging from "jits" to high-priced cars, depending upon how much the traffic would stand) in the course of a series of wholesale swindling operations of identical character, all involving lots in a single west side subdivision.

The plan followed by the manipulators of this game is to buy a marked-down lot in the name of a dummy and to place a first mortgage for an amount considerably in excess of the purchase price. (This is done with the connivance of unscrupulous loan brokers who induce clients to loan money on fictitious values.) Then a transfer is made to a second person, whereby a "phony" trust deed of a certain amount is placed subject to the first mortgage upon the same property. All the instruments are recorded at the same time and then the worthless trust deed, which does not involve any cash whatever, is traded off to some unsuspecting person for an automobile or other property of value, almost anything being accepted, the operator of the scheme giving his dupe the impression that the trust deed is amply secured by the property, or represents a part of the purchase price.

Literally hundreds of such worthless instruments have been and are being hawked around by the workers of this particular steal, which has been a favorite with certain "specialists" among the "get-rich-quick" artists for the past year or more. The slackness of the real estate market ever since the national depression from which Los Angeles is now so satisfactorily recovering set in three years ago has caused an almost general marking down of residence lots in many sections of the city, and this condition has greatly facilitated the game for the bunco men.

ANOTHER STEAL.

Another common practice is for a sharper to go to the owner of a desirable unimproved lot, in most cases some woman unfamiliar with business transactions, and offer to buy the site and erect a valuable building upon it, agreeing to pay the price asked for the property. A small cash deposit is made and the balance of the purchase price is by way of a trust deed subject to a first mortgage, which is to represent the price of the building itself, the buyer being supposed to receive in cash the amount of the first mortgage, using the proceeds thereof in the erection of the improvement.

The unsuspecting dupe, believing that with the erection of the building on the lot the security for the trust deed will be adequate, and relying on the promises of the sharper that he can sell the property at an enhanced valuation, affording a profit over the amount of the encumbrances, conveys the property. A first mortgage is then executed in favor of a dummy by the purchaser, and the trust deed is given to the seller for the purchase price of the lot, after the operator of the scheme has secured the building loan, leaving the dupe with the second encumbrance behind a heavy building loan. The crook never intends to complete the building, his sole object being to get his hands on the mortgage money.

The dupe gets back a foundation or a hollow frame work, which, with the trust deed behind the building loan, represents the visible cost of his tragic experience. His only recourse, a sorry one, indeed, is to foreclose the trust deed held by himself and pay off the mortgage to recover title to his own property, then to complete the building out of his own pocket. Two self-proclaimed "builders," who have cut a great dash in recent months on account of the large number of building permits they have taken out and have achieved notoriety for the number of houses they have left unfinished, were arrested a week ago for playing this particular game on a spunky little woman who isn't afraid of the publicity she will get for seeking redress.

LAND FRAUDS.

The "Texas land frauds" unearthed by the Realty Board and the District Attorney's office in the past few months have received much publicity. The crimes charged against the men now under arrest in connection with these investigations are patterned after an old-time swindle that has been worked all over the country. Owners are persuaded to exchange their valuable properties for lands of alleged high value in Texas or some other State, in which large tracts of land are numerous. The lands received in trade are found to be heavily incumbered, of little or no value, or, as in cases recently brought to light, to be handled under fake titles from non-existent or defunct title companies. The dupes fail to ascertain the facts from responsible bankers or real estate dealers, or to have the title records searched, precautions that would cost but little and save untold misery.

Other crooks purchase cheap railroad lands, inflate their value ten to twenty times and then trade for clear properties, generally with easterners, offering as an inducement and sop to possible skepticism to guarantee a loan considerably greater in amount than the cost of the land to the manipulator. The eastern or other valuable property acquired is then traded off, sold or mortgaged and the promised loan made through a dummy to the dupe in the event he has not been so completely beguiled as not even to demand it, as is often the case.

Trading stocks or bonds of little or no value and guaranteeing a loan on them for the sake of plausibility is another way the higher-up crooks have of getting properties. Thousands of dollars are cleaned up in some of these deals, the shark having things arranged always to realize much more on the property secured than he has agreed to lend on the securities he traded.

"MUTUAL RELEASE."

To obviate the danger of prosecution on grounds of fraud in such deals as those mentioned in the last two paragraphs, the clever sharper in every case demands from his victim a written release and waiver of all rights of action which might be construed to grow out of the transaction. Some finesse is involved in this procedure, the usual method of persuasion being to make the release of "rights" mutual, the manipulator thereby showing his own willingness to abide by the possible consequences of the deal. "Merely a little formality between friends, don't you know." Cases have come to light where worthless lands and securities flung back by duped traders at the sharks who make a specialty of guaranteeing loans on such stuff have been used over and over again for the same kind of steals.

Cases where prospective purchasers are shown good suburban lots supposed to be owned by the sharper and then deeded other lots of little value elsewhere in the same vicinity when a deal is closed, come up frequently. Such swindles would, of course, be impossible if those bilked were less prone to listen to fair words and representations and pay more attention to details of legal description. False representations as to boundary lines get many into trouble, being undiscovered ofttimes until the purchaser attempts to build an improvement. Many buy lots without really examining plat maps, and lands without a thought of having a survey made. These are "meat" for certain types of crooks.

Only some of the commoner frauds perpetrated have been enumerated, and new ones are being invented by the crooks and unearthed by the authorities every week. People by the hundreds persist in the face of all the revelations made in patronizing "curb-stone" brokers instead of reputable and established realty concerns and these, almost without an exception, are the ones who suffer. The warnings of honorable dealers and the title men go unheeded, especially by the women victims, instances coming to light every day where women have persisted in carrying out deals with clever crooks who have gained their confidence, in the face of the well-meant advice of escrow clerks after searches have revealed the questionableness of the transactions they are engaged in. Leading realty men declare that as long as so large a part of the public will not protect itself by the obvious methods of ordinary precaution, it is time to enact legislation that will make outlaws of the crooks operating in real estate.

TO BE HONEST.

Ernest G. Rurig hurried back to Los Angeles from Maricopa, Ariz., when he heard that he was wanted on a charge of passing a worthless check on the Stowell Hotel management, where he had stopped. He arrived just in time to appear before Justice Hanby before the close of courts yesterday and was asked to appear on Wednesday for his preliminary hearing. Rurig is the son of an Orange rancher and had gone to Arizona to look up some mining property. He declared he had no knowledge that his account at the National Bank of Orange had been overdrawn.

"The Bravest Woman in the World."

Animal trainer with the Sells-Floto circus, which begins a three-day engagement here tomorrow.

Coming.

SELLS-FLOTO CIRCUS TO OPEN HERE TOMORROW.

THERE'LL be noise and hurry and rustling about out at the circus grounds tomorrow morning. There'll be the unpacking of trunks in the dressing rooms. There will be the wild waving of other trunks in the "menagerie," where the elephants are quartered. There'll be hurrying "razor-backs" and plank men, and gaudy wagons with gilt and glitter sprinkled all over them. There'll be horses and camels and blood sweating behemoths that really sweat blood, and flags and banners and excitement and lions with rosin-rough voices and—

But why not break right down and make the confession? For tomorrow morning there will bob into the life of this city for a three days' stay the Sells-Floto circus, Buffalo Bill Wild West, champion shows of the world, and carrying with it a list that includes every champion in the amusement world—even Jess Willard and Frank Gotch. Jess Willard will illustrate with his sparring partner just how the great rounds of his battle with Moran were fought and how the winning blow was given. Frank Gotch will demonstrate how he conquered all contestants.

That's the reason for all the activity. That's the reason for the heavy, truckling sound of wagons as they make their way through the streets in the gray of tomorrow's dawn. That's the reason that tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock there will wind through the downtown streets the long twisting lines of painted wagons, the troops of horses, the strung-out files of elephants, the groups of good-looking women—the million-dollar parade of the circus.

Tomorrow afternoon at 2:15 o'clock will come the first of the performances, in which the announcer will call forth exhibitions that will range all the way from Jess Willard and Frank Gotch on thru a list of champions to Rosa Roseland, the champion horse-to-horse somersault rider of them all. And of course there'll be the forty champion clowns. And Lucia Zora, the champion elephant trainer, with her thirty tons of elephants. And Rhoda Royal with his equestritorium.

There will be the Buffalo Bill cowboys to show the Wild West in its wildest moment, and the old Deadwood stage-coach, and the Indians and the acrobats and aerialists and the contortionists and—but the list is too long, even for generalities.

The night performance is to be given at 8:15 o'clock, while the doors, of course, will be open an hour earlier, to allow the patrons of the circus to visit the menagerie and so that the children may look at the new circus novelty, "Toyland," to their hearts' content.

That those desiring seats may obtain them in advance, a special representative will be in attendance all day tomorrow at the Sun Drug Company, Seventh and Broadway, where reserved seats may be obtained at the same prices as charged at the ticket wagons on the grounds.

BAD MAN PROVES GOOD AS RUNNER.

WILY MEXICAN SEEKS SAFETY IN FLIGHT.

Plays "Possum" when Officers Catch Him Only to Make Another Bolt to no Avail—He is Last of Pomona Terror Quartette, Captors Say.

Sonon Diaz, last of a quartette of bad men who have been terrorizing Pomona, was captured Thursday afternoon near Dominguez, after leading Deputy Sheriffs Reyes and Sepulveda a muddy chase over the beet fields in that section.

The chase was punctuated by shots directed toward the Mexican, who refused to halt. At the last shot the man toppled over and groaned, so that the officers feared he had been seriously wounded. He was only playing "possum," however, a thorough investigation proving that he had not been touched.

Another bolt followed, but he failed to get far, and was hauled back to Los Angeles in his own wagon, which had been left standing at the side of the road. The officers were first notified that Diaz had been visiting a woman friend at Compton. When they arrived there he had departed about an hour previously.

At Dominguez Junction they saw him talking to another Mexican. As soon as he saw the machine halt he started his flight. According to information of the Sheriff's office sent in by Deputy Slanker of Pomona, Diaz is one of the small group of Mexicans who have been doing a wholesale business of looting barns, basements and houses. Bicycles, harness and similar articles were their most frequent loot.

W. E. Carlton, who is alleged to have forged the scrip vouchers with the name of R. W. McQuiston, a newspaper publisher of Azusa, is still held pending the hearing of the charges against him.

She is secretary of the New York Probation Association, and probation officer of the magistrate's courts of New York City.

These fine representative women, nearly all of whom are self-supporting wage earners, are coming to Los Angeles next Wednesday to urge the election of Candidate Hughes. These and numerous others, for the list is incomplete, since distinguished women are to join the party at every city.

SUPPORT HERE.

It is interesting, also, to see how many representative women of Los Angeles are supporting this Hughes campaign—many former Progressives, a few Democrats and all the Republicans. And many of them anti, or at least lukewarm suffragists to boot, wherefore it is not alone his stand for the Federal amendment on votes for women that has won the support of the intelligent women. Mrs. Cornelius Cole, still dubious about suffrage, but a staunch Republican, recent delegate to the convention and noted clubwoman, and Mrs. Seward A. Simons, formerly a Progressive Republican and past president of the Friday Morning Club, are enthusiastic supporters of this Hughes Alliance. Indeed, the manner in which the Progressive women are co-operating with their Republican sisters in this campaign for Hughes is doing much to heal old wounds. Mrs. Frank A. Gibson is one of the keenest of Hughes women—she who is an authority on immigration and prominent in all women's activities. Mrs. E. D. Stephens of Santa Monica, Mrs. E. K. Leighton, Mrs. J. Powell Flint, Mrs. Oliver C. Bryant, Mrs. Henry Slater are all converted Progressives and serving in some capacity in this alliance. Mrs. Charles Farwell Edson, Mrs. George A. Clarke, Mrs. H. A. Cable of the Federation of Women's Clubs are all Progressives working for Mr. Hughes.

Prominent Republican women are Mrs. Joseph F. Sartori, Mrs. Abbie Hulburt, Mrs. E. R. Brainerd, Mrs. E. P. Clark, Mrs. O. S. Barnum and Mrs. Charles Dick, the latter grand marshal for the monster parade in which many hundreds of automobiles are to take part, when the Hughes workers arrive.

To the big banquet to be given at the Alexandria, when 1000 men and women will assemble to hear the speakers, parties will come from San Bernardino, Redlands, Riverside, Rialto, Santa Monica, Long Beach, Orange county and the harbor, tables having been reserved accordingly. The banquet tickets cost $1 each, which is for the dinner, and a contribution to the campaign fund. Tables will be cleverly arranged so that all can hear the speakers. It will not be a social function, but strictly informal, and the distinguished women will not be entertained with a reception, but will be listened to instead. This banquet is to be at 7 o'clock the evening of the 18th. An intellectual feast, if ever there was one.

Miss Anne Rhodes, national organizer of the Hughes Alliance, arrived in Los Angeles yesterday. She is traveling in advance of the Women's Hughes Alliance train down the coast and will remain in Los Angeles until the train arrives here.

Miss Rhodes left New York last April and since that time she has organized Hughes Alliance organizations in nine States in the West and on the Pacific Coast. She reports that Oregon is the banner State of the West with 20,000 enrolled members of the Hughes Alliance, every one of whom are voters and can be depended upon to vote for Charles E. Hughes in November. A few days ago Oregon held a State-wide, all-day conference at which 101 branches of the Hughes Alliance were represented with two delegates from each county in the State, the most notable one being the county of which Medford is the county seat. This is ordinarily the banner Democratic county of Oregon, but it now has the largest single branch Hughes Alliance on the Coast, numbering 1025 members.

Washington was the last of the Western States to organize a Hughes alliance, but is now conducting a whirlwind campaign for enrollment with two experienced women in the field. The organization centers in Seattle, where Judge Burke is president.

Miss Rhodes did not start organizing in California until after the Sacramento convention last month, but work is now actively under way and is going forward with a rush. In Arizona, organizers for the Hughes Alliance have been out in the field for a month and are rolling up a big membership, every one of whom is pledged to work for Hughes.

"It should be understood," says Miss Rhodes, "that the Hughes Alliance is an organization of both men and women and none are enrolled except actual voters—every single enrollment means a sure vote for Hughes. I confidently expect we will win all the Coast States for him."

GARBAGE THIEVERY.

Reduction Company Complains That Hotels, Restaurants and Other Establishments Break Law by Selling Refuse; is Loss for Concern.

Thefts of green garbage are worrying the Pacific Reduction Company, which yesterday filed a vigorous communication with the Board of Works, asking that all the hotels, restaurants and apartment-houses in the city be notified by the authorities that they are partners to a crime if they sell their garbage to anyone. The matter was referred to the City Attorney.

H. J. Murphy, general manager of the Pacific Reduction Company, wrote that the magnitude of these thefts never has been realized by the city and it is only recently that it has been fully appreciated by the company.

"These garbage thieves pick up nothing but the very best and richest material," he says, "leaving the burden upon the company of taking care of the poorer quality of residential garbage, on which there is nothing but loss.

"We have learned that the man who drives the wagon and steals the garbage is not alone the offender but that a large percentage of the restaurants, hotels and apartment-houses are receiving compensation for this garbage."

BEE MAN STUNG.

Homesteader Loses Right to Land after Giving Note for Bee Apiary with Which He Hoped to Hold Land Against Contestants.

Leslie P. Bywater gave a note for $3000 for seventy-five stands of bees, in the vicinity of Castaic, and got stung.

When a tract of fifty acres was opened for settlement August 11, 1915, by the government, Mr. Bywater and David W. Corbin made what is acknowledged to be simultaneous entry, and began to prepare to live on the land.

The record shows that Mr. Corbin faithfully carried out his agreement, but that Mr. Bywater did not spend his time entirely on the land. But he bought seventy-five stands of bees of H. H. Elkin, who since April, 1910, had lived there by the operations of a permit that he secured from the forest service.

When the issues were tried before Register Roche and Receiver Mitchell some time ago, the finding was in favor of Mr. Corbin, and this has now been affirmed by the General Land Office. So Bywater has an apiary on his hands, but no land on which to place it.

Two Departments Established—Case Involving Admission of Alonzo Wells to Practice Law and a Damage Suit against Bar Association.

The Supreme Court of California, with Chief Justice F. M. Angelotti presiding, will convene for its October session in the Union League Building tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m., sitting en banc, when the law calendar will be called. This will continue Tuesday and Wednesday, when the court will divide into Departments One and Two, sitting Thursday, Friday and the following Monday. Department One will consist of Justice Shaw presiding, and Associate Justices Sloss and Lawlor; Department Two will consist of Justice Henshaw presiding and Associate Justices Lorigan and Melvin.

One of the important cases on the calendar, set for hearing Tuesday, is relating to the admission of T. Alonzo Wells to practice law, the outcome of a contest between Wells and the Orange County Bar Association that has resulted in a $120,000 damage suit in the United States District Court. Wells seeks to recover that sum for alleged defamation of character by the defendants, officers of the Orange County Bar Association.

GOOD ROADS BONDS WILL REDUCE COST OF LIVING.

If Proposed Fifteen-million- dollar Issue Passes, the Improved Highways will Prov e Big Factor in Economics, Allowing Farmers to Market Crops at Greater Profit and Less Cost to Consumer.

THAT the passage of the proposed $15,000,000 good-roads bond issue will be an important factor in reducing the high cost of living was the gist of a statement made yesterday by Standish Mitchell, secretary of the Committee of One Hundred, appointed last week to conduct the southern campaign in favor of the bonds.

"Good roads make it possible for the farmer to market his products at a greater profit to himself and at a less cost to the consumer," declared Secretary Mitchell. "Improved highways constitute one of the most important factors in the plan of economics of the day. Figuratively speaking, the necessities of life are brought closer to the home and table.

"The passage of the bonds will make possible the opening to settlers of vast tracts of fertile land now uninhabited and unproductive because of their inaccessibility. Victory for the bonds means the solution of the annual unemployed problem for several years to come. Last, but not least, California will be able to truthfully boast the finest system of good roads of any State in the Union.

"The proposed bond issue will not only permit the completion of the State highway system as originally planned, but will provide sufficient funds to stretch additional good roads into new territory, tapping great tracts of virgin soil. It will enhance realty values throughout the State and bring about the development of land now regarded as barren waste."

Despite the fact that the Committee of One Hundred is hardly a week old, the members have already mapped out an educational campaign that will leave no phase of the proposed bond issue unexplained. Their efforts are being met with enthusiasm and promises of support and co-operation.

"I expect to see the bonds carry with an overwhelming majority," declared Henry W. Keller, director of the Automobile Club of Southern California and chairman of the committee. It should be emphasized that no section of the State will reap any more benefits than the southern through the passage of the bonds.

"The issue will provide for the extension of the San Bernardino county State highway lateral to Barstow, in San Bernardino county; an extension connecting Antelope Valley, in Los Angeles county, with the city of Los Angeles; an extension of the San Bernardino county State highway lateral to the Arizona State line, near Yuma, via Brawley and El Centro, in Imperial county; an extension of a new highway north from Los Angeles through Kern county, opening the great national parks and famed resorts of the Sierras; the extension of many other improved highways into new territory and the closing of gaps and completing of unfinished work, perfecting a system of State highways that will be second to none in the United States."

One of the strongest arguments in favor of the bond issue is the fact that none of the people will be called upon to face an increased tax assessment, since the income from the corporation and inheritance taxes and others will be ample to meet the expense. It is said that the completion of the good-roads work, with the proposed extensions, will clear away the mountain barriers between Los Angeles and Oregon and quicken the communication between the Southland and all central and northern counties.

The Executive Committee of the Committee of One Hundred, named by Chairman Keller, is composed of Seward A. Simons, G. A. Brock, Standish Mitchell of Los Angeles, Fred Wilcox of Pasadena, and the chairman. The committee will hold its first meeting Tuesday noon.

VOTERS MAKE RECORD.

Big Increase in City Registration With More than Two Hundred Thousand Entitled to Cast Their Ballots on Amendments.

The total registration in the city for the special election to be held October 24 is 209,475, City Clerk Wilde announced yesterday. The registration for the Presidential primary election August 29 was 193,640, so there has been an increase of 18,360 since that date. The registration for the election November 7 will be approximately 212,000.

The City Clerk yesterday started to mail to the electors copies of the ordinances and charter amendments to be voted on at the special election, together with the sample ballots. The 702 precincts have been combined into 350 special precincts for this election.

The documents sent to the voters are the fourteen proposed charter amendments, the initiative ordinance to allow regulated dancing in hotels, restaurants and cafes holding liquor licenses, the argument against that ordinance, and the ordinance amending the initiative ordinance regulating slaughtering of animals within the city limits.

LIBEL ACTION FILED.

Assistant United States District Attorney W. F. Palmer yesterday filed a libel against the Petroleum Transport Company of this city to recover $2,636.91, alleged to be due by reason of damages inflicted in a collision by the oil tanker Charles C. Harwood, while cruising in Galveston Channel, in the vicinity of Pelican Island, January 13, 1916, to the boxboat No. 16, owned by the government, and engaged at the time in distributing supplies to the Coast Artillery, then in the vicinity of Galveston.

Will Never be Without This Simple Laxative

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin Relieved Her Baby When Nothing Else Would.

Little Max Pendergrast is now four years old, and a fine healthy boy. When but a tiny baby, in fact almost from birth, he suffered a great deal from constipation. His mother, Mrs. Carl W. Pendergrast, Red Key. Ind., heard of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, obtained a bottle of it from the drug store, and with it was able to quickly correct this condition.

Mrs. Pendergrast says Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has saved them calling the doctor many times, and that she will never be without a bottle of it in the house to use when needed. She found it equally effective as a laxative for herself and other members of the family.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin, pleasant to the taste, mild in action and positive in effect. It does not gripe or strain, and contains no opiate or narcotic drug. It is the ideal family laxative, mild and pleasant for baby, yet acting quickly on the strongest constitution.

Max Pendergrast

To avoid imitations and ineffective substitutes be sure to ask for Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. See that a facsimile of Dr. Caldwell's signature and his portrait appear on the yellow carton in which the bottle is packed. A trial bottle, free of charge, can be obtained by writing to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 455 Washington St., Monticello, Illinois.

FAVOR PASSAGE OF AMENDMENTS

To Make City and County Tax Offices One.

Realty Board Meets with Strong Approval.

Campaign Gets Indorsement of Best Citizens.

Hardly a dissenting voice has been raised against the proposed charter amendments which will allow of the consolidation of the city and county offices of tax collector and assessor. The Los Angeles Realty Board, which is campaigning strongly in favor of the movement, has met with nothing but encouragement. The following are among some of the expressions of opinion given the campaign committee by men and women of Los Angeles:

United States District Judge Bledsoe: I am heartily in favor of the proposed plan to consolidate the offices of city and county assessor and tax collector. We tried the plan in my home, in San Bernardino, and it worked admirably. It means greater simplicity, greater efficiency, greater economy and less discrimination and injustice in the matter of assessments. I shall take pleasure in voting for the proposed amendment and surely hope it will meet with the approval of the electorate.

F. E. Woodley, Supervisor: I am heartily in favor of the proposed consolidation. It is a step in the right direction. There is nothing more unwarranted in our city and county government than the expense and annoyance of the double assessing and tax collecting system. I believe the consolidation of other offices in the same way may be a matter of future accomplishment. This should be done in every case where there is a duplication of effort without necessity of local administration.

Jesse D. Burks, municipal efficiency director: The Efficiency Commission has very strongly urged the consolidation of these offices as a measure not only of economy, but of convenience and common sense. It is difficult to see how any sensible man could object to the amendment, but doubtless there will be specious objections raised to it. I am confident, however, that your committee will carry the matter to a successful conclusion.

A. J. Waters, president Citizens' National Bank: The ways in which our tax collecting and assessing systems are handled at the present time would indicate a duplication of work which entails considerable unnecessary expense, and I am heartily in favor of the consolidation of these offices.

R. H. Lyon, Chanslor & Lyon Company: There can be no possible question or argument in my opinion but what all taxpayers are agreed that the consolidation of the city and county assessor and tax collector's offices is a positive necessity, not only for the sake of economy, which it most undoubtedly will be, but also save much annoyance, lost time, and, without doubt, tax penalties in a great many instances. I am convinced a large majority of the voters will voice themselves in favor of the proposed amendment.

Mark Keppel, county superintendent of schools: I am very much in favor of the consolidation of offices and of the formation of a consolidated city and county.

Mrs. E. R. Brainerd, clubwoman: The consolidation proposed would be a great convenience to the public in simplifying the records and obviating the vexation of overlooking taxes and thus unwittingly having them become delinquent, and it would also be a great benefit in the uniformity of assessment and in equalizing the burdens of taxation. It would be a simpler form of organization for the convenience of the public: One office; one tax; one protest; one board to deal with. We should all join in trying to accomplish this desired consolidation.

W. G. Eisenmayer, Los Angeles Ice and Cold Storage Company: I am heartily in favor of the proposed consolidation, and no sane man could see anything but good from such a move.

John Parkinson, architect: Any plan which will consolidate the city and county and result in reducing the detail work, will save expense: I am heartily in favor of it. We want to reduce taxes and conduct the business end of the city and county on a practical, efficient and business basis.

Frank C. Egan: I have always had a great deal of respect and admiration for the Los Angeles Realty Board for the manner in which it looks out for the interests of the city. This present issue to consolidate the city and county tax offices is a splendid object to work for.

LeRoy H. Stanton, lumber merchant: I have always wondered why some movement of this kind had not been started before. It has always seemed to me a waste of money and a drain on the taxpayers of both the city and the county to maintain the two offices and with them the immense force of clerks and other employees, when one good efficient office could easily do the work of the two and with practically no additional expense. Every taxpayer, and especially those connected with the larger industries and business houses, should take a great interest in this work. The consolidation should meet with the undivided support of all the business men in the city.

Will be New Order of Things.

[Ohio State Journal:] There is much apprehension felt among thoughtful people throughout the world on account of the changed social conditions that are to follow the war. The ideas of men are getting a pretty lively shaking up by the bloody events in Europe. There is likely to be a new order of thinking after the belligerents lay down their arms and the soldiers come home. They will not relapse into their old places or habits of thinking. The world will be smaller than ever, but the thoughts will be greater. These thoughts will have to do with society and government, both of which are to pass into a revolutionary stage. And the change will not be a formal one. It will not be a preserver of institutions merely. It is going to put a new aspect on civic rights and make the individual the arbiter of public opinion. It is the man and not the machine that the coming revolution is to bring to the front. Of course, this seems a little misty and indefinite, but that is the condition of all great local changes, at the start. We are going to hear a great deal more about humanity in the next decade than ever before, and less of wealth and politics.

MOTOR EXPORTS SHOW INCREASE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—Exports of American automobiles during the year ending June 30, reached the great total of $144,626,749, exceeding by $67,700,000 the previous record made in 1915. Figures made public today by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce show that while export sales were made in seventy-six countries, they were chiefly concentrated, probably because of the war, in England, France and Russia.

Large increases in South America were noted. India, Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand and British South Africa also developed important markets for American motor cars and parts.

HUNS PLOW THROUGH TO A VICTORY.

BACKFIELD MEN SHOW CLASS AS RUNNERS.

Full-back Chambers Runs 70 Yards Through the Baptists for a Touchdown—Trine Makes Sole Redlands Score with a Belated Drop Kick—Elliott is a Star.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CLAREMONT, Oct. 14. — In a game featured by the open-field running of the Hun back field Pomona won the first conference game of the season on Alumni Field by a score of 19 to 3. At no time were the Baptists really dangerous, their only score being the result of a fumbled punt.

GOOD START.

Capt. Waltz kicked off to Redlands on her 15-yard line. The Huns held the Baptists for downs and recovered the ball on the 35-yard line. At once Pomona started a march down the field and Dowling went over for the first touchdown within three minutes after the game started. Goal was kicked.

Pomona chose to receive the kick-off and Chambers ran the ball into the 35-yard line. Again the Huns marched down the field only to be held on the 5-yard line. The Huns regained the ball on the 40-yard line, only to have Weed intercept a pass and run the ball back thirty yards as the quarter ended.

A LONG RUN.

The second quarter provided the feature of the game when Chambers, the fleet Hun full-back, took the ball on Pomona's 30-yard line and ran the length of the field for a touchdown.

Waltz missed goal. The half ended as Rapson missed a try at a goal from placement. Score, Pomona, 13; Redlands, 0.

The second half was marked by the return of Elliott, the giant Hun half-back, to the game. On the first play he carried the ball for a 15-yard gain. His work promises to be the sensation of the year if his injured leg will stand up under the work.

DROP KICK.

Redlands got possession of the ball on Pomona's 30-yard line, when Young fumbled a punt and Redlands scored three points when Trine dropped the ball between the posts for a field goal. The Huns were not to be denied, however, and through fine, open-field running by Elliott, the ball was carried down the field and Elliott took it over for the third touchdown. Goal was missed. The game ended with the ball in Pomona's possession on Redland's 20-yard line.

The teams lined up as follows:

Pomona.		Redlands.

INTERCEPTED FORWARD PASS WRECKS WHITTIER.

Brooks Pulls Ball Out of Air and Runs Across Goal for Winning Touchdown in the Last Two Minutes of Play. Aerial Play Makes Battle Sensational—Game Ends in Darkness—Sharpe Stars.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—Forward passes whose parabolas had baffled the California varsity for three quarters of the best football game that has been played on the California turf since the return of the American style won for the varsity that they had so nonplused.

Or, looking at it in another way, Roy Sharpe, that forty-horse-power hatrack that plays quarter-back on the California team, and football luck won for the Bears.

SENSATIONAL.

The score board at the end of the game stood—California 21, Whittier 17 and it was only at the very end of the game that it stood this. Most of the time it was Whittier 17, California 14, but that last ten minutes of play changed the score and brought defeat to a team that gave the Bears such an exhibition of open ball as they have never seen before. The play of U.S.C. last year is not to be compared with this Whittier work.

Almost every football game has some sort of thrill to offer, but few games in recent years about the bay hove compressed so much excitement for the bleachers in one short period, the last quarter.

It began in the third period, Sharpe caught a Whittier punt, one of those lofts that Finch toed out, and, swerving and dodging with his knees seeming to almost touch his chin, he dashed fifty yards down the field to be downed by Abbott. Play resumed. California got the ball when it went out of bounds. Twice in succession Sharpe got around the right end for gains of twenty and twenty-five yards, his interference blocking his way splendidly. The gains encouraged California. Brooks was driven through center twice and time of the third period ended with the ball on the Whittier 5-yard line.

LAST QUARTER.

Then began what later proved to be the whole game itself, a quarter of football that was as satisfying as one might wish.

The Whittier line stiffened up as California bent down for the signals of the first down. Brooks was shot into the pack. Another line buck and another. It took three full smashes to get the ball over that five yards to goal. Whittier fought for every inch. But at last Brooks got across and made the second California touchdown. Montgomery kicked the goal and the score stood 14 to 17 in favor of Whittier.

It was growing dark now. The Orange Sox of the Quaker players glinted over the field. The jumble of legs that waved in the mass plays looked curiously like a convention of fireflies.

Buckmaster rushed up to take the kick-off. He was tackled so hard by Brooks that he fell flat, but mustered his nerve and went back, only in a few seconds to be forced to relinquish his place to Ferguson. Both teams were tense. California needed but a chance at goal to win. Whittier needed but a few minutes in which to stave off a escore to achieve victory over the California machine.

QUAKERS MISTAKE.

The Quakers began a series of forward passes, clean throws that brought rounds of applause. Four

PIPAL'S OREGON AGGIES BEAT WASHINGTON STATE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PULLMAN (Wash.) Oct. 14.—Against all dope and in one of the hardest-fought gridiron battles in the history of the Washington State College, Coach Dietz's men went down to a hard defeat here today at the hands of one of the greatest football machines that the Northwest has ever seen, namely the Oregon Aggies as coached by Joseph Pipal, formerly of Los Angeles, who succeeded Coach Stuart, now of the Nebraska University.

The final score was Oregon Aggies, 13; Washington State College, 10.

From blow to blow of the whistle the game was full of thrillers, the kind that makes football the near-national sport of America, and Coach Pipal showed conclusively today that he knows football from A to Z. His team scored every period except the second.

Conn of Pasadena, Pipal's star from the south, came through again today as he did in the game last Saturday with Idaho, and in the third period booted the pigskin for a beautiful drop kick from the thirty-yard line. Conn's kicking ability has placed him in the forefront of northwestern stars of 1916.

Pipal today showed his superiority over the redskin Dietz in that his men, though they also made many fumbles, but no serious ones, carried far more yardage with their forward passes than did the Washington Aggies.

It was the Washington Aggies' first conference game and they tried hard to win against greater odds. Pipal's boys showed greater headwork, were faster on their feet, surer and stronger than the Pullman team. They outshone them in all periods except the second, when the greater part of the play was in Oregon territory.

It was in this period also that Durham, for Pullman, scored three points by a forty-yard kick for goal. Durham also made two thirty-yard runs in a broken field, but poor interference mitigated against his ability to score a touchdown in either instance. The lineups.

TROJANS BEAT SANTA FE CLUB.

[DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN BERNARDINO, Oct. 14.—The University of Southern California defeated the Santa Fe Athletic Club in a well-played game here this afternoon by a score of 14 to 0. After a continued attempt to advance the ball by bucks and end runs the university team executed a clever forward pass, Huicke to Murray and the latter carried it over. In the third quarter Huicke bucked over the line. Both goals were made.

The Santa Fe eleven appeared for the first time today and played a very strong defensive game. Cartwright, left half; Jensen, right end, and Sid Neighbors, tackle, were the stars for the San Bernardino team. Huicke, full, for U.S.C., and Murray, quarter, were easily the college stars.

The San Bernardino High School team was defeated by the Sherman Indians in a close, hard-fought game, free from fumbling. The score was 7 to 6. It was the first game of the season for both elevens.

NOW LEADING FOR NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP PURSE.

Comes Near American Speedway Record by Averaging One Hundred and Three and Nine-tenths Miles—Johnny Aitken Strolls in Second; Rickenbacher Next.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—Dario Resta captured the winner's share of the $16,000 Grand American purse today and went into the lead in the season's competition for the 1916 American championship purse of $13,500, by winning the 250-mile automobile race here today. He failed by a small fraction to equal the new world's record of 104 miles an hour established at the Astor cup race at New York. Resta's time for the 250 miles was 2h., 24m., 16.68s., a rate of 103.9 miles an hour.

Johnny Aitken finished second, half a lap behind.

Ralph Hedlich, mechanician for Wilbur d'Alene, was badly burned when gasoline, being poured into d'Alene's car at the pit, flashed up as it spilled on the hot exhaust pipe. Billy Chandler also was burned in extinguishing the blaze. D'Alene re-entered the race but quit before the 125th mile. Wilcox appeared to have won third place when an accident put him out at the 248th mile, Rickenbacker finishing third. Galvin, Lewis and Handerson finishing next in order, while the other eight cars which crossed the finish line were several laps behind the three leaders.

The sentence was the first penitentiary term ever imposed here on a manslaughter charge growing out of an automobile accident.

In imposing sentence Judge Jelly reiterated his announcement that prisoners convicted of stealing automobiles or speeding within the city limits would receive scant consideration at his hands.

ANGELS TROUNCE OAKS TWICE IN DOUBLE-HEADER

Seraphs Rapidly Running Away from Field in Race for the Pacific Coast League Pennant—Sick Jack Ryan Pitches Opener—George Washington Zabel Hurls the Second—Both Scores 5 to 1.

BY HARRY A. WILLIAMS.

TO PICK a phrase from the parlance of horse racing, the Angels continue to give a good illustration of a somewhat ungainly but game short-ender "running away from the field."

They are coming down the stretch seven lengths in front, and the only reason that five other teams are not taking their dust is that they are too far behind to even catch up with the dust.

Already away in front, the bit in their teeth, and running almost fast enough to throw their rider, the Angels yesterday increased their lead by a couple of jumps, defeating the reinforced and rehabilitated Oakland club in both heats of a double-header. They are now leading the field by better than seven games, and it begins to look as though the bunting would be nailed to the old flag in left field, bringing to Los Angeles the baseball supremacy of the West for the first time in seven years. Rah for Los Angeles!

The Angels made a neat, systematic clean-up, winning both games by identical scores—5 to 1. While not begrudging the Oaks a tally now and then, they should not have had a score off the pitching of Jack Ryan and George Washington Zabel.

SERVICE!

NINE YEARS AGO this company originated the use of the word "service" as applied to the motor car industry.

EIGHT YEARS AGO this company established the first motorcycle corps of service men to aid owners.

FOUR YEARS AGO this company organized the first chain of service stations ever organized by any dealer anywhere, giving our owners service throughout the State.

All of these innovations were widely copied by dealers, and are now a regular part of the motor car business everywhere.

ON APRIL 11, 1915, we announced the Earle C. Anthony, Inc., Copyrighted Service Coupon System, the first non-cumulative service coupon system to be announced by any dealer, anywhere and adopted in conjunction with our service stations.

In our announcement of this system we said: "The coupon system is an innovation, but it is the coming service system.
We predict that it will be widely copied. So watch for the next announcement of 'service coupons.'"

Since that time the following factories and dealers have used this system:

HUPP MOTOR CAR CO.
CHALMERS MOTOR CAR CO.
OLDSMOBILE CO. OF CAL.
GREER-ROBBINS CO.
And others.

It is the policy of this company to always be a year ahead of our competition, so our greatest development we now make public. See our announcement on last page.

The Best Ever.

UNIQUE DECORATIONS FOR THE AUTO SALON.

Futuristic Scheme of Black and White Decoration to be Used Throughout Display Pavilions — Demands for Floor Space Exceed Any Show Ever Staged in the West — Enthusiasm Everywhere for the Auto Show.

BLACK and white, with a dash of orange-red. Sounds like a new drink—but it isn't. It is the color scheme for the decorations of the Winter Automobile Show, and the art class at Manual Arts High School is now busy putting it into actuality. Under the capable leadership of Prof. Douglass Donaldson, the art students are turning out the designs and embellishments for the show buildings at Pico and Main streets. The scheme of decoration is now well advanced and promises to be one of the most unusual and beautiful ever devised for such a purpose.

UNIQUE.

The main idea of the decorative scheme will be futuristic. The sharp black and white backgrounds will lend themselves admirably to the display of the latest motor cars, and the general effect will be startlingly original. "Futuristic" does not imply freakishness, and the completed show decorations will blend and harmonize in a truly remarkable manner.

Throughout the buildings and tents the black and white scheme will be carried out. Even the Auto Club signs will conform to the plan and will be made up in attractive black and white designs.

SPECIAL WORK.

In addition to the general decorative scheme for the buildings, many of the exhibitors will have individual work done on their booths and even on their cars. Greer-Robbins Company, for one, has ordered a car decorated inside and out in the same color scheme, while others will follow suit along similar lines, especially in fancy interiors. There will be a certain wide latitude in the decorations of the various displays, but in the main they will conform to a degree with the general effect and no clash will be observable. To achieve this end decorative plans for the separate booths will be submitted to a committee for approval. Flowers, of course, will be used throughout the display.

SPECIAL.

A special feature of the building embellishment is to be made of the windows. Along Los Angeles street they are to be black with designs in white to show the progress of transportation down through the ages, each window to show a special form. The tent pavilions will carry out the same scheme in black and white with orange-red touches.

At the drawing held at the Los Angeles Athletic Club yesterday noon allotments of floor space were made. No one obtained all he wished, but there was no way out of it. The show had expanded until it covered 56,000 square feet—more than any show held west of Chicago—but even at that the demand could not be satisfied. The addition of the special pavilion for trucks helped out materially, but still there was not nearly enough space to meet the demands.

As it is there will be 227 exhibits, outside the accessories. There will be 198 pleasure cars and twenty-nine trucks. The latter will embrace every form used for utility purposes, even to the big lorrey, the fire and street-sweeper trucks, and on to the light delivery car. Much interest attaches to the truck department of the automobile show, as the truck is rapidly gaining more importance in both peace and war.

The display of closed pleasure cars promises to be exceptionally fine. Many varieties of all-weather cars will be on display, and it is expected that enclosed models and semi-enclosed cars will occupy more space than ever before. At this time of the year closed cars are proving especially attractive, and the opportunity for attractive displays makes them popular with the dealers.

ALL SETTLED.

Manager J. S. Conwell and the show committee, H. L. Arnold, Ralph Hamlin and P. H. Greer, have been working night and day lining up the hundreds of details necessary to make a successful show. The last-named trio have been up to their ears in worry, because of the demands for space, which were so far above the available amount. Now, however, things seem to be completely and satisfactorily settled, and all the dealers are happy over the allotments.

The entertainment side of the show will be strongly covered. There will be five orchestras for continuous performance and a series of special days are to be arranged, among them being High School Day, Halloween, etc.

The show opens October 28 and will last through November 4.

Decorations for the Auto Show.

This refers to the painting on the wall rather than to the Chalmers car or the young lady doing the painting. Either of the latter could be easily placed in the same class however. Colors of black and white with a dash of orange are being used throughout the show buildings and the futuristic scheme of decoration can readily be imagined.

TIRE CHANGING UP TO DATE.

Changing a tire with the aid of a pair of forceps ordinarily used for pulling teeth was the unique feat performed recently by Dr. Frank C. Campbell, a local dentist, when returning from a trip in the mountains. The tire blew out on a downward grade near San Antonio Heights, as he was coming down the Camp Baldy road. Campbell opened his took box to get the necessary implements to loosen the rim and found it empty. Then he felt around in his pockets and discovered that he had a pair of tooth pullers there. He next proceeded to use them to loosen the bolts on the rim and had no further difficulty in putting on the spare tire. Dr. Campbell now avers that when you're stuck there's nothing like having a pull.

Racing.

ANOTHER ENTRY IS LINED UP.

Clyde Rhodes Signs up for the Santa Monica Races.

Great Racing Season is Predicted for the Coast.

Closing of Entries Expected to Bring in Names.

Just three minutes before the formal closing of entries for the Vanderbilt Cup and International Grand Prize races at Santa Monica, last Wednesday, a wire was received from Clyde Rhodes, popular driver of the San Joaquin Valley, entering a Hudson Supersix in the two contests. Rhodes has had much experience in road and track contests held in the San Joaquin Valley. He drove in the Panama-Pacific road race in 1913 and in the Santa Monica events in 1912.

Men who have followed the racing game claim that Rhodes's entry is a forerunner of a team entry of Hudson Supersixes, but this claim has not been verified.

CLASS.

The Hudson entry adds another stock car to the list for the two big cup classics and substantiates the prediction made last week that stock-car racing is coming back. With a stock Cadillac entry in sight racing fans may be able this year to witness keen competition between stock cars on the famous eight-mile boulevard course along the ocean.

While the formal closing of entries occurred last Wednesday at noon, post entries will remain open for thirty days yet, final closing of entries occurring on November 11 at 12 noon.

Practically all the league drivers who will compete in Southern California during the coming winter raced on the Chicago Speedway yesterday and their entries for the Vanderbilt Cup and International Grand Prize races, as well as the Ascot Speedway events, are not expected before the middle of this week.

The entry of the Hudson Supersix brings the total number of entries received to date for the two cup classics to eight for each event. These are:

Car—	Driver.
Unnamed	Barney Oldfield
Mercer	Unnamed
Mercer	Glover Ruckstell
Mercer	Eddie Pullen
Mercer	Joe Thomas
Mercer	Unnamed
Stutz	Earl Cooper
Hudson Supersix	Clyde Rhodes

There is no doubt in the minds of the promoters of the Vanderbilt Cup and International Grand Prize races and the Ascot Speedway but that Southern California will witness the greatest season of motor racing ever held during the coming winter. The Santa Monica event and the Ascot Speedway contests provide two entirely different forms of racing, and the drivers will be seen in both types of competition.

BIG FIELD.

The fact that the three events to be held here will be the deciding contests for the national championship title and the $13,500 prize money offered by the Bosch and Goodrich companies will draw a large field of starters from the East. At least thirty-five cars are expected for the Santa Monica event, while the Ascot Speedway will have the pick of this aggregation. As only fourteen cars will be allowed to start on the Ascot Speedway, elimination trials will have to be held and the finest field of drivers and cars that ever faced a starter will fight for honors in the 200-mile contest on Los Angeles' macadam oval on Thanksgiving Day.

The Great Economy of Two Separate Power Ranges

In its "loafing range" the fuel consumption is about half what you would expect of a car of its size and power.

Think of an eighty horsepower eight-cylinder car, with all that power, smoothness and flexibility consuming so little fuel in all ordinary driving as to put many a forty horsepower six or four to shame.

But that's what it means to have two distinct power ranges—a "loafing range" for all ordinary requirements, with all the economy of cars which have no great power—no "sporting" speed—

And in addition, a "sporting range" separate and distinct which you only call upon when you want a brute of a car for a speed brush with a contender of real class or need emergency power for work that few cars can attempt.

That enormous power and great speed you have in the Peerless Eight's "sporting range" of power.

But you hold this tremendous reserve in a dormant state until you want it—it costs you nothing in fuel consumption until you use it.

Although you simply open the throttle wider to call upon its "sporting range" of power, the minute you begin to use it the whole character of the car is instantly changed.

It now responds with a deeper tone—you have opened its double poppets—only cars of the utmost distinction can show such class as you now exhibit.

No other car in the world can exhibit such sporting class coupled with such inexpensive operation in ordinary every-day driving.

Ask us to demonstrate the double power range of the Peerless Eighty Horsepower Eight.

"IT HAS been customary every year since the organization of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company to congregate all of the salesmen and agents at the home office for conference, and this year the delegation from Los Angeles will do its utmost to carry off the honors for California," says A. T. Smith, local manager of the big Akron company. "A few years ago, at the first convention, there were thirty men present.

"At this year's meeting, on October 17, 18 and 19, there will be in attendance over 500 Firestone men, making the greatest convention in our history. WORD received from Trenton, N. J., last week by George H. Bentel indicated that the Mercer racing team was preparing to depart for Los Angeles for the big speed season out here. Although only two of the new Mercers appeared at Sheepshead, it is expected that three cars will be shipped West to be driven by Eddie Pullen, G. E. Ruckstell and Joe Thomas. With a stock raceabout and Pullen's former No. 4—the only American car that ever won the Grand Prize—there will be five Mercers to start in the Santa Monica classic. Later the cars will be seen in the Championship Award Sweepstakes at Ascot Speedway.

Just how fast this world of speed is becoming is emphasized by some figures which Bentel recently received from the Mercer factory. Pullen, finishing in fifth place in the Sheepshead race, averaged 98.4 miles per hour for the entire distance. This is practically eleven miles an hour faster than he made when establishing the world's road race record at Corona.

Pullen turned one lap in the race at the rate of 110.76 miles per hour. This was in the time of one minute, five seconds, for the course. His time chart shows that he consistently made laps in one minute, six and seven seconds.

Ruckstell, Pullen's team mate, violently terminated his race when a tire blew and he slewed around three times, then rolled off the track and turned over. But for some soft dirt he could have straightened up the car, according to spectators.

HEAD OF COMPANY IS AN OPTIMIST.

In, commenting on the appointment of D. B. Williams as sales manager of the Mutual Motors Company at Jackson, Mich., J. I. Handley, president, in a letter to H. F. Shropshire of the Marion-Handley Sales Company, Southern California distributors of the Marion-Handley car, said:

"Our product has been received everywhere with such unanimous approval that we recently purchased for cash the immense, modern, completely-equipped plant we occupy. In placing Mr. Williams at the head of our sales organization we are forming the nucleus of a staff that will be able to handle sales as well as the manufacturing departments construct cars.

"We are looking into the future and preparing for it with honest efforts; all of our organization are optimists; we believe in ourselves, our work, our product and the future of America as a leader in the world's business.

"For some time past I have been thinking of visiting the Pacific Coast again on a semi-business and pleasure trip. But we are so busy at the factory that I don't know if I can make it, but if I can get away for a few weeks you will see me in Los Angeles."

LOCAL EXPERTS LEAVE TO STUDY TIRE MAKING.

"IT HAS been customary every year since the organization of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company to congregate all of the salesmen and agents at the home office for conference, and this year the delegation from Los Angeles will do its utmost to carry off the honors for California," says A. The picture made by this gathering of men will reflect the glory and romance of Old Spain, which permeated California's early history; traditions of the days of old—those days of gold—that are more like romantic fiction than solemn history.

"The big idea back of this mammoth convention is the interchange of ideas on selling for mutual benefit. Daily conferences with all men in assembly, addressed by company executives, branch managers and salesmen, will give each man abundant and valuable information. New ideas and new business methods will be discussed.

"The best and most efficient will be adopted and used in the worldwide field of Firestone business, and each man will use this data to the advantage of customers in his territory.

"Our men will spend a generous amount of time in the factories, studying most thoroughly the construction and manufacture of Firestone tires. Here, in the largest exclusive tire factory in the world, they will see the latest and most modern tire machinery in operation. They will see hundreds of tons of crude rubber, used at the rate of 100,000 pounds per day. This rubber, instead of being bought from brokers in the rubber ports, is bought at Singapore and shipped direct to Akron, thereby effecting a saving of from 2 to 5 cents per pound.

"This year the meetings will take place in the new Firestone club house, just finished at a cost of $300,000. This is intended for the use of Firestone employees and has every convenience necessary for their comfort. The big auditorium will be used for the general assembly.

"These days of study and interchange of ideas," continued Manager Smith, "represent a large investment. The results will be adequate dividends in better service for tire users. It means a more alert and better informed organization, composed of men who can serve customers most efficiently. The basic reason back of it all is that the Firestone company believes that satisfied customers are the biggest asset a concern can have—hence this greatest sales convention in Firestone annals."

They're Coming.

SANTA MONICA ENTRIES TO BE SHIPPED AT ONCE.

WORD received from Trenton, N. J., last week by George H. Bentel indicated that the Mercer racing team was preparing to depart for Los Angeles for the big speed season out here. Although only two of the new Mercers appeared at Sheepshead, it is expected that three cars will be shipped West to be driven by Eddie Pullen, G. E. Ruckstell and Joe Thomas. With a stock raceabout and Pullen's former No. 4—the only American car that ever won the Grand Prize—there will be five Mercers to start in the Santa Monica classic. Later the cars will be seen in the Championship Award Sweepstakes at Ascot Speedway.

Just how fast this world of speed is becoming is emphasized by some figures which Bentel recently received from the Mercer factory. Pullen, finishing in fifth place in the Sheepshead race, averaged 98.4 miles per hour for the entire distance. This is practically eleven miles an hour faster than he made when establishing the world's road race record at Corona.

Pullen turned one lap in the race at the rate of 110.76 miles per hour. This was in the time of one minute, [illegible] seconds, for the course. His time chart shows that he consistently made laps in one minute, six and [illegible] seconds.

Ruckstell, Pullen's team mate, accidentally terminated his race when a tire blew and he slewed around three times, then rolled off the track and turned over. But for some soft dirt he could have straightened up the car, according to spectators.

That Ruckstell's life was saved was due to safety construction introduced by Bentel in the racing cars while out here. This is a heavy angle iron running from the top of the cowl to the frame. The steering rod also is supported so that it will not crush in on the driver.

Twice now this iron has been a savior for Ruckstell. At San Francisco last year the car turned over but Ruckstell escaped unhurt.

Ruckstell, before his accident, was going very fast, turning one lap at the rate of 112.5 miles per hour.

LONG TOUR TESTS VALUE OF TIRES.

FIVE THOUSAND MILES, ONLY THREE PUNCTURES.

Claim Made that One Brand Actually Proves Power and Speed are Increased—Los Angeles Men Praise Wearing Qualities of Rubber and Fabric.

The recent trip East by Charles A. Mackey, Al Faulkner and three others in the former's big Pierce-Arrow touring car is still the subject of much reminiscing. Mr. Mackey in speaking of the trip said: "It was one of the most delightful outings I ever enjoyed.

"In making a transcontinental tour of this sort we were all very much impressed with the importance of having a thoroughly reliable car and tires that cannot only be depended upon for durability, but will also give the most mileage on each gallon of gas. I found that the Silvertowns on my car so conserved the power and increased the speed that a decided economy in fuel consumption was noticeable, and as for durability, we made the entire trip from Los Angeles to New York via the Santa Fe trail, with side trips, and returned to Buffalo with only three punctures, one of the tires going the entire distance of nearly 5000 miles with original air.

"All of the punctures were caused by nails, which we found imbedded in the casing."

Mr. Faulkner, local Marmon agent, who accompanied Mr. Mackey, told Frank R. Carroll, branch manager of the Goodrich company in Los Angeles, that while he had always had a good opinion of Silvertowns he had never believed that any tire would go through a trip of this sort, in the excellent condition in which they finished.

"We ran into ruts in many places and the sidewalls, which one usually expects to wear through in this sort of service, are apparently as good now as when we started," said Mr. Faulkner.

"Considering the weight of the car, which was 6500 pounds, loaded, the durability of the tires was remarkable. We did not do much careful driving, either, as we were bowling along at a good speed all the time, averaging from 300 to 350 miles per day."

The most extensive trip undertaken by a western college baseball team has been planned by the Leland Stanford management for next spring. A tour is to be taken to eastern cities and games played with Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Pennsylvania, Cornell and the other prominent colleges, beginning May 16.

Off for Akron.

A few local Firestone experts leaving for the annual convention at the Firestone factory. The local delegation are planning to carry out the California spirit by wearing appropriate costumes. A. T. Smith is shown in one of 'em.

Stanford has in other years sent its eight-oared shell crew, tennis and track squads East.

Windsor, Ont., is reported desirous of having a fourth race track. The Devonshire track is about ready to open.

Save Every Drop.

GAS "FOUR-BITS;" DON'T WASTE IT.

ARIZONA FIELD MANAGER HAS EYE ON "GAUGE."

Incidentally He Proves that He Can Run Big Car on Ordinary Roads and Get Eighteen Miles to the Gallon—"Necessity is the Mother of Invention" in this Case.

By attaching a half-gallon gasoline tank to the right side of his windshield, equipped with a glass gauge, which feeds directly into the carburetor, Frank F. Woodward, Chalmers field manager for Greer-Robbins company, believes he has solved the problem of proving the gasoline economy of that car.

When demonstrating his car, Woodward calls attention to the nine marks on the gauge glass, each one of which represents a mile, the lowering of the gasoline in the glass indicating consumption by the mile.

Woodward's territory is Arizona, where fuel is frequently as high as 50 cents a gallon and fuel economy cuts considerable figure in making a motor car sale. Using this device, Woodward states that he is able to prove to anybody that his car will easily travel eighteen miles an hour on any average road. By extremely careful driving, he says, he can make a gallon go further than that.

"One result of using this arrangement is the fact that I have been taught gasoline economy myself," remarked Woodward. "When a fellow sees the gas falling in his gauge, he is reminded that he is spending money. By keeping accurate data, I have found that I am using less gasoline from my regular supply than I ever did. In something over 20,000 miles, now, I have averaged in excess of fifteen miles to the gallon. I believe, now, that I can increase that to seventeen, at least, under all sorts of conditions. The average road can be negotiated at the rate of eighteen miles to the gallon and I can prove it on my own car."

ARGENTINA IS THE BEST BUYER.

Brazil will one day be a great buyer of U.S.A. cars; it may be a greater buyer than Argentina, but for the present the reverse holds good. Last year we exported 4444 automobiles to Argentina and only 253 to Brazil. These figures do not represent the correct purchasing ratio between the two countries.

WATCH THE SIGNS

They Give Momentous Meaning to the

HUDSON SUPER-SIX

Don't make the mistake of under-rating this Super-Six invention. It is not one of the passing sensations. It is not one of those claims to motor supremacy which yields in a year to another. Learn the realities of it. Mark what its records mean. There is plenty of evidence now to convince you that it cannot be superseded.

An 80 Per Cent Advance

Here is a motor—a standard light Six—which creates about 84 horsepower.

In our best former types that size at limit delivered about 42 horsepower.

Thus half the power was lost in vibration, in the best motor we knew up to this one.

The Super-Six, in the same size, delivers full 76 horsepower.

It has increased motor efficiency by 80 per cent, by lessening vibration. Thus it comes within 10 per cent of an absolutely frictionless motor.

In a perfect motor there would be no vibration. But that is impossible. It is not likely that anyone will ever get closer than that 10 per cent.

Look facts in the face.

In choosing a car for years to come, don't minimize the Super-Six advantage.

You may not care for the speed it makes. You may not need its power. You will rarely, it is true, utilize half its capacity. But it is good for a motor to be always undertaxed.

Why buy a fine car without the finest motor? The Super-Six means smoothness. It means vast reserve capacity. It means almost doubled endurance. It means pride in your car. You surely cannot think it wise to sacrifice such things.

All Promises Came True

The Super-Six, in official tests, has outperformed all other types of stock cars. In speed, in endurance, in hill-climbing—in flexibility and quick pick-up—it has proved itself supreme.

Now there are 22,000 owners who find themselves the masters of the road.

In beauty, quality and luxury there is no way known to excel this car. So it marks, in our opinion, about the apex in a high-grade motor car.

We are preparing to build the same model indefinitely. Parts and material are here or ordered for 27,000 more.

Consider these things when you buy a car to keep. The gap between the Super-Six and others is widening month by month. The lack of the Super-Six motor in time will seem a vital lack.

The Super-Six output has quadrupled since April. Men no longer wait months for delivery. So there exists no reason nowadays for not getting the car you want.

OVER MT. WILSON ON HIGH, AT NIGHT.

THE Mt. Wilson toll road is generally quite slippery after a rain, even though it be several days after a rain, also at night it is very dark. Granted, the moon can disperse some of the gloom on the high corners and over some of the humps, but in the canyons and in the fog the moon counts for very little, when it comes to lighting up affairs at large.

However, be that as it may, the "Chevrolet Wolf," the little four-ninety model, broke its own stock car record up Mt. Wilson last Monday night, when Wild Pete Escahrdes went up the nine and one-half miles of twisting, slippery road in thirty-five minutes flat, thereby clipping one minute from the record made last month by Fred Aubert in the same car, when he made the grade, sealed in high gear, in thirty-six minutes flat.

OUT OF LUCK.

Aubert was to have driven this run, but in a practice spin up the mountain the day before, he skidded on a wet and dangerous turn and came out of the struggle with a twisted tendon in his back, so was forced to call for a volunteer. Everybody connected with the company wanted a chance to whirl up the hill, but the lot fell to Pete because he is known and counted as the wildest of the lot, and yet one of those drivers born under a lucky star. Escahrdes is not a driver by profession, but is the leading salesman on the force.

After he had found out that it was up to him to hike the "Wolf" over the hump, he hustled out in the morning and spent all day riding up and down the hill in one of the four-ninety demonstrators. By six in the evening he claimed to have a smattering knowledge of the 120 turns and switch-backs, which clutter up the road.

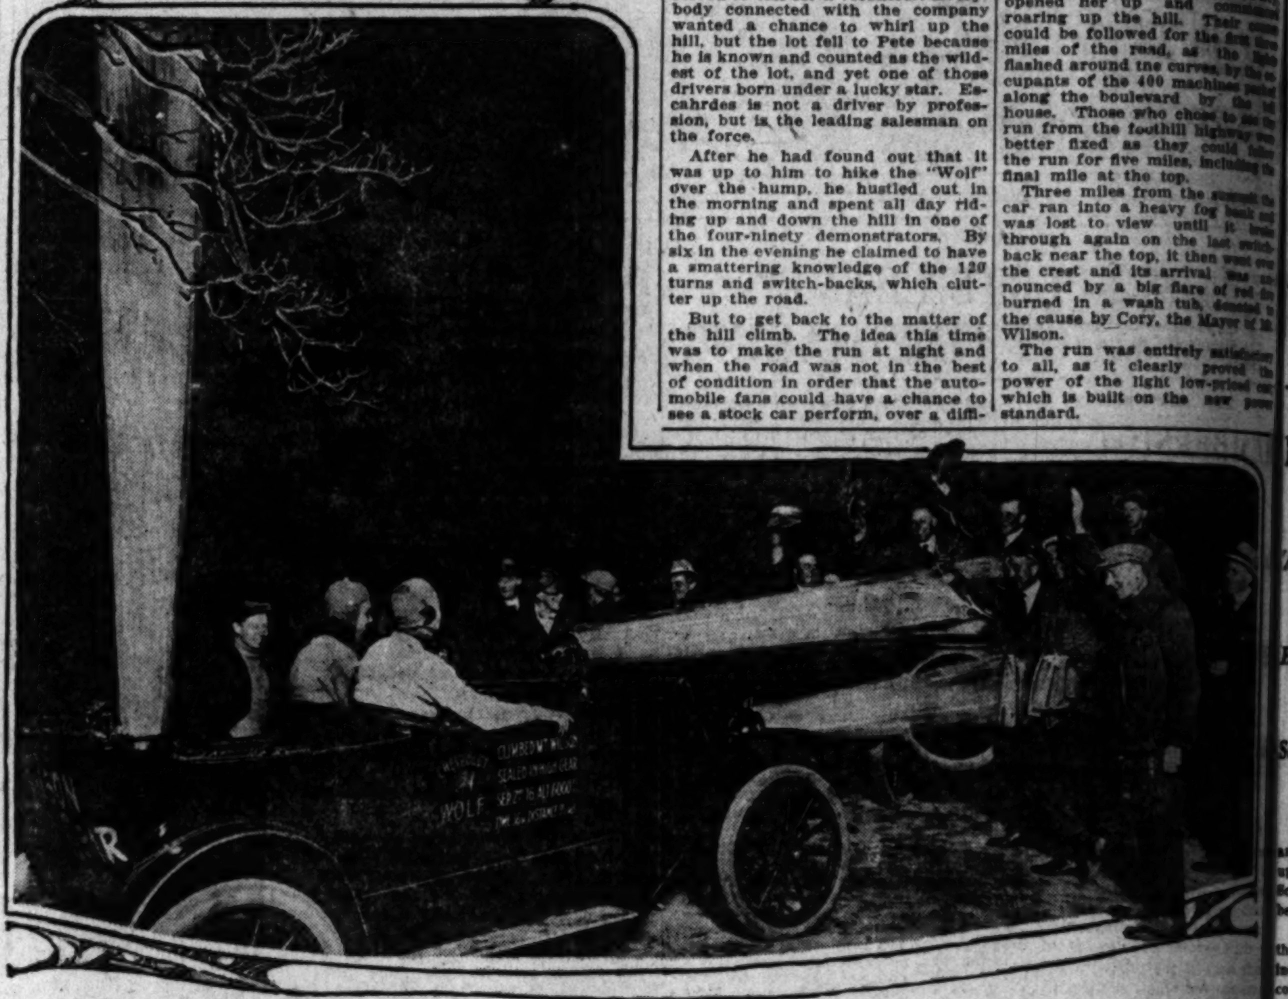
But to get back to the matter of the hill climb. The idea this time was to make the run at night and when the road was not in the best of condition in order that the automobile fans could have a chance to see a stock car perform, over a difficult road. The car was lighted with a battery of five spotlights besides its headlights and made quite a flash on going up the hill.

After the officials, headed by [illegible] Cromwell, chief timer, in the care of Manager Bolton, had been reported safe at the top and nicely settled before the fire in the hotel, Owen Bird was sent away to clear the road. He was given a twenty-minute start, then the "Wolf" got under way.

Pete and his riding partner, [illegible], opened her up and commenced roaring up the hill. Their course could be followed for the first three miles of the road, as the lights flashed around the curves, by the occupants of the 400 machines parked along the boulevard by the toll house. Those who chose to see the run from the foothill highway were better fixed as they could follow the run for five miles, including the final mile at the top.

Three miles from the summit the car ran into a heavy fog bank and was lost to view until it broke through again on the last switch-back near the top, it then went over the crest and its arrival was announced by a big flare of red fire burned in a wash tub, donated to the cause by Cory, the Mayor of Mt. Wilson.

The run was entirely satisfactory to all, as it clearly proved the power of the light low-priced car which is built on the new power standard.



Another stunt pulled on poor old Mt. Wilson.

Time-honored peak is rudely awakened in the dead of night by a roaring Chevrolet car which made the steep climb in record-smashing time. Brightly illuminated by electric lights so that spectators all over the valley could watch its progress, the Chevrolet started out on the 9½ miles of twists and turns and successfully reached the top, clipping a minute from its previous daylight record.

TOURING INFORMATION.

THE small detour around bridge construction work this side of Camarillo on the San Francisco coast route is in very good shape at this writing, no difficulty encountered whatsoever. Leaving the pavement at a point two and one-half miles west of Camarillo it is advisable to follow temporary signs taking right hand road and continuing northwest to the Santa Clara River road; turn right at this point and continue two miles to the Saticoy bridge—this road is graveled and in excellent condition. It is necessary to cross in the river bed at this point as bridge construction work is going on; in crossing it is necessary to ford the river proper the water being about nine inches deep and the river thirty feet wide with a good bottom. From Saticoy via the old Telegraph Road to Ventura conditions are excellent. North of Santa Barbara the Gaviota Pass is advisable for north-bound travel. A few days of sunshine and dry weather will put Gaviota Pass in fair condition—it is a trifle muddy due to recent rains at the present time. North of San Miguel road conditions are questionable on account of the recent rains. Very little travel is using the coast route at the present time. It is advisable for north-bound travel to use the inland route until further notice.

San Francisco Inland Route—Road conditions between Los Angeles and Bakersfield are good with the exception of about three miles in the Castaic Bottom—just before reaching the Ridge route. The Ridge route itself, is in good condition. North of Delano it is advisable to follow through Tipton and Turale into Visalia. From Visalia pavement is complete through Goshen to within a short distance of Kingsburg—here a bridge is out over the Kings River and a detour over fair dirt road is necessary into Kingsburg. Pavement is complete from Kingsburg into Oakland with the exception of a stretch from the county line west of Tracey to the overhead bridge west of Altamont.

San Diego Coast Route—We advise travel to continue via the usual route—East Seventh street, Stephenson avenue and the Whittier boulevard—passing through Whittier, Fullerton and Anaheim. It is advisable to turn right on Center street in Anaheim and follow the Garden Grove signs—coming into Santa Ana on Fifth street thence over the usual coast route through Tustin, Irvine and Capistrano to the river crossing over the Santa Margarita River in the vicinity of San Onofre—here a small detour is necessary easily made although a trifle rough. Other than this pavement is complete to the summit of the Torrey Pines grade thence excellent dirt road (when dry) will be had through La Jolla and Ocean Beach into San Diego. It is advisable to get in touch with the Automobile Club of Southern California, or its branch offices regarding conditions over this route, during or after rains.

San Diego Inland Route—It is advisable upon leaving Ontario to continue due east follow temporary signs—crossing the P. E. tracks within a short distance east of the center of town, at which point temporary signs will be found directing travel south to the Riverside-[illegible]ville road. Two miles of very rough road is had before reaching the highway. From this point pavement is complete through Riverside, Perris and Elsinore to the San Diego county line with the exception of a stretch of dirt road through the town of Elsinore. From the county line into San Diego fair dirt road is had.

San Diego to Imperial—Road conditions as a whole over this route are good although some rough stretches will be encountered between San Diego and Campo.

Midland Trail—Los Angeles to Ely—via Bouquet Canyon, Mohave, Owens River Valley, Big Pine thence through Goldfield and Tonopah to Ely, cars are coming through experiencing very little difficulty.

National Old Trails Highway—Conditions over this route are as follows: Los Angeles to Ludlow, good; Ludlow to Needles, fair, some rough stretches. It is advisable to go to [illegible] Oatman from Needles to [illegible] as the route via Yucca is in very bad condition. Seligman and vicinity, conditions fair. Flagstaff, muddy places due to recent rains, slow going through. Holbrook and vicinity, roads in good condition, threatening rain. Holbrook to Magdalena, muddy in some sections, drying fast, no point impassable. Magdalena and vicinity, rain, roads muddy in places. Roads in the vicinity of Santa Fe, N. M., are good from that point into Kansas City without great trouble.

Bouquet Canyon—Is now in fair good condition.

Idyllwild—Open and in fair condition via Beaumont—road from Hemet is only in fair condition.

Big Bear Valley—Most advisable route via Victorville—Snyder canyon road closed on account of [illegible] Crest route (Waterman canyon) open but on account of rough conditions and numerous cross-[illegible] calls for slow driving. We do not advise this latter route at the present time.

Camp Baldy Road—Open and in fair condition.

Glen Ranch via Lytle Creek Canyon—Although a trifle washed is in good condition.

Brea Canyon—Not advisable on account of repair work being done.

Ocean to Ocean Highway—[illegible] Beaumont. Route via San Timoteo canyon and also via Yucaipa Valley in good condition.

Forest Home—Road is in good condition.

STANDARD SIGNS FOR BAD TURNS.

A suggested standard form of danger sign for a positively dangerous turn or bridge or railroad crossing is a large circle painted black and white with the letter D showing prominently in center.

The circle is elected because it is the most potential form of sign. It appeals more to the eye than the square or the diamond or the triangle. It should be painted black and white because they form an excellent color combination for daylight and by far the best contrast for night use. Red may be a better color by day, but it shows black by night. Black and white are the best colors for the dark.

AUTOS HELD UP BY HEAVY SNOW.

[DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MERCED, Oct. 14.—According to word from Yosemite National Park today all the government rangers stationed in the Tuolumne Meadows section were called in this week leaving that vast Sierra district deserted except for one caretaker at Lake Tenaya Lodge. Heavy snow at Lake Tenaya is holding three automobiles, which cannot be brought out until a warm spell melts the drifts.

Distributor Vim Delivery Cars.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Sir:-

Daily delivery service from Los Angeles Department Stores to all cities within a radius of 50 miles was unheard of a few months ago. Now it is an established fact.

This afternoon Milady shops in the city. Tomorrow morning her parcels are delivered to her door. That is the service we are giving.

The prime requisite for success in such a delivery service is absolute regularity and dependability. The stores we serve promise prompt delivery to their customers, knowing that we deliver the goods, not excuses.

There's where the Vim comes in. Our Vim hasn't missed a trip since February. Day and night, good weather and bad, it pounds over the roads, frequently overloaded shamefully.

Our mileage on country roads is 18 miles to the gallon of distillate. A gallon of oil gives us more than 300 miles. Front tires run about 12,000 miles. Rear tires only last 8,000 due to the big overloads we carry.

We wont tell you, Mr. Arnold that we have no mechanical trouble. Distillate pits any valves and our driver ruined a universal joint by neglecting to grease it, but we will say that the troubles have been slight and have been our own fault, not the Vim's.

Respectfully yours,

Successful Campaign will Mean Much to Motorists.

Motorists who "believe in signs" are signifying that belief by signing up with the Automobile Club of Southern California in its big membership campaign now being waged.

A vital need for the extension of the club's system of sign posts to include some of the most important commercial and scenic routes in the West has led the directors and officials of that organization to redouble their efforts to materially increase the size of the club.

NEED SUPPORT.

That without a more general support of the club's work throughout Southern California, the signposting system cannot be all that has been hoped for it, and that some important signposting steps would have to be postponed, is the statement made yesterday by Secretary Standish L. Mitchell.

It is pointed out that where the motorist who made a 200-mile trip a few years ago was considered a hero, now it is considered only a jaunt, and nothing is thought of a 1000 or 1500-mile journey.

But these 1000-mile trips are leading Southern California automobilists far into mountain recesses and far northward through the Owen's River Valley into the recently opened lake countries. A continual demand is being made upon the Automobile Club for sign posts extending along these new lanes of travel, according to Secretary Mitchell, and in order to meet these new demands it has become necessary to start the membership campaign.

APPRECIATED.

Club officials state that the work of the organization is often more appreciated by Easterners and in the Eastern States, because outsiders see what is being done here—things which are not even thought of in the majority of Eastern territory. Local motorists, it is said, are too prone just to accept the club's gifts to the public, and shift the responsibility of paying for them onto the shoulders of those who are members in good standing.

That the benefits received from the Automobile Club greatly exceed the small amount called for in club dues each year is the general statement of all members. There are members of the organization, stated Secretary Mitchell yesterday, who have been paying their dues, and thus providing signs for others to use, for more than ten years. It is these public-minded automobile owners who have made possible the good roads of California, and who have given the great signposting system of this part of the State to the world.

RESULTS.

If the membership campaign is successful, it is planned to signpost through Mono and Inyo counties up to Lake Tahoe and then carry the system over the Kit Carson and Bret Harte territory as far as is practicable. This will also include the Owens River Valley.

The membership campaign of the club has been under way just one week tomorrow, pointed out Secretary Mitchell, and while there has been a marked increase in the membership during this time, it is hoped by all officials that the following three weeks will see even greater interest and activity on the part of present members in securing new "recruits" among their friends.

RAH FOR 'EM.

One motorist appeared at club headquarters just as the doors were opening on the first day of the campaign and stated that he had read of what the club had done for Southern California in the past, and that now he wanted to become a member so as to help with the big work club officials are planning for the future.

All branch offices of the organization are carrying on the campaign in the various districts of the southern part of the State.

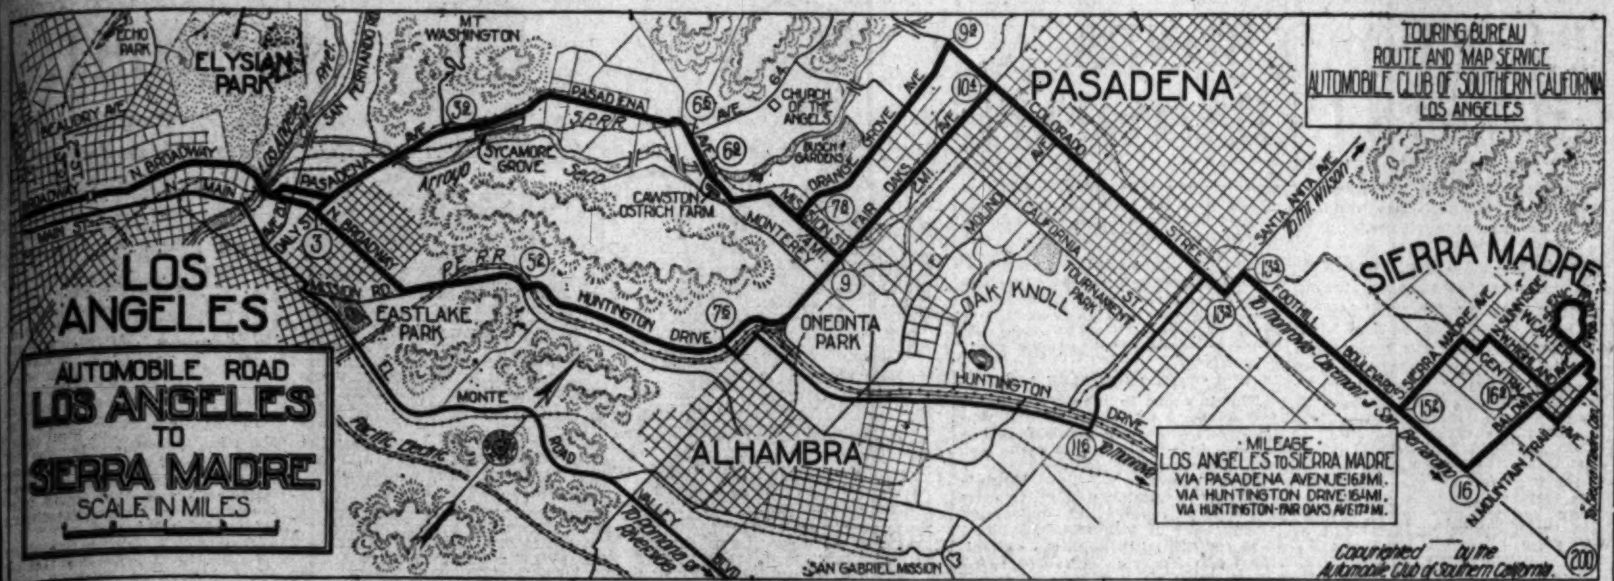
A mixture of ordinary washing soda in which four ounces is used to the gallon of water will do the work properly.



An "expensive" tour—but not for the motorists.

tour which includes some of California's most "expensive" scenery is offered here to motorists today by the Automobile Club of Southern California. Following the Auto Club map, the motorist is given the choice of several routes into Pasadena. Go either via North Broadway and Pasadena avenue, turning to the left at Avenue 64 and continuing across the Colorado-street bridge and thence down Colorado street to Santa Anita avenue, where turn left to Foothill boulevard and take this to Sierra Madre and the Scenic Point road. Returning the motorist is offered a choice of any one of the routes shown clearly on the map. Side trips may be made to the Busch Gardens, to Mt. Wilson and other places of interest. The distance to Sierra Madre by any route is approximately sixteen miles, and the round trip can easily be made on a Sunday afternoon. The roads are paved and there are no grades.

AMBITIONS OF THE AUTO CLUB.

Signposting of a route through the Owens River Valley, Mono and Inyo counties to Lake Tahoe and its surrounding regions.

Open more touring bureaus throughout Southern California for the use of local and visiting motorists.

Enlarge the entire signposting system of Southern California.

Continue the campaign to attract thousands of automobilists from all over the world for all-the-year-round touring.

To make even more efficient than at present the means of gathering touring information from all parts of the United States.

To distribute more than 380,000 maps annually.

To answer more than 50,784 toruing information inquiries during the year.

To secure legislation which is universally fair to all motorists.

To enlarge the theft bureau for the recovering of stolen automobiles and capturing motor-car thieves.

To continue to be able to say that the Automobile Club of Southern California is the most active and efficient organization of its kind in the world.

UNIFORM LAWS FOR NIGHT DRIVING

The necessity of a uniform law for the regulation of headlights on motor cars is being recognized more and more, and the American Automobile Association is urging a bill to meet the need of a uniform law and uniform enforcement in all States and to thus remedy the most dangerous condition of night driving, the use of high-power lights.

Of the few States regulating headlights, no two have identical rules. Visitors from one State to another have as much annoyance from this difference in law as from the lack of recognition some States give license plates from neighboring States. Other States than these already providing for regulations are expected to pass headlight laws at their next legislative meetings, owing to the growing list of accidents from headlight glare. At the next meeting of the legislative board the association will consider the drafting of a law acceptable to the States as a uniform solution of the problem.

Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Jersey lead in the regulation of headlight glare. New Jersey permits no white light, the direct rays of which shall project higher than four and one-half feet from the road; if higher than this, all dazzle or glare must be eliminated. Massachusetts puts the distance above the ground at forty-two inches; drivers of low-hung runabouts are thus better protected than in New Jersey, which permits a height of fifty-four inches.

It is claimed that in the last year the Anderson Electric Car Company has increased its production 140 per cent., and the plans for the coming season call for another large increase. G. D. Atlantic Highway.

BIG BORDER-TO-BORDER ROUTE IS COMPLETED.

FIRST to be completed of the big border-to-border routes will be the Atlantic highway, according to figures recently compiled by the touring formation board of the American Automobile Association. East of Portland, Me., and from Quebec, Can., to Miami, Fla., there is now less than 100 miles of unfinished highway, in this distance of more than 2000 miles. Of this 100 miles there has been about eleven in Virginia, divided into three sections, that was vicious, with none of the balance particularly bad.

The Washington (D. C.) bureau of the touring board now reports that a new road has been completed for one of these sections; a second section is now being rapidly put into good traveling condition and the contract let and work started on the third section, which was the worst of all, being that section known all over the country as the Choppawamsic swamp. In the meantime the "swamp" road has been put into passable condition and is accepting several score of cars per day. State Road Commissioner Coleman of Virginia has given the bad stretches his personal supervision.

The Atlantic highway, being the main artery for the north and south travel in the fall and spring, it was used by several thousand tourists during the past season who tempted fate in the trip through the "swamp," many of them being pulled through. All indications show that this season will see an enormous increase in the travel, particularly as the information is rapidly spreading that the trip south from Washington has been robbed of its terrors.

Another dreaded section was the Ogeechee swamp, south of Savannah. This now has a fine treated macadam highway for its entire eight miles. For the Florida east coast trip there is a shell and brick highway except for four miles, from Jacksonville to Miami. Florida now has a State highway department, and Chairman Scott and Commissioner Cocke predict that with numerous county bond issues, the State soon will have a connected road system.

The Syracuse University football team will play against the champion eleven of the Pacific Coast next New Year's Day as a feature of the Rose Festival at Pasadena, Cal.

We Need the Roads—Let's Have 'Em

FAILURE TO PASS ROAD BONDS LEAVES HIGHWAYS IN BAD SHAPE

AS THE time approaches when motorists must decide whether or not they will vote for the completion of the State highways by passing the $15,000,000 highway bonds the Automobile Club of Southern California and other interested organizations are redoubling their campaign efforts.

URGENT.

Automobile Club officials have issued hundreds of placards urging everyone to consider disaster attendant upon the failure to pass these bonds and so leave the State highways in their present incomplete condition. These placards are to be placed in conspicuous locations by branch office representatives throughout Southern California.

Thousands of "stickers," urging a favorable vote, are appearing upon the windshields of Automobile Club members, and all official cars of the organization are plastered with these, spreading the word as they go.

COMPETITION.

California's only rival in the attraction of winter motorists has awakened to the necessity of good roads, and has provided millions of dollars worth of highways. This is Florida. Until recently Florida has been known as a State with hopelessly poor roads. Now, almost suddenly, it has blossomed out with highways of the first class.

Florida is within "calling" distance of 1,000,000 motorists, and many of these are potential visitors to California. If they can find better touring near home, say Automobile Club officials, then they will take it. In other words, Florida instead of California will receive the greatest attention from automobile owners in the future if the highways in this State are not completed.

WIDE AWAKE.

The States leading north and northwest from Florida are now waking up to the necessity for good roads, and doing their part in building trunk lines. This contributes to the ascendency of Florida.

Before the roads in a certain county of Virginia had been improved the largest amount of farm and forest products shipped out of that country in any one year was 49,000 tons. In 1909 the amount of dairy products shipped was 115,000 tons. But during that year forty miles of road were improved, at an expense of $100,000.

In 1911, two years after this improvement, 71,000 tons of farm and forest products and 273,000 pounds of dairy products were shipped. The increase was 45 to 140 per cent., respectively.

THE INCREASE.

The increase in wheat shipments was 59 per cent. over the best record made before the roads were improved, in tobacco 31 per cent., and all others 48 per cent.

It was found by the Virginia Highway Commission that farmers were saved $41,600 in marketing 65,000 tons of products.

In California, through the agricultural districts, the value of good roads annually to ranchers and dairymen has been estimated by experts at many millions of dollars. But over and above this, the State profits tremendously by the coming of thousands of motoring visitors, attracted by the lure of the highway.

ONLY WAY.

Representatives of the Automobile Club and those in charge of the club's touring bureau estimate the annual expenditures of motoring visitors in this State at approximately $37,000,000. This figure will increase annually as the State highways are completed, and the news spreads throughout the East. It is a plum well worth the picking.

Continuous paved trunk lines, with completed paved laterals, will be an impossibility if the bonds do not carry in November, and the present unfinished highways would result. A little less than half of the amount originally planned is asked for.

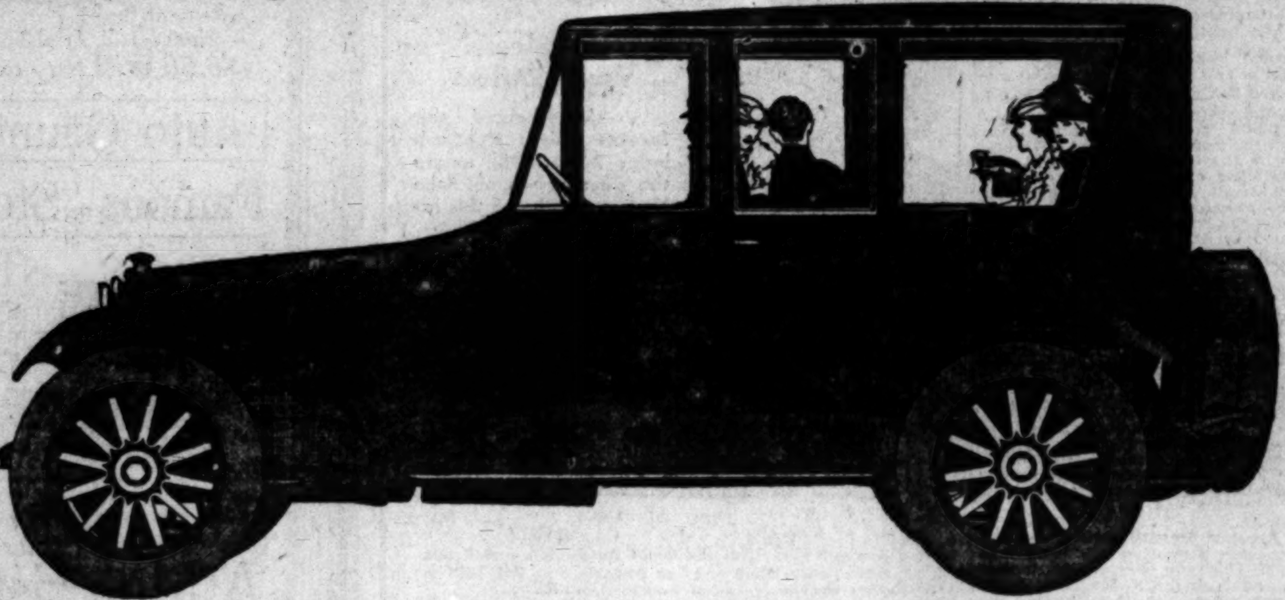
STATISTICS SHOW GASOLINE INCREASE.

Considerable interest attaches to statistics compiled by the United States Geological Survey showing that the year 1915 was one of decided expansion for the casing-head gasoline industry. The quantity of raw gasoline extracted from natural gas and sold in that year amounted to 65,364,665 gallons, a gain of 22,712,033 gallons, or 53 per cent., over the quantity marketed in 1914.

The average price received for the unblended product at the sources of production was 7.9 cents a gallon, and the market value of the entire output was $5,150,823, a gain of 0.6 per cent. in average unit price and of $2,044,914, or 66 per cent., in total market value, compared with 1914.

The volume of natural gas utilized in the manufacture of this quantity of gasoline, exclusive of that recovered as drips from gas mains, is estimated at more than 24,000,000,000 cubic feet, and the average recovery of gasoline per thousand feet was 2.57 gallons.

The number of plants for the manufacture of gasoline from natural gas increased from 386 at the beginning of 1915 to 414 at the end of the year, a gain of only 7 per cent., but the combined daily capacity of the plants increased from 179,352 to 232,336 gallons, about 30 per cent.



Revealing Today the Chalmers Sedan
Interior by Lady Duff-Gordon

Quality First

We are revealing today the newest creations in Chalmers cars. The body is different from anything you have seen.

And the lines are different, too—very refreshing, like a breath of crisp autumn air drawn deep into the lungs.

But your first glance inside—that is the revelation. For the interior is by that renowned artiste, Lady Duff-Gordon, the world's most eminent authority on woman's fashions. She has applied her knowledge most wonderfully in choosing materials and interior fittings for this great Chalmers car.

Her Ladyship calls this Sedan "Comfortable and in excellent taste."

The body strikes a new note. It is a compromise between a limousine and an open touring car. A limousine in winter. A touring car in summer.

You simply remove the windows with their supporting frame, put them away in a special compartment back of the rear seat. It's but a few moments work and the transformation is complete.

The top, please note, is a permanent roof, built and trimmed as a part of the body—not one of the so-called detachable type tops.

We could go on at length—Bedford cloth upholstery, silk curtain at rear window, reading lamps, a dome lamp, which lights when the door is open. But we prefer to tell you all this and far more when you see the car.

The price we are proud of. We didn't know it could be done.

MOTOR CONCERN CHANGES HANDS

Clarence A. English to Retire from Auto Business.

Leach Motor Co. to Handle King and Dort Cars.

Suddenness of the Transfer Causes Sensation.

Surprising in its suddenness came the announcement that the English Motor Car Company of this city has changed hands. Mr. M. A. Leach will have complete charge of the concern after today and it will be known as the Leach Motor Company. Clarence A. English is retiring from the automobile business and the King agency for Southern California, as well as the Dort line of machines, will be handled by the new Leach Motor Company.

"The deal was quite a surprise even to myself," said Mr. English yesterday. "I met Mr. Leach on a recent trip to Chicago and we had a little talk on the matter of automobile agencies and conditions in Southern California. I don't know whether either of us expected anything to come of the matter.

"When I returned, however, a few days ago, Mr. Leach was already here and the transfer was made inside of a very few hours. There are a number of outside interests which will take up my time and I do not expect to re-enter the automobile business."

Mr. Leach, who was formerly western sales manager for the Dort Motor Car Company, is enthusiastic over the local automobile outlook and will immediately take charge of the complete English Motor Car Company plant.

"The King car has become tremendously popular in Southern California," said Mr. Leach, "and we expect to continually increase the sale of King cars during the next year. We are taking over a wonderfully well organized plant and conditions are ideal for us to keep up the good work and increase as we go along. The Leach Motor Company in addition to the King, will handle the Dort line of machines for Southern California and Arizona. The Dort is a popular-priced pleasure car which has met with unprecedented success in other parts of the country and we hope to make it equally as popular in Southern California."

Associated with Mr. Leach as president of the Leach Motor Company is L. S. Skelton, owner of the Okmulgee Glass Company, the largest independent glass works in the country. T. J. Duncan, a well-known local automobile man, will handle the service end of the Leach business. Service in the opinion of Messrs. Leach and Skelton is the first commandment in the selling of motor cars and it is with a view of developing a service department which will be a model of its kind that Mr. Duncan's services have been retained.

The coming of the Dort line to the south is causing not a little interest among dealers and motorists. It has been deeply regretted by the manufacturers, the Dort Motor Car Company, that their product was not on sale in Southern California and Arizona prior to this time. The [illegible] ing policy of the Dort factory of only making such connections with distributors, as its production permitted supplying sufficient cars to their dealers requirements, and the inability to gauge the tremendous demand for Dort cars is responsible for this condition. A fourfold increase in factory production now allows the Dort company to [illegible] cars on the Pacific Coast.

RACING DRIVER IS NOW WITH HANSHUE.

W. E. Taylor, one of the best known motor car salesmen in this city, has joined the Harris M. Hanshue organization in the distribution of Apperson automobiles. Taylor has been in the selling game for several years. In addition to being a salesman of ability he also has acquired a reputation in racing circles. He won fourth place in the International Grand Prix contest two years ago.

In preparation for the automobile show, Hanshue is getting a shipment of cars direct from the factory at Kokomo, Ind. which are especially finished for the purpose. He is not divulging what they will be, but declares they will excel anything heretofore attempted by Apperson in the way of equipment. This company has recently begun a departure from the old custom of supplying all models in only one color, and the last lot of cars received here were finished in old ivory, leather brown and other fancy colors.

BATTERY SECRETS EASY TO SOLVE.

A. S. Hamilton of the L. A. [illegible] tion Works, in speaking of battery troubles, says that a great deal of the trouble in storage battery is due to shortage, which, in turn, is due to the fact that the plates in the battery are not kept apart.

"The positive and negative plates of the battery are arranged alternately, first, third and fifth being negative, second, fourth and sixth being positive. For efficiency and sake of space they are placed close together, but they must never touch each other, for if they do the battery cell and possibly the battery is ruined, for this is a short circuit, and anything placed between the plates as a separator must be porous, almost spongy and [illegible]

In the Vesta battery an indestructable isolator is employed that keeps these plates locked apart, thus relieving the wood mat of all strain."

BUSINESS SHOWS LARGE INCREASE.

The California Sales Company, dealers in Stewart-Warner products, reports a large increase in business during the past few months and a large floor space has been [illegible] at times to handle the business which came in.

In addition to the regular line of work this company has been making a special exchange offer on speedometers which has added greatly to the volume of business.

Mail orders have played an important part in this volume of business and the shipping department has been kept busy shipping Stewart-Warners to customers who have sent their old speedometers in for exchange.

OTOR CONCERN CHANGES HANDS

larence A. English to Retire from Auto Business.

each Motor Co. to Handle King and Dort Cars.

uddenness of the Transfer Causes Sensation.

Surprising in its suddenness comes e announcement that the English otor Car Company of this city has anged hands. Mr. M. A. Leach ll have complete charge of the ncern after today and it will be own as the Leach Motor Company. arence A. English is retiring from e automobile business and the ing agency for Southern Califor- a, as well as the Dort line of ma- ines, will be handled by the new ach Motor Company.

"The deal was quite a surprise, en to myself," said Mr. English sterday. "I met Mr. Leach on a cent trip to Chicago and we had little talk on the matter of auto- obile agencies and conditions in uthern California. I don't know nether either of us expected any- ing to come of the matter.

"When I returned, however, just few days ago, Mr. Leach was al- ady here and the transfer was ade inside of a very few hours. ere are a number of outside in- rests which will take up my time d I do not expect to re-enter the tomobile business."

Mr. Leach, who was formerly stern sales manager for the Dort otor Car Company, is enthusiastic er the local automobile outlook d will immediately take charge of e complete English Motor Car mpany plant.

"The King car has become tre- endously popular in Southern Cal- ornia," said Mr. Leach, "and we pect to continually increase the le of King cars during the next ar. We are taking over a wonder- lly well organized plant and condi- ns are ideal for us to keep up the od work and increase as we go ong. The Leach Motor Company, addition to the King, will handle Dort line of machines for South- California and Arizona. This a popular-priced pleasure car ich has met with unprecedented ccess in other parts of the country d we hope to make it equally as pular in Southern California."

Associated with Mr. Leach as esident of the Leach Motor Com- ny is L. S. Skelton, owner of the mulgee Glass Company, the larg- independent glass works in the untry. T. J. Duncan, a well- own local automobile man, will ndle the service end of the Leach siness. Service in the opinion of essrs. Leach and Skelton is the big mmandment in the selling of mo- r cars and it is with a view of veloping a service department ich will be a model of its kind t Mr. Duncan's services have been ained.

The coming of the Dort line to e south is causing not a little in- rest among dealers and motorists. has been deeply regretted by the anufacturers, the Dort Motor r Company, that their production sale in Southern California and izona prior to this time. The sell- policy of the Dort factory is ly making such connections with tributors, as its production per- tted supplying sufficient cars for eir dealers requirements, and their ability to gauge the tremendous mand for Dort cars is responsible this condition. A fourfold in- ease in factory production now ows the Dort company to offer rs on the Pacific Coast.

SKIDDIN' AROUND ON AUTOMOBILE ROW.

PRACTICALLY every dealer on Auto Row who hasn't moved into permanent headquarters, or started work on a new building with the object in view of having an ideal salesroom and machine shop, is looking forward to the time when he can do so. Long leases are being secured almost daily on Olive, Pico, Grand, Hope or Flower, and it is safe to say a score or more of new buildings will be erected in 1917. Most of the buildings now obtainable are too small, and few are modern from the standpoint of auto dealers, for as the business grows and a pace is set by the larger companies, the small dealers are forced to realize that they, too, must have suitable quarters. Large showrooms with good light, well-furnished offices, and above all, a well-equipped and convenient machine shop and garage, are necessary, and these the dealers will have in the near future. And when one considers the permanency of solid foundation of the automobile business, such buildings appear to offer safe investments.

In order that drivers of automobiles may have a place to purchase all kinds of tires during the day or evening, Sundays and holidays, and have adjustments made direct without waiting to have their tires sent to the branch agency, the Motor Supply Company has adopted this broad policy. "We are open until 9 o'clock every evening, and the doors are never closed on Sundays and holidays," said Samuel Van Rooyen, manager of the company yesterday. "We make tire adjustments direct, and thereby avoid all delay." The company carries practically everything in the accessory line that motorists require.

John A. Ewins, Southern California distributor for the Warner trailers, is rapidly building up a big business. In addition to the trailers, which are made in a variety of styles to fit the needs of everyone, from a camping outfit to a trailer with a capacity of ten tons, Mr. Ewins is pushing the sale of Titan starters for Fords. Because the Titan weighs only fourteen pounds, is simple, positive, out of sight and applied to a machine in a few minutes, Mr. Ewins says it is rapidly making converts among Ford owners.

The searchlight has been called upon by the Aston Motor Car Company to aid in calling the attention of the public to the merits of the Pullman. Agencies have recently been established at Venice, Santa Monica and Ocean Park, and at Venice the exhibit is arranged in such a way that a searchlight is thrown upon it. In view of the fact that the searchlight is used to "reveal" many things at the beach, everyone looks when it is directed at a certain spot for an instant, and in this case light is thrown on the attractive-looking Pullman car.

Charles B. Lewis, member of the Society of Automobile Engineers and the Automobile Club of America, has been engaged as consulting engineer by the Pacific KisselKar branch of Los Angeles. Mr. Lewis will devote his entire time to the KisselKar and Federal trucks, one of his principal duties being to consult with large concerns and figure out plans whereby a big saving can be effected in their delivery and hauling departments. In each instance the firm's needs are considered and a feasible plan outlined whereby an actual saving can be shown by a change in methods.

All the salesmen at Smith Bros. are enthusiastic over their progress in the big national contest to determine who will sell the most Paige cars in October. John H. A. Campbell, Paige district manager, is working like a beaver to win the handsome, high-grade gold watch which President H. M. Jewett of the Paige factory has offered as a reward to the district manager making the best record in the entire country. The salesmen for Smith Bros. are hopeful of getting in on the big cash prize which will be split up between the five leading salesmen in the United States.

From a one-man shop to a rapidly-growing companay that employs thirty-five people anad orders four carloads of tires at a time, with half a dozen branches established and plans under way for half a dozen more, all within less than a year and a half, is a record set by the Tire Construction Company at Olive and Pico. The company handles first-grade tires, seconds, demonstration tires and reconstructed tires. Two carloads of new Universal tires have just arrived, and two carloads of other makes are on the way. The company now has branches at Santa Ana, Ocean Park, Kingman, Ariz., Needles, Cal., and branches are being opened at Tucson and Phoenix, Ariz. Other branches are to follow. Ed Harris, a member of the company, has just returned from a buying trip to Akron, Ohio.

One man can keep a dozen auto salesmen on the anxious seat, if he goes about it in the right way. Charles Axelson, who conducts a machine shop on North San Fernando street knows how. Mr. Axelson let it be known that he was in the market for a car, and right then and there the fun started. The salesmen arrived in bunches. Demonstrations were numerous. All kinds of tests were made. And finally he reached a decision. Now there isn't any use of mentioning the names of all the cars he tried out, but Ed Franklin, of Hawley, King & Co., distributors of the Oakland, is all smiles, and there is one less Oakland eight in the salesroom than there was a few days ago.

Moving the battery department of the Electric Equipment Company marks one of the important changes in automobiles row. The company has enlarged its battery department and it now occupies a building of its own on Twelfth street between Grand and Olive. Three months ago when the company moved into its present new plant the battery department was enlarged to meet an anticipated increase in business. Business, however came faster than the new plant could handle, and so three months after occupying the new quarters the department was enlarged to just ten times its former size.

Using a color scheme of blue and buff, and reproducing the shield of the Liberty car as a part of the decorations, artists have added the last touch at the headquarters of the Pacific Motor Corporation, No. 1246 South Flower street, in transforming the salesroom into a thing of beauty. An indirect lighting system adds greatly to the attractiveness of the interior, and a room has been provided for the women who visit the salesroom. H. Eckert, Los Angeles manager, is well pleased with the outlook for business.

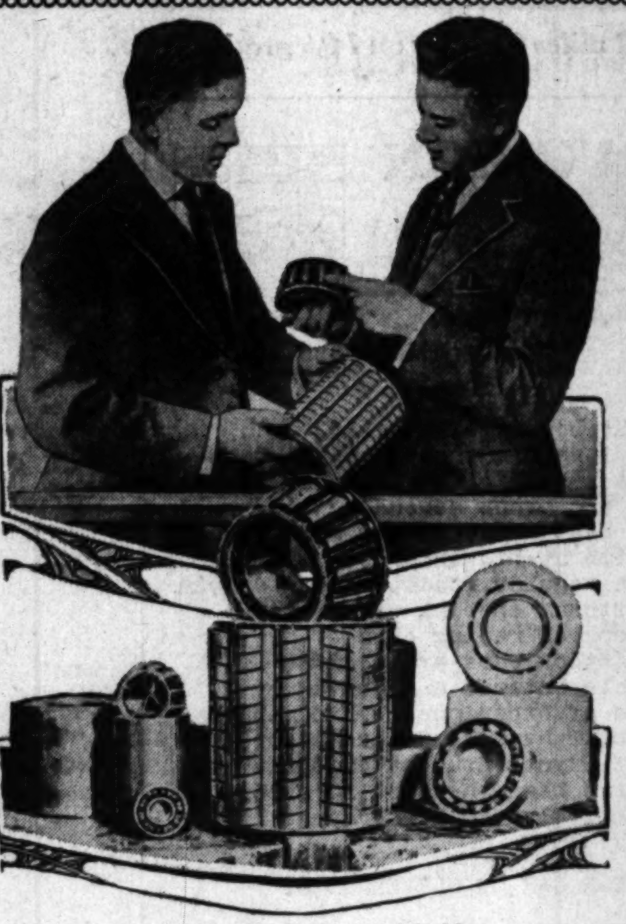
STOCK OF BEARINGS WORTH HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS



Bearings for Every Automobile Here.

D. B. Bevier, western representative of the Bearings Service Company, and J. J. Hanrahan, Los Angeles manager, examining bearings included in a one hundred thousand dollar shipment just recevied in Los Angeles.

WHEN one company puts in a stock of automobile bearings valued at $100,000—well, it's just additional evidence that the automobile world has its eyes upon the Southwest, with Los Angeles as the distributing point worthy of watching.

This isn't the first time that the big manufacturers of the East have shown by their acts that the Southwest is worth watching, but $100,000 worth of bearings is quite a good-sized stock, and every owner of an automobile, and every garage man, and every dealer is interested in the announcement of the Bearings Service Company.

For it is this company that carries the large stock of bearings, and the company is just what its name implies—a service company. All users of Timkin, Hyatt and New Departure bearings are assured that they can obtain any size and style they may want, without delay. No more waiting until an order is sent by telegraph or letter, and the bearings forwarded by express. Merely a call at the company's headquarters is all that's necessary, for the bearings are in stock, and the stock is to be kept complete at all times.

The Bearings Service Company, which has branches now in all large cities, is represented in Los Angeles by J. J. Hanrahan, and D. B. Bevier, western representative of the company, is in charge of all Coast branches. Mr. Hanrahan will have direct supervision of the Los Angeles branch, but Mr. Bevier will be here from time to time, and see that the stock is at all times complete.

NEW DEVICE KEEPS WINDSHIELD CLEAN.

Every driver who has been compelled at times to use his hand or a rag in wiping the windshield during a storm so that his view of the road be not obscured, will probably appreciate a new invention called the Clear View Windshield Cleaner.

The device is attached to the windshield at all times, and a simple "twist of the wrist" moves it from right to left, instantly cleaning off the moisture from both sides of the glass. The device is being manufactured here and handled through agents and garages.

Guess That's Going Some!

EXCEEDS SEVENTY MILES PER HOUR ON GRADE.

OF ALL the tests that cars have been put to, in an effort to demonstrate their speed and power, none has approached the one the H. A. L. twelve, "H. A. Lozier's Latest," was called on to make recently in the Wilkesbarre A.A.A. hill-climbing contest, it is claimed by Mr. Lozier.

In addition to being first in one event, second in two and third in another, the H. A. L. twelve reached a speed of seventy-two miles an hour on a 14 per cent. grade.

Riding at a speed of seventy-two miles an hour on a smooth, wide boulevard is too great a speed for anyone except the racing driver or the daredevil scorcher, and when a car makes that speed on a 14 per cent. grade—well, it seems all but impossible.

But in this case the details of the record are authentic, and it would seem as if the members of the Pearl Motor Car Company, at No. 951 South Flower street, had just cause for rejoicing.

"It has already been demonstrated to the satisfaction of those who have a spin in the car that it rides so easily the passengers feel they are gliding along in an aeroplane," said Mr. Pearl, "and with the assurance that the H. A. L. stock car can climb hills at seventy-two miles an hour, and defeat expert drivers and their specially-equipped cars, it would seem as if further argument is unnecessary."

A telegram announcing the victory of the H. A. L. twelve was received by the company recently, and there has been nothing but joy in the camp ever since.

TEN THOUSAND CARS A MONTH NEXT YEAR'S PLAN

AN OUTPUT of 10,000 Studebaker cars a month, or 120,000 for the year 1917, will be made possible as a result of action recently taken by the Studebaker directors authorizing the construction of new building and addition of equipment, the total estimated expenditure of which will be $1,500,000, according to word received by the local branch.

Work on the new plant extensions at both Detroit and South Bend is under way. The South Bend additions will include a large modern foundry, 1100 feet long by 150 feet wide, with four cupolas and 250 tons daily melting capacity. Among the Detroit additions will be a 35 per cent. increase in the forge shop capacity through the purchase of a battery of steam hammers, together with all necessary trimming presses, forging and heat treating furnaces, involving an investment of more than $150,000.

These plant extensions of the Studebaker are made necessary because of the development and growth of its business during the past five years. In 1911 sales amounted to $28,487,847 and included 22,555 automobiles. In 1915 the sales had increased to $56,539,006, and included 46,845 automobiles. In the current year sales will approximate $70,000,000, and the number of automobiles 75,000.

EIGHT-IN-ONE TRUCK IS WINNING FARMERS' PRAISE

THE all-weather type of pleasure car, with its variations, has been occupying the limelight for some time, but now comes the very latest and it does not concern a pleasure car, either. It is the new eight-in-one convertible body for use on the Smith Form-a-truck attachment for Ford cars. Although the "eight-in-one" feature may somewhat resemble in name a brand of shoe polish and rightly stands accused of being a hyphenate, W. O. Gates, the Smith Form-a-truck distributor, says that "aside from that, it is all right."

The new body, which was designed especially for use in connection with the Smith attachment for converting a Ford automobile into a one-ton truck, is declared to be the biggest advance that has ever been made to solve the problem of miscellaneous hauling. It is made in lengths of ten, ten and one-half and twelve feet. The body was demonstrated for the first time on the Pacific Coast in connection with the Smith Form-a-truck exhibit at the Riverside County Fair.

The uses to which the body may be put are as varied as can be conceived of, Gates says. One arrangement makes it adapted particularly to hauling loose grain and another takes care of sacked grain. Hauling crated fruits or vegetables is easy with the body arranged in a third position. By a manipulation of the sides and end-boards, a flare board body is to be had. Other arrangements make a hog rack body, well ventilated and covered, a basket-rack body, a stock body for horses and cattle, or a regulation rack body.

For the farmer it bids fair to become the most useful vehicle on the place, and they are rapidly giving it their indorsement, it is claimed.

Eastern Man Now Coast Sales Manager.

Already one of the largest motor supply houses in the world, the Chanslor & Lyon Company, is planning further expansion in its network of branches established at different points on the Coast.

A new position, that of Pacific Coast sales manager, has been created, and H. R. Williams, until recently of Indianapolis, has assumed charge of this office with his headquarters located at San Francisco. While on his way to his new post the new sales manager spent several days in Los Angeles. At San Francisco, Williams will meet and confer with P. H. Lyon and Waller Chanslor, to formulate plans for the extension of the firm's business.

Beside the Los Angeles house, the firm has branches in San Francisco, Seattle, Tacoma, Portland, Spokane, Oakland and Fresno. This company was the first to announce the policy of selling exclusively to the wholesale trade and the plan is now being followed in all the company's branches with great success. Although the plan has been in operation only six weeks, it is meeting with such satisfactory indorsement from the trade that it has developed much new business.

P. H. Lyon returned yesterday from St. Louis, where he attended the national meeting of the Accessory Jobbers' Association. Following the meeting he visited the headquarters of the accessory manufacturers and closed contracts for a number of exclusive lines, announcement of which will be made later. "Aitken sprang into the lead at the thirty-eighth mile and Rickenbacher assumed second place a little later. Neither driver was headed after this. In all, seven Goodyear-equipped cars lined up for the start. It is interesting to note that none of the tires on these cars was touched during the race, those retiring from the race doing so on account of engine trouble.

"The Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company has been equipping racing cars with tires only a few months. Intensive experimentation, however, has been in progress for some time. But not till it was absolutely certain that they would withstand the terrific speed attained on the fastest speedway of the country were the racing drivers permitted to use them. The success which Goodyear has attained in this field presages the use of Goodyear cord tires by a larger number of racing men in the future.

"Goodyear's remarkable success in the big races this season has caused much speculation as to the construction of these tires. The carcass of the tire used on the race track is standard—made up in the regular way—and is the same as the carcass in Goodyear cords for pleasure cars. The only difference is in the thickness of the tread and the method of curing.

"The race track has served to bring out proof of the qualities that led to the adoption of Goodyear cord tires on such cars as Franklin, Locomobile, Packard, Peerless, White, Haynes, Stutz and McFarlan."

SALESMAN IS HAPPY NOW; "COURTS" ONE, WINS THREE

AS AN example of the influence a satisfied owner of an automobile has upon other members of his family and acquaintances, W. P. Smith, sales manager for the W. T. Armstrong, Inc., distributors in Southern California for the Chandler six line of motor cars, relates the following incident.

About a year ago, August Koch, a well-known business man of the city, was in the market for an automobile. He inspected the various makes on the row and his final choice was a Chandler six touring car. Mr. Koch drove his car constantly and was well satisfied, both with the car and the service rendered by the mechanical department of the Armstrong organization.

Mr. Koch has two brothers, Eugene and Alfred. Both of them had cars when August bought his Chandler. Each had paid a great deal more money for his car than August had. They were interested when the three families planned joint outings, but their cars gave them trouble on the road, whereas the Chandler, driven by August, never failed. He was getting far better mileage on oil, gasoline and tires than they were, too, and that increased their interest in their brother's car.

As a direct consequence, they decided a few days ago they would buy new cars and the selection of each was a Chandler six. They had seen enough of August's car to know what they wanted in advance. When Eugene and Alfred informed August of their decision, he told them they had chosen wisely, but he was not going to be content to drive a last year's car when his brothers had the latest model. So he made it a unanimous vote of the family and, trading in his old car, selected a brand new one. Now all members of the Koch family will ride in Chandlers. All three cars were fitted out with extra equipment of the very latest type.

Returns to First Love.

OTIS FRIEND IS NEW MITCHELL PRESIDENT.

ONE of the most important announcements made by the Mitchell company in a long time, an announcement which is attracting widespread and favorable comment everywhere in automobile circles, is to the effect that Otis C. Friend has been appointed president and general manager of the Mitchell Motors Company, Inc., of Racine, Wis.

Two months ago Friend resigned from the Mitchell company to become vice-president and general manager of the United Motors Corporation. However, on the resignation of H. L. McClaren he was elected president and general manager of the Mitchell company. Friend's long association with the Mitchell, his loyalty to those with whom he had been for years, helped him convince the United Motors Corporation that his moral obligation was to his friends at the Mitchell plant, and they consented to release him from his contract, so that Mr. Friend will assume his new duties at once.

His rise in the automobile field has been rapid, and with his experience he is probably one of the most versatile men in the automobile field occupying this important position. His experience covers the rise of the automobile since its inception, and it may be said there is no one, with the exception of John W. Bate, who has a more intimate knowledge of the Mitchell product, policy, organization and needs.

Entering the automobile field in 1904, he was the leading retail salesman connected with the Mitchell Automobile Company of Chicago, and the records he established at the time are still held up as examples for the rising generation.

In 1908 he secured the agency for Mitchell cars in Milwaukee, and his success was such that the Mitchell factory at Racine determined to add Friend to the factory organization.

He was appointed purchasing agent of the Mitchell company and rapidly earned his way successively through to factory manager. From that position he was moved on to the sales department as advertising manager, then to assistant sales manager, and in 1913 spent a year in Europe straightening out the company's affairs and studying the foreign manufacturing and selling field. This rounded out his experience and made him a particularly valuable man for their rapidly-expanding foreign trade, and on his return he was made general sales manager.

Under his able leadership the Mitchell company organized what is today considered throughout the trade one of the most intensive selling organizations in the automobile field, and as a reward he has seen the Mitchell production grow from 2700 cars in 1913 to 12,000 in 1916, and a 25,000-car production outlined for 1917.

Al's Growin'!

SALESROOM AND SHOP ATTRACTIVE FEATURES.

AL G. FAULKNER, local Marmon agent, in less than one year has outgrown his former quarters and last week moved into a large new building at Seventeenth and Figueroa. The salesroom and offices are still in the hands of the decorators, but the rest of the building is completed and the entire plant was moved over.

The new building is of the most modern construction and in it have been incorporated many new ideas. Faulkner made a thorough study of the newest places in the East before planning his new home, and, after seeing all there was to be seen, he adopted the best ideas, and these, with his home, resulted in an ideal garage, salesroom and service department.

The building fronts on Figueroa street and the large plate-glass windows on two sides will make an ideal salesroom for the display of the new Marmons. The salesroom will be finished in white enamel and mahogany and the same color scheme will prevail in the offices.

The service department is entered from Seventeenth street. There is ample room for a great many cars. This department will be in charge of Elmer Shields, ten years with the Marmon factory. The stockroom is large and constructed to care for $40,000 worth of parts.

The shop has many unique features which will increase the efficiency of the workmen and enable work to be done better and faster. One attractive feature that will appeal to the owners is the individual stalls for cars being overhauled. Under each car is a pit and once a car is taken into one of these work stalls no part is carried away. Every nut or bolt taken off remains in the stall. The pits are electrically lighted, which does away with the long electric cords that are in evidence in most shops.

This new home of the Marmon is a tribute to both Faulkner and the car. Faulkner has been identified with the motor-car industry in Southern California for many years, but has scored his greatest success with the new Marmon. He has been sold out from the time the first model was received and has never been able to keep cars on the floor for delivery.

He recently made a hurried trip to the factory for the purpose of getting additional shipments, and, while he was successful, the additional cars went so fast he is still trying to get more.

On the Way.

CARLOAD OF CARS COMING FOR BIG AUTO SHOW HERE

MURRAY PAGE, local manager for the Locomobile, wired from Bridgeport, Ct., yesterday that a carload of the latest Locomobile models would leave the factory this week for the Los Angeles Automobile Show.

Page went East to attend the meeting of branch managers at the Locomobile plant. He is also making a hard fight to get more cars from Los Angeles. The demand from the large eastern cities has been so great the factory has been taxed to supply buyers, but with the coming of winter in the East, Page hopes to get more cars for Los Angeles.

The second Locomobile limousine to reach the coast will arrive here next week. The other enclosed models are promised for next month and if Page is successful they will be here in time for the show.

Never before have such coaches been offered as greet the 1917 buyers. The Locomobile bodies, for instance, are constructed of aluminum sheets, fitted by hand to hard-wood panels. The body is mounted in a special manner. Instead of being carried on top of the frame, it is fitted down over it, producing permanent alignment of the doors and eliminating squeaks and rattles. The rear doors are twenty-five inches wide, mounted on special hinges. All metal fixtures for Locomobile enclosed cars are especially made.

The interiors are upholstered in the finest fabrics of a wide variety. Large yard-wide samples are offered from which selections can be made. The seats and cushions are special. The equipment includes special lights, Yale locks, telephone, time piece, silk roller curtains toned to match each special interior, vanity cases of polished ebony inlaid in satin wood, foot rest, loller straps, special carpeting to match interiors. The five removable windows of the frameless type are easily operated by handles. The glass is perfect plate glass and slides on velvet.

In addition to the limousine the Locomobile line includes a touring sedan, touring limousine, coupe, cabriolet, semi-touring limousine, landaulet and Berline.

ELEVEN THOUSAND MILES; "NO KICK."

Paying tribute to the Cadillac eight, which he purchased in Los Angeles last May and which he has since driven to his home in South Bend, Ind., C. H. Baker in writing the Don Lee agency says, "I will always have a warm spot in my heart for the man who sold me my Cadillac."

The Cadillac owned by Mr. Baker was purchased by him May 11, and since that time has been driven more than 11,000 miles in all kinds of weather and over all classes of roads. A wrench has not been used on the engine; the car was driven 1200 miles before the supply of oil was replenished, and more than 4000 miles before it was necessary to use any more water.

The Real Truth.

DENVER WOMEN PRAISE BIG PARK.

CONDITIONS IN YELLOWSTONE EXCELLENT.

Car Stampedes Bunch of Gypsy Horses in Narrow Pass and Animals Roll Down Embankment. Poor Roads Encountered in Northern California, They Say.

Touring conditions in Yellowstone National Park are excellent. The roads are good. There are several hundred motor cars containing sightseers on the roads all the time, but all operate under schedule and there is no confusion. The stages have the right of way, but their operation is not a source of annoyance to private vehicles. The hotel accommodations are excellent. Everything is done by park attaches, concessionaries and others to make the visit of tourists pleasant.

This glowing report of the nation's largest park and the consideration shown motorists there is in direct contravention to others that have been related in Los Angeles. However, it probably is the most recent as it was made only a few days ago by Mrs. C. T. Hamrick and approved by Miss Ruby Blair. The two women had just completed a drive in a Franklin roadster that brought them to this city from their home in Denver, Colo.

Mrs. Hamrick drove practically all the way. She headed the car direct for Yellowstone Park, upon leaving Denver, and the couple passed a week there. They departed from the park via Yellowstone, Mont., between Yellowstone and Bozeman, Mont., it was necessary to go through Gallatin Pass and here it was that the most exciting experience befell the travelers.

The car was negotiating a steep grade when a gypsy party with a bunch of horses was encountered. The horses became frightened at the automobile in the narrow pass and stampeded. Several of them, in their efforts to escape, lost their footing and rolled over the embankment and either were killed or so badly injured they had to be shot.

The road through Grant's Pass in Oregon was good and the Siskiyou Mountain road was in fair condition. Between Dunsmuir and Reading, Cal., however, the Denverites say the road was almost impassable and their introduction to California was over a highway that was worse than any other they encountered. The women say that if their car had not been a Franklin, they doubt if they could have made it. The Pacific highway led to San Francisco and the run to Los Angeles was over the inland route.

RECORDS KEPT TO TEST CARBURETORS.

That a correct record be kept for comparison between the Corser carburetor and the ones displaced by it on the cars, the officials of the Corser company have had printed certificates for the signatures of the purchasers. First, the new owner tells how much mileage, speed and power he had with the carburetor he is discarding. That is made a part of the record of the transaction.

Then, after driving the same car under the same conditions with the Corser, he is requested to fill in the corresponding blanks, telling what mileage, speed and power he has obtained from the new device. In every instance so far, say the officials, the owners have found a large saving in fuel and at the same time increased their pulling power and speed.

The Corser, strictly a Los Angeles product, recently was adopted by the Mercer for the forthcoming models as stock equipment. That immediately attracted wide attention to the carburetor and the designer, J. W. Corser, found that the quarters then occupied on South Main street would be inadequate. So he decided to move the sales and service departments to No. 1111 South Hill street.

ANOTHER TOURIST LURED TO STATE.

G. W. Reilly, Jr., manager of the Reilly Motor Car Company, Southern California distributors for the Moon cars, has received a letter from Frank Matthews of Lancaster, Pa., who says he has been spending the winters in Florida for some time past, but this year intends to come to Southern California. As he wants his Moon car for touring here in the winter he has decided to drive the car out and wants to get whatever information he can about the roads at this end of the journey.

This will be the tenth Moon car to cross the continent this year, and in every instance the trip has been made without any trouble at all.

LATEST ARRIVAL—THE 1917 SAXON.

Simply bulging with improvements.

The 1917 Saxon which has just been received and which is one of the prettiest cars on the row. Body lines have been greatly beautified and several important mechanical changes have been made. The most unusual of these is the way in which the carburetor is attached to the motor block. The manifold is completely done away with and the instrument is bolted onto the block of the engine. It is claimed that this adds greatly to the power and smoothness of the motor.

GREATLY improved in body lines and with several unusual mechanical improvements, the first of the 1917 Saxon cars arrived in town last week. Slight changes in the general lines have greatly increased the beauty of this season's model and the straight line bodies with full crown fenders and slanting windshield leave little to be desired.

New tops have been adopted which add much to the low hung appearance of the machines. The new French bows are being used exclusively which give a popular basket effect to the top and the material blends harmoniously with the rest of the car. The back of the front seat is panneled across the top, and the rear seat and doors are considerably wider than in the 1916 models. There is ample room, without crowding, for three passengers in the back and three can even ride in the front without inconvenience.

Strength is the point which predominates in the new models. Great attention has been paid to strengthening every part of the car that could possibly be called upon for extra stress or strain. Heavy, full-cantilever springs are used in the rear and make the new Saxon one of the easiest riding cars on the market. Brake drums have been increased to twelve inches and the crank shaft is now being made from heavy two-inch steel. All of the operating instruments have been placed together on one small plate on the dash, for the convenience of the driver.

Perhaps the most important and radical change on the whole car is the direct connection of the carburetor to the motor. The intake manifold has been done away with entirely and the carburetor is bolted onto the side of the motor block. This departure, it is claimed, will add power to the motor and do away with many troubles of carburization.

AMBULANCE FOR ANIMALS LATEST.

Sick and injured animals are to have up-to-the-minute transportation in Los Angeles after next week. A contract for a Federal animal ambulance was awarded last week to the Pacific KisselKar Company, and the new vehicle will be delivered October 14.

The special body being constructed by the local company is the invention of the superintendent of the San Francisco branch. The body is fitted on a ton and a half Federal truck and is so constructed that a long apron can be lowered from the back end, making a slight incline into the body of the truck. By the use of a windlass working off the drive shaft the animals are hauled into the ambulance. This makes it possible to handle sick and injured animals much easier and in less time than with the old system.

The sectional athletic sports promoted by the Pennsylvania Railroad in its various eastern divisions this summer brought together 16,000 to 18,000 employees. Track and field and baseball games were conducted on the lose and out plan.

America's Greatest "Light Six"

HAYNES

The real test for a car is in what the cars do in the hands of owners, not what is accomplished by special built cars in the hands of racing drivers.

More Haynes Light Sixes have been driven across the continent this season than any other light six. And every owner has reached here more enthusiastic than ever about the Haynes.

Sturdiness, power, flexibility, together with economy of upkeep, make the Haynes Six much to be preferred.

HOW TO CUT FUEL BILLS.

Points to Watch in Operation of Motor Car.

Mileage Per Gallon of Gas is Really up to Driver.

Many Things Cut Down Daily Running Average.

BY HARRY A. LORD
Of the Lord Motor Car Company.

"There are nine important factors in the operation of a motor car which make for increased mileage per gallon of gasoline. The first of these has to do, in part, with the car's inner construction and is to be secured only by purchasing a good car in the first place. The remaining eight points are up to the one who drives and cares for the car.

"First, it is of supreme importance that the car be so constructed that the weight is evenly distributed on all four wheels. Bearings must be practically frictionless, and all wheels should be carefully and thoroughly lubricated. Car should roll easily with one hand.

"Second, watch the speedometer. Do not speed up if you want a great gasoline mileage. Keep the car traveling at the sensible, comfortable and economical rate of eighteen to twenty-five miles per hour.

"Third, keep the spark lever advanced—a point often overlooked by the average motorist.

"Fourth, keep tires inflated to proper pressure. A soft tire drags, increases friction aand lessens your mileage, beside wearing out the tire.

"Fifth, keep every cylinder clean and free from carbon. A few moments spent in cleaning the cylinders will mean a very considerable saving in gasoline.

"Sixth, there is a place just between where you are getting too much gasoline into the carburetor and where you are getting too little. To find this point may require a few tests with your car. Find the leanest mixture you can satisfactorily use, then keep your carburetor adjusted to this mixture. A very appreciable saving of gasoline will be made by this little point of motor economy.

"Seventh, brakes should not drag. It would seem that almost anyone knows a dragging brake will decrease mileage and wear out tires, yet brakes are often neglected by motorists who wonder why they do not get a greater gasoline mileage. To see if brakes are O.K. jack up the rear wheels and see if they will spin.

"Eighth it is all important that you use a high-grade oil. The money you save by getting poor oil is spent several times over in gasoline and depreciation. It pays to buy the best oil.

"Ninth, it has been said that various gasoline pumps fail to give full measure. Anywhere from a gill to a quart per gallon is said to be kept from the motorist by these short pumps. An inaccurate pump, when found, should be reported to the proper city or county authorities.

"By carefully watching these nine points of gasoline economy you will find a greatly-increased mileage from any machine or make of car."

CHEAP WIRE IS NOT ECONOMY.

There is no economy in purchasing cheap insulating wire. The cost of tracing electrical troubles would soon buy more durable material. If, on examining the wire, it is found that parts of it are chafed, they should be carefully bound with insulating tape and the wire should be fastened so that further chafing is prevented. In making such a repair, make it permanent.

It is better to spend a little more time in the first repair and have it lasting than to have to do the job over repeatedly. Rubber tubing or loom slipped over the wire at the defective spot is often a good repair.

Where a short circuit is suspected, it may often be discovered by testing the ignition in the dark, especially in old models of cars where most of the wiring is open instead of passing through conduits.

A spark will often be noticed passing from the defective point. The short is most liable to occur in the high tension circuit, that is, in connection with the wire leading from the coil to the spark plug, and the short should be looked for while the wire is in the position it generally occupies on the car, as the mere act of moving it in order to make the test above described may prevent the occurrence of the short from which it is suffering.

RICH BROWNS ARE HARD TO BEAT.

Rich browns have no superior this fall, for feminine motor coats, but hold their own with the new plum shades, soft grays, deep wines and standard blue. Brown is the most happy of them all. For it has neither youth nor age limitations, is neither loud nor dull, cannot be accused of being too hot or too cold in color and is not so difficult to wear as the extremes of the gay, bright colors of the year and the black and white discords of earlier vogue.

AUTOMATIC CLOSING DOORS THE LATEST.

Automatic closing doors are the very newest feature for enclosed types of automobiles. They are being shown for the first time, it is believed, in Los Angeles as a part of the equipment of the new Cole toursedan, a shipment of which models has been received by the Irving Motor Car Company, Cole distributors.

The doors operate much after the fashion of a spring-hung screen door, with which everybody is familiar. There is a double catch and when the occupant has left the car the door closes on the first, or temporary catch. When it is desired the door be closed more securely a slight push and both locks operate.

The toursedan has other special equipment that stamps it as a distinctive car. It is a full seven-passenger car. The interior upholstery is in special cloth. The front seats are divided and there is ample leg room. The auxiliary seats fold completely out of sight, when not in use. The rear cushion is equipped with individual arm rests on the two sides. The electric lighting arrangement includes a lamp for the door and a cut-off switch which extinguishes the light when the door closes. The shades at the windows are of a fine silk. All the windows may be removed when desired and stowed away under the rear seat. Those in the doors, however, slip down into individual compartments, and may be constantly returned to position.

Aha!

DISTILLATE IS ADOPTE

Successful Solution of [illegible] Problem is at Hand.

Experiments Result in V[illegible] Important Discovery.

Twelve-cylinder Motor Car[illegible] Use Low-grade Fuel.

That distillate instead of [illegible] is to be used in the new [illegible] Packard Twin-sixes was [illegible] to Packard owners in a [illegible] statement issued yesterday by [illegible] C. Anthony, Inc., Packard [illegible]utors for Southern California.

The fact that the new Packard would operate on a very low [illegible] of gasoline has been emphasized [illegible] Packard engineers since the [illegible]ance of the new cars, but the [illegible] fact of their successful operation [illegible] distillate, it remained for the [illegible] distributors to announce as a [illegible] of exhaustive tests made with [illegible] new models on the California [illegible].

The problem of the utilization [illegible] the lower grades of fuel in [illegible] combustion engines has been [illegible] that has engaged the brightest [illegible] of the motor industry for the [illegible] few years, and it is not surprising that its successful solution has [illegible] brought about by the same [illegible] engineers that developed and [illegible]fected, after an experimental [illegible]penditure of over $600,000, the twelve-cylinder motor over [illegible]keted.

The further application of [illegible]covery of the Packard [illegible] which made it immensely [illegible] California owners through [illegible] use distillate as fuel, as [illegible] cost of gasoline, was made [illegible] the efforts of the technical [illegible] Earle C. Anthony, Inc.

It has been well known for [illegible] to motor car engineers that [illegible] lower grades of fuel, such as [illegible]late and kerosene, carried a [illegible] percentage of heat units, and [illegible]fore, theoretically, should [illegible] a more powerful fuel. [illegible] than gasoline, however, they [illegible]sented a far more difficult [illegible]tion problem, particularly when [illegible] motor was cold. To break up [illegible] more inert particles of the [illegible] grade fuels and combine them [illegible] air in an explosive mixture has [illegible] the successful accomplishment of [illegible] Packard engineers in the new [illegible]buretor of the latest series [illegible].

Before the new twin-sixes [illegible] the Coast, they were [illegible] reports from the Packard [illegible] of remarkably successful [illegible]formance upon extremely [illegible] grades of gasoline. While [illegible] East, Mr. Anthony watched the [illegible]formance of these cars on [illegible] low grades of gasoline. This [illegible] is of extreme importance in [illegible] parts of the East at present [illegible] to the low grade of gasoline [illegible] is sold in many places. Anthony [illegible]alized, however, owing to the [illegible] that the grade of Pacific Coast [illegible]line is uniformly high, that [illegible] feature was of comparatively [illegible] interest to California motorists.

The thought occurred to him [illegible] however, that a further [illegible] might be possible that would [illegible] California owners to use [illegible] in the new cars. He accordingly wired to have a series of [illegible]ments started on the arrival of [illegible] new cars as to the possibility of [illegible]ing distillate as a fuel.

Upon the arrival of the new [illegible] in Southern California, Louis [illegible]rent commenced a series of [illegible]tive tests of the performance of [illegible] new cars on distillate fuel, in [illegible] course of which he hit upon [illegible]justment of the carburetor [illegible] permitted the use of distillate [illegible] even better results than [illegible]tained with gasoline. More [illegible] more power and cleaner [illegible] resulted from its use. [illegible]lowed the Packard to stand all [illegible] in the rain, and started on [illegible] distillate in the morning without [illegible] particle of trouble, and without [illegible]sorting to priming.

"The successful use of such a [illegible] grade fuel as distillate in the [illegible] Packard is really a matter of [illegible]reaching importance," declared [illegible]thony yesterday. "The demand [illegible] gasoline has reached tremendous proportions and with three or [illegible] thousand new motor cars going [illegible] commission every day there [illegible] prospect that inquiries by the [illegible]eral government are going to [illegible] the motorist much. As a [illegible]ter of fact the recent rise in [illegible] price of gasoline was [illegible] question of the law of supply [illegible] demand and not of price [illegible]tion.

"Gasoline, as it were, is the [illegible] skimmed off the oil in the [illegible] of distillation. It is the most [illegible] and the first to rise. After [illegible]lows the more inert fuels [illegible] greater heat values, but [illegible] able of being employed [illegible] in gasoline motors. The [illegible]mand for these fuels was [illegible] their price. Distillate, for [illegible] is exactly one-half the [illegible] gasoline today. If distillate [illegible] be more widely used, it would [illegible] the demand for gasoline [illegible] would automatically drop in [illegible]

FOUR CARLOADS OF TIRES IN ONE [illegible]

If you have never seen four [illegible] loads of tires piled up in one [illegible] you have no idea how many [illegible] crowded into a comparatively [illegible] space. Down on Olive street [illegible] a sight meets the gaze of all [illegible] enter the Los Angeles headquarters of the Tire Company of Californ[illegible] new company which swings its [illegible] open for public inspection [illegible] All makes of tires. All sizes of [illegible] All prices. And more carloads [illegible] on the way.

M. Shiffner, Coast manager, [illegible] his wife, arrived the first of [illegible] week, and already have decided [illegible] this city is to be their future [illegible]

"Automobile Row looks good to me," said Mr. Shiffner, as he directed his employees in unloading big trucks loaded with tires. [illegible] seem to have everything here [illegible] climate to good roads, and it [illegible] to me that there are more [illegible]biles here than I ever saw [illegible] And that's why I am here. [illegible] the automobiles are the most [illegible]ful, there is the place to sell tires, and I expect to sell [illegible] of the best eastern makes of [illegible]est possible margin of profit [illegible]

Right Away.

ALL-CAPITALS CAR DUE HERE.

Cross-country Wanderer to Stop at Film Capital.

Elaborate Plans Made to Receive Honored Visitors.

Poor Roads Reported in Several Places en Route.

Already famous for the marvelous tour it has undertaken, the sturdy little five-passenger Hupmobile, known as the "all States-all-capitals car," is nearing the Pacific Coast. Starting August 28 from the national capital, routed through every State capital in the United States, carrying a message of good roads from Governor to Governor and Mayor to Mayor, this tour of the nation will soon reach Los Angeles, where arrangements are being made for a mammoth and unique reception. Los Angeles is the only city in the Union, not a State capital, that the car goes out of its way to visit.

LATE REPORTS.

At last reports the party, consisting of two drivers, a motion-picture camera man and an official observer representing the A.A.A., had taken two days to run forty-two miles in the State of Montana. They reached Helena Wednesday, departed almost immediately for Boise via the Yellowstone Park, and were due to turn northwestward there to Seattle. Upon its arrival at the Northwest city advices will be sent to Los Angeles setting a definite date of arrival at this city. It is expected that this will be some time late this week.

Leaving Seattle, the route includes Olympia, Portland, Salem, Sacramento and San Francisco. The trip from San Francisco will be by the coast route direct to Los Angeles, carrying a message from Mayor Rolph to Mayor Woodman.

ESCORTS.

Los Angeles arrangements provide that the Hupmobile shall be met at Paso Robles by the local dealer and his reception committee. The party will be escorted from city to city, through San Luis Obispo, Arroyo Grande, Santa Maria to Santa Barbara. At this city John S. Catlin, the local dealer, will receive the transcontinental tourists, and with a large delegation lead the parade to Calabasas. Here the trip will be diverted to pass through Owensmouth and down Sherman way, through Van Nuys and Lankershim to Universal City.

All arrangements for receiving the delegation at Universal City are in the hands of Greer-Robbins Company, local Hupmobile distributors, and the officials of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. It is planned that a band of held-up men from the "film capital of the world" will meet the good roads people a mile up the road, ambush them, hold them until Miss Jane Bernoudy, champion rope thrower of the world, ropes the famous Hupmobile and brings it to the gates of the film town. H. O. Davis, vice-president of the Universal Film Company, will officially receive the long-distance scouts and turn over to them the keys of that village. At the same time the Greer-Robbins company is working up a huge delegation of Hupmobile owners from all parts of Southern California to meet the others at that place.

LARGE SIZED.

Forming one of the biggest Hupmobile phalanxes ever seen in the United States, the party will run through Hollywood under the guidance of Ralph H. Clark, the Hollywood Hup dealer, to the Los Angeles City Hall, where the officials of this city will extend the hand of greeting to the great throng. At the conclusion of the ceremonies the entire delegation will make a dash for the Greer-Robbins company's display rooms at Twelfth and Flower, where the pioneer good roads automobile will remain on exhibition the balance of its stay in Los Angeles.

A large delegation of owners and dealers from Bakersfield way will be present to convoy the car to that city and on to Sacramento, the only State capital that will be twice visited in the nation.

Motion pictures have been taken along the entire trip, but none will be more widely distributed than that which will be made at Universal City, where the Times-Universal Weekly news will portray the welcome reception for distribution all over the United States.

J. S. Patterson, observing for the A.A.A., wires Greer-Robbins company that the worst roads encountered on the first 6000 miles of the journey were found in Kentucky and Montana. In the latter State, entering Livingston, only forty-two miles were made in two days of last week. Early snow and heavy mud, almost wheel deep, made going almost impossible. Patterson believes that within a few days the party will travel over the best roads that will be discovered on the 20,000-mile tour. He has been informed that California will be a decided relief from the terrible conditions that have severely set the party back.

On the return the Hupmobile will leave the State via Sacramento, proceeding immediately to the capitals of the States of Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona and Texas in the order named. The balance of the way will be through Oklahoma, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida and the Atlantic States back to Washington, D. C.

ARIZONA TO HAVE MORE GOOD ROADS.

The good roads enthusiasts in Arizona are hoping for a road system to rival that of Southern California. A recent highway inspection trip for the State of Arizona was guided by the California Highway Commission and the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce. The members of the Chamber of Commerce made a trip of 150 miles and returned in time for dinner. The Arizonans were much interested in the type of construction met with on the trip, making careful notes of what they saw. They plan to influence the people of the State to take the matter up, beginning with Maricopa county, where voting on a $1,500,000 bond for highway work will be [illegible]

Aha!

DISTILLATE IS ADOPTE

Successful Solution of C Problem is at Hand.

Experiments Result in Ve Important Discovery.

Twelve-cylinder Motor Car Use Low-grade Fuel.

That distillate instead of gasoli is to be used in the new Packard Twin-sixes was announ to Packard owners in a surpri statement issued yesterday by Ear C. Anthony, Inc., Packard distri utors for Southern California.

The fact that the new Packa would operate on a very low gra of gasoline has been emphasized Packard engineers since the appe ance of the new cars, but the furth fact of their successful operatio distillate, it remained for the lo distributors to announce as a re of exhaustive tests made with t new models on the California fuel.

The problem of the utilizatio the lower grades of fuel in inter combustion engines has been that has engaged the brightest m of the motor industry for the p few years, and it is not surpri that its successful solution has b brought about by the same corps engineers that developed and p fected, after an experimental penditure of over $600,000, the twelve-cylinder motor ever keted.

The further application of the d covery of the Packard engine which made it immensely valuable California owners through ability use distillate as fuel, as half t of gasoline, was made thro the efforts of the technical forc Earle C. Anthony, Inc.

It has been well known for y to motor car engineers that t lower grades of fuel, such as di late and kerosene, carried a high percentage of heat units, and the fore, theoretically, should furn a more powerful fuel. Less vol than gasoline, however, they p sented a far more difficult carb tion problem, particularly when motor was cold. To break up more inert particles of the lo grade fuels and combine them w air in an explosive mixture has be the successful accomplishment of Packard engineers in the new ca buretor of the latest series twin-s

Before the new twin-sixes cam the Coast, they were precede reports from the Packard fac of remarkably successful p formance upon extremely grades of gasoline. While i East, Mr. Anthony watched the p formance of these cars on extrem low grades of gasoline. This ab is of extreme importance in parts of the East at present, ow to the low grade of gasoline wh is sold in many places. Anthony alized, however, owing to the that the grade of Pacific Coast line is uniformly high, that feature was of comparatively interest to California motorists.

The thought occurred to him th however, that a further adapt might be possible that would per California owners to use disti in the new cars. He accordi wired to have a series of exp ments started on the arrival of th new cars as to the possibility of u ng distillate as a fuel.

Upon the arrival of the new ca in Southern California, Louis Ni rent commenced a series of exha tive tests of the performance of new cars on distillate fuel, in th course of which he hit upon an a justment of the carburetor whi permitted the use of distillate w even better results than those tained with gasoline. More mile more power and cleaner cylind resulted from its use. Nikrent a lowed the Packard to stand all nig in the rain, and started on strai distillate in the morning without particle of trouble, and without r sorting to priming.

"The successful use of such a l grade fuel as distillate in the Packard is really a matter of reaching importance," declared A thony yesterday. "The demand gasoline has reached tremend proportions and with three or fo thousand new motor cars going commission every day there is prospect that inquiries by the Fe ral government are going to he he motorist much. As a m er of fact the recent rise in price of gasoline was entirely uestion of the law of supply emand and not of price manipu on.

FEW THOUGHTS ON BIG SERIES.

Defense of the Red Sox was Their Real Strength.

Pitchers Blow up Quickly in Boston Town.

Chance Makes a Few Remarks on Subject.

BY HARRY A. WILLIAMS.

Many things contributed to the well-know supremacy of the Boston Red Sox. Gameness, the ability to force the breaks, the rare accomplishment of hitting in the pinches and topnotch twirling.

These are the elements which were most commonly recited, while every fanning bee brought out some loud talk about the Boston pitchers, all of which was merited.

However, an equally important factor, and one less frequently mentioned, is the perfect balance of the Boston club and its reserve strength. Latent fighting ability seems to be an outstanding feature of the club, but without this reserve strength it would not have had the wherewith to fight. The loss of Speaker was measurably offset by the addition of two outfielders of more than ordinary ability.

The club is nicely adjustable as to left and right-handed hitters, while in the infield almost endless combinations are possible. Unlike most ball teams, the loss of one or two star performers does not seem appreciably to weaken the club or impair its teamwork.

Last season the addition of Jack Barry was generally conceded to have been responsible for "making" the club. Yet with Barry out this fall, and Speaker gone, the team traveled along at the same clip in its own league, and performed with the same oily smoothness in the the world series. The loss of one cog in the infield created no perceptible jar, because Mechanician Carrigan had another cog handy that just fitted into the maching. The rather youthful Janvrin, groomed and schooled, ground and polished, for just such an emergency, went in and pivoted in Barry's place to the satisfaction of all the mechanics present.

With all its other claims to efficiency it is exceedingly doubtful whether the Boston club would have won in its own league without this reserve strength and hairline balance.

May Not Repeat.

Whether the Red Sox will be able to repeat next year and set up a new record by making it three world titles in a row is problematical. They had so close a call in their own league this season that they can expect no cinch in 1917. And if they do get into the big money they will in all probability have stiffer competition as the Giants figure to be the opponents of the winners in the American League.

Boston barely nosed out the White Sox this season, and had Rowland started the season with the line-up that he finished the race there is not the slightest doubt that Chicago would have clattered home in front, topping off the repast by cleaning Brooklyn. Only by a few points, due to hesitancy in trying men comparatively unschooled in major-league baseball, but with topnotch minor-league records, did the White Hose fall short of a sure shot at the world title.

The Chicago club should be even stronger next season, while Boston probably has reached the apogee of its effectiveness. It may not yet began to rot as do all championship clubs, but it will hardly improve any before the inevitable decline sets in.

The White Sox will owe their added strength to the schooling which Comiskey's youngsters received in a gruelling race this season, while another year will hardly find the effectiveness of many of the veterans seriously impaired.

Real Twirlers.

Boston has a wonderful stable of hurlers, most of them comparatively young, and in any other city could be held together for years. However, longevity is never an outstanding feature of Boston pitching staffs. This is due to the rigors of the Bostonese climate. Not one of the pitchers who carried the Red Sox through the series of 1912 appeared in the world tilt of 1915. In three years the staff had been wholly rebuilt. Never before within so short a period had such an array of high class hurlers been completely dissembled. From three to four years seems to be the average span of effectiveness there.

It takes the arm of an Eskimo to withstand the zephyrs which slide from the broad bosom of an iceberg off Newfoundland curve down past Nantucket and up through Woods Hole and Wells Fleet to finally fan Fenway Park and shoot fragments of Arctic weather into the tender marrow of the high salaried pitching arm. The main question is how much longer the present staff of Boston hurlers can stand this Greenland gaff?

Tozer Found.

Speaking of ice and such things recalls the fact that Bill Tozer was discovered a few days ago acting as an instructor in a San Francisco skating rink. Bill knows all about skates, and is doing well. Retiring from baseball he undertook the grocery business in San Francisco, but the clang of the chese cutter was a poor substitute for the plaudits of the diamond, and the life of a grocer soon palled on Tozer. Rumor has it that Bill is planning a come-back, the same to take place in public next spring.

Hitting.

Hitting is regarded as the main forte of the Dodgers and all will agree that they are there with the punch. Still, the greatest of batters sometimes fall, and Rowdy Elliott recalls the mowing down of the great Brooklyn trio—Daubert, Stengeland and Wheat—left-handed hitters, who caused a reign of terror in the National. Rowdy had gone over to Boston from Pittsburgh in advance of the Cubs, and was watching a contest between the Braves and Dodgers. Old Pat Ragan was pitching. Brooklyn plugged up the bases on him. Ragan got busy with his ancient right arm and fanned the big three as fact as they could walk up to be accommodated. "It impressed me as the greatest bit of pitching ever put over," remarked Rowdy, "and Old Pat is supposed to be about all in. I don't think you will see anything like that in the present series."

Former Prexy.

Judge Thomas F. Graham, former president of the Coast League, still stoutly maintains his interest in baseball. From the bench to the directors' box is but a short trip and he is to be seen at Recreation Park nearly every week-end.

Studebaker

A Special Offering of Studebaker Sixes

No, gentle reader, this is not an announcement of a cut in price, because we do not have to cut the price on a Studebaker SIX. The Studebaker SIX is priced by Studebaker from $250 to $400 lower than any car of equal value.

And the fact that more Studebaker seven-passenger SIXES have been sold in the last fourteen months than any other make of seven-passenger six-cylinder car, we do not think that it is necessary for us to offer any further inducement on a car which is so nationally recognized by the public as the Studebaker. But we do have an extra inducement (and we charge for it.)

We are prepared to offer Studebaker six-cylinder seven-passenger touring cars in a variety of distinctive and exclusive color designs.

It is not necessary that you buy a Studebaker SIX in the same color scheme as everyone else.

You can come in to our sales rooms and select your color scheme, and the car will be finished exactly in accordance with your taste.

When you can buy the most popular six-cylinder seven-passenger car on the American market, the most powerful car ever offered the public in ratio to weight and operation cost, the most comfortable and beautiful car in lines and appearance; when you can buy a car that is furnished with high grade, genuine leather and long curled hair, twenty-five paint and varnish operations—

And all within hundreds of dollars less than its competitors, is there any reason why you should not come in and find out about this special inducement which caters to your personal taste?

Let us tell you about it.

Walk Over Indians.

the season the exhibition of football was wonderful.

A PARADE.

Using the time-honored shift, the Tigers arrayed themselves first on one side of the line and then the other, battering the Indians back by sheer weight of numbers and brute force. The backs never mixed in these rough and ugly piles. They picked holes between the tangle of players and squirmed up the field. Seldom was the Tiger carrying the ball downed until he had reached the secondary defense.

Stanton has devised a human battering ram, a flying wedge that simply pounds holes in the line for the backs to dash through.

In the second half the Occidental coach set systematically about to wreck his own machine. He couldn't do it. Every star that showed up in the first half was called to the sidelines—Brooks, Batz, Deems, Ohl. In their places were placed men whose names had never been heard on a gridiron.

PLOWS ON.

The machine plowed on, ripping first the left, then the right side of the line. At one time Stanton deliberately yanked the whole backfield, ten minutes afterwards the ball had been carried with the same monotonous regularity the length of the field for another touchdown. Pipal had great football players like McClung and Foster around which his team revolved. Stanton has no individual stars. He has eleven men who play together.

Anybody who can pick his way among prostrate figures can carry the ball on Stanton's team. The tacklers are all stretched on the ground long before the man with the ball comes sprinting along.

During the first part of the game Batz and Brooks stood out among the backfield players. Batz was especially clever at picking his holes. He zigzagged in and out with nimble fleetness. Brooks hit the line like a flash of lightning and one could hear the thunder roar as he crashed in. This new hero of the gridiron gathers his full speed before he hits the line and tears through with the ease that circus performers jump through paper hoops. Once through the line he has enough speed to carry him a couple of yards farther even if somebody has hold of both legs.

BABY THOMSON.

In the last quarter Pelican Thomson, the baby brother of Fred Thomson, Occidental's famous all-round athlete, loomed up as a coming back-field sensation. During the first half Stanton played him at tackle. When Brooks and Batz went out, Thomson was shifted back. Thomson runs sprawled all over the field. All one sees from the bleachers is a wildly waving mass of legs and arms. He runs so loosely that he seems to be dropping to pieces at every stride. But the Indians couldn't lay hands on him. If he had been a greased pig he couldn't possibly have been harder to down.

Brandsteter, the Occidental halfback, was injured in the first few minutes of play and was carried off the field with a wrenched ankle. The injury will keep him off the gridiron for several weeks, but he will be available later in the season.

The Indian offense never materialized. Only twice in the whole game did it make downs. Most of the time the Sherman backs were smothered before they reached the line.

MISTER POWERS.

A big, bony, kinky-haired buck, who looked like he might hail from Memphis, Tenn., turned out to be a demon for the Indians. Several times he shuffled around the Tiger ends for long gains. Three times he reached his long arms out of the mass and caught forward passes. He stopped practically every Occidental play in the last quarter. After every down it was he who had his arms wrapped securely around the man with the ball. His name is Powers.

TACKLING.

In one department only did the Indians continue to excel. The Braves tackled low, hard and surely, as they did against U. S. C. The way they dove for the shoes was noticeable for two reasons. One was that they had to do it so often. The other was that Occidental players were inclined to hug instead of tackle some of the Indians.

The first two Occidental touchdowns were made by Brooks on 2-yard bucks. Creswell missed the first goal and kicked the second. Batz scored the next two touchdowns on 15-yard zig-zagging runs around the ends. The goals were kicked. That completed the scoring for the first half and made the score 27 to 0.

In the second half Brooks made the first touchdown, Shorty Wells the second and Pelican Thomson the third. Tub Wieman brought the score to fifty with a place kick.

FANS WILL GET LOWER PRICES.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—Exorbitant prices for admission to future world's series baseball games will not be tolerated, declares President B. B. Johnson of the American League.

"The world's series as conducted at present," said Mr. Johnson before leaving yesterday for Chicago, "threatens to jeopardize the fair name of the game in public opinion. There is some housecleaning to be done and it's going to start where the most dust of discontent has gathered."

turning out to witness the eventful doings. Plainly the bugs have almost recovered from the world series. At least they are convalescent and able to get out and enjoy the air. The crowd in a way was a testimonial to the great uphill race waged by the club which at various times had been counted out even by its most enthusiastic supporters. Then there were those who came out to ascertain whether or not there is still any room in the band wagon. They were given the hand of fellowship and assured that the capacity of that vehicle is practically unlimited. If it gets crowded there are a lot of the original occupants who will get out and stand on the fenders and give the best seats to the late arrivals.

A DUEL.

Seven innings the curtain-raiser was a duel between Jack Ryan and big Clint Prough. In the eighth Martin and Kinney, who tried to finish the enterprise, after a pinch-hitter had tied it up for Prough, got off the main track and ran into an open switch, Los Angeles scoring four. The supporting casts played a grade of ball that made the fans forget that there is such a thing as an error mentioned in the book.

Although still weak from his recent illness, Ryan stood the strain well, and when the Oaks found that he was expectorating ptomaine germs on the ball they realized that they were under a handicap. Plainly Prough was under a disadvantage by not having any ptomaines concealed in his gills, and the Angels knowing this, were not afraid to stand up to the plate. Most pitchers, if they had ptomaine poisoning would regard themselves as beaten before they started. Jack being an ingenious guy, simply turned the ptomaines to his own advantage by smearing them on the ball. The Oaks, not having much hope in life, and therefore being willing to court death, hit the ball at their own peril, and several times had Jack and ptomaines badly worried. Twice, runners were hanging around third base.

Fearing that his mates, who are well and hearty, never would get a run for him, Ryan went out and made one himself in the sixth. He trounced a double to the scoreboard—the first hard blow off Prough. Maggert's sacrifice put him on third. He was held there while Ellis grounded to Barry for the second out, but Wolter sent him across with a single. Callan stopped Harry stealing.

RED AGAIN.

Starting the eighth, Del Howard sent Gardner in to swat for Prough. By this time the Oaks had to get a run to be in the running at all. Rube responded with a noble two-base foul two feet wide of first. Red Held, who is an honest but sometimes mistaken umpire, probably had a fleeting attack of the blind staggers. Anyway he called it fair to the amazement of all those present, the same including Rube. Arriving at second Rube retired to let Harwood run for him, the strain of making a two-base foul having proven terrific. Middleton sacrificed, Murphy drove to Davis, and Harwood scored, even the fact that Bobby Davis hit him behind the ear with the ball failing to stop him. Murphy sought to take second when the pill caromed from Harwood's mastoid process, and was thrown out by Bassler.

Martin started wild in the eighth and finished the same way. In the beginning he passed Bassler. Davis drove to Martin, who threw to second too late to get Johnny. Ryan also bunted, and Martin threw to third, only to see his throw arrive behind schedule. This filled the bases. Maggert slammed one to Barry, who threw to Callan nailing Bassler. This was coming to Bassler. No guy can expect to be safe all the time. Any ball team ought to get a runner once out of three tries. Barry bagged Ellis's foul, making two out with nobody home yet. Martin had lost his compass by this time, and passed Wolter and Koerner, forcing two across. Kinney, a left-hander, prolonged the procession, by walking two more. Had Howard had a repeating rifle handy on the bench there would today be one less right-hander and one less southpaw in the Coast League. Bassler, around for the purpose of repeating, went out on a spiteful throw by Berger. Johnny had the unique experience of being put out at first base and the plate in the same inning, and attempts were made to get him at the other two bases.

SECOND GAME.

Oakland scored in the second so as to get it off hands. Kenworthy singled infield, and Cunningham walked. Both moved up on Barry's sacrifice. Zabel fanned Berger and then passed Callan purposely to get at Beer. Not having much faith in Sammy as a hitter, a triple steal was attempted and Kenworthy scored when Boles dropped Zabel's throw. That the lack of faith in Sammy was justified became apparent when he fanned.

The Angels went ahead with two in the third. Boles walked. After Davis had flied to Lane, Zabel singled infield. Maggert walked, filling the bases. Ellis smashed to Kenworthy, who threw to Berger just as Maggert crashed into him. The ball was jarred from Joe's mit. Boles scored—something that he would have done anyway. A wild pitch sent Zable in from third. Four balls to Wolter filled the bases some more, but they didn't stay that way as Callan snipped Maggert, who had taken a generous lead off first. Koerner skied to Middleton.

Hit by Zabel and Koerner, and a brace of errors, one of them a muff of McLarry's fly by Gardner with the latter backed up against the right field bleachers, gave Los Angeles three in the fifth. The pastime was called at the end of the seventh because of lack of daylight.

ERICKSON TAMES TIGERS TWICE.

BIG SEAL HEAVER PITCHES A DOUBLE-HEADER.

Ten Hits and Fourteen Walks Allowed the Bengals in Eighteen Innings of Baseball—Home Runs are the Rule in the First Game. Seals Hit Hard.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—Brick Erickson of the San Francisco pitching staff came into his own at Recreation Park today by pitching two full games against the Vernon Tigers and winning each handily from the aspirants for first place.

In all fifty-nine Vernonites were credited with turns at bat and only ten made safe hits. In the two games Erickson allowed fourteen walks. The first game was unique in that home runs accounted for all the scoring, Griggs, Calvo and Schaller being the malefactors. The score was 2 to 1. The second game went to the Seals 8 to 3 through heavy and opportune hitting. Scores:

CARRIER PIGEON VISITS A HOTEL.

Becoming Exhausted it Flits into Window and Creates a Mystery.

An exhausted carrier pigeon fluttered to the sill of an eleventh-story window in the Rosslyn Hotel yesterday afternoon and was picked up by M. H. Brown, one of the mechanics of the hotel, who happened to be repairing the steam pipes. The bird is extraordinarily large, and brown, with white-tipped wings. Beneath its right wing is tattooed "San Francisco to San Diego."

According to Mr. Brown, who is a pigeon fancier, the bird evidently encountered a storm and became exhausted. He says it is probably of considerable value as it has an undecipherable registry number on a metal band clamped to its leg. Considerable interest has been evinced as to the ownership of the pigeon since local customs officials have been investigating the reported use of pigeon carriers in opium smuggling.

BASEBALL NOTES.

Fred Snodgrass of the Boston Braves was at the ball park yesterday, as was Slim Love of the New York Americans. Both plan to winter here, and will be back with their clubs next fall. Slim probably will be pitched regularly next season.

• • •

President Powers has been delegated to kick the opening ball at the game which will start the soccer season at Manual Arts High School grounds a week from tomorrow. He was yesterday signed for the honor by Joe Sword, president of the Southern California Soccer Association.

• • •

Jack Curley was out giving the athletes the O. O., and the scribes a cigar each.

• • •

Powers and Chance are considering the advisability of sending a telegram to Bill Clymer inviting him and his team to meet Los Angeles in a post-season series should the Angels cop. Clymer's Louisville club won the American Association pennant and then defeated Omaha, champion of the Western League.

Frank Dillon, accompanied by his wife, is up from Yucaipa for a few days. Report has it that Dillon is being groomed for a re-entry into Coast League ball.

In Frank Chance, Del Howard and Harry Wolverton, the Coast League boasts the greatest collection of pinch-hitting managers in any minor league. These men, while not playing regularly, have not lost their batting eye. All were .300 hitters in the majors, and are still capable of terrorizing the pitchers.

• • •

This chap, Bill Lane, is a comer and don't forget it. Bill didn't look so good in his early appearances here, being rather green and distressingly uncertain on fly balls. Since then he has been improving steadily. He is the first youngster that ever stepped into the Coast League and topped it in stolen bases his first season. Although it is not generally known, Chance came near trading Rowdy Elliott out of Lane several months ago. But for the fact that Rowly lost his job the deal might have gone through. Chance wanted Lane for next season, as he is to lose Wolter.

Bill Kenworthy has received word from Fielder Jones that he is to be played at third base for the St. Louis Browns next year. Jones must have seen Bill playing second in a certain series against Vernon. However, Kenworthy has picked up greatly in the meantime, and is displaying all his old class around the keystone sack. He may prove to be even better at third. Bill is accustomed to being booted around. He started the game as a pitcher, went to Washington as an outfielder and was translated into a second baseman by Wolverton. Now he hopes to be allowed to settle down and pass his remaining days in peace at third base.

• • •

Don Rader says Western League clubs drew hardly enough this year to meet the peanut bill. Two hundred a month is considered an enormous salary in that league, and it plays a short season.

• • •

There is a possibility that Emil Meusel, drafted by the Cubs from the Southern League, will be turned over to the Angels next season. He is an outfielder.

• • •

Buster Callan, one of Del Howard's newest catchers, like Zeb, McMullen, Meusel, Butler and Snodgrass, is a product of the local High schools. Manual Arts is his prep alma mater. Callan is almost a double for Rowdy Elliott, and some think that he bears a resemblance to John Bunny.

• • •

Joe Schultz, after getting one or more hits in nineteen straight games, failed to connect safely yesterday. Even so, on the averages, he is still the leading Angel slugger.

• • •

Big Henry, just back from an extended outing which reached from Market street to the Yosemite, was out to encourage the Angels with a few baritone blasts.

• • •

Joe Berger came near ruining the chances of the Angels in the seventh inning of the first game. With Kenworthy on first he threw his bat at the ball on the hit and run. The result was a single in right that put Kenny on third. Davis started a fast double play that pulled Ryan out.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENTS NUMEROUS IN THIS STATE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 14.—Twelve automobile accidents happened every day during the months of July, August and September, according to the report made today by H. A. French, superintendent of the State motor vehicle department. The total number of accidents was 1103, and caused death to 258 people and injuries to 1545. The statistics show further than 369 of the accidents, or 33.4 per cent., were due to speeding. The driver is blamed for 403 accidents. In 104 cases the cause was confusion on the part of pedestrians, 84 because of defects in machines, 51 because of poor roadway and 26 due to intoxicated drivers. The glare of headlights was blamed for 20 accidents. In 75 of the accidents the cars were driven by women.

AD WOLGAST IS HOT ON FREDDIE WELSH'S TRAIL.

BY DE WITT VAN COURT.

AD WOLGAST dropped into town this morning from Seattle, as full of fight as ever he was in his life.

His particular mission here is to arrange a match with the present title-holder, Freddy Welsh.

To say that the little Dutchman is sincere is putting it mildly. Ever since he lost his title to Willie Ritchie, he and many of his friends believe Ritchie won by the rankest kind of a "fluke."

Ad is tired of trying to arrange a second meeting with Ritchie. Willie dodged every offer made for a return match.

Wolgast then went after Freddy Welsh after he won the title from Ritchie in London. Like Ritchie, Welsh seems to be dodging the issue, from Ad's statements.

He also claims he made Welsh quit in Denver, looking up to Otto Floto like a dying cat, claiming a foul, which Floto allowed.

Wolgast demanded a doctor's examination about a half hour after the contest, which Welsh refused to permit.

Ad has been traveling over the country meeting any and every one in his class who were willing to meet him, from four rounds to twenty. His success has been indifferent.

He also claims that he is doing this more for the love of fighting and having something to do to keep him in good condition, with the expectation some day of getting Welsh into the ring with him for another chance at the lightweight title, than any other reason.

Some seem to think Ad is after the money more than another chance. But his many friends know that when he gives his word that it goes, and he is willing to back himself for a $10,000 side bet for a forty-five-round contest in Tia Juana with Welsh. In the presence of the writer Ad flashed ten $1000 bills which he is willing to place with any responsible party as soon as Freddy shows his sincere intentions of meeting him; the same to go as a side bet for the winner of the contest.

He is now endeavoring to make arrangements with Don Gritton and his partners, the San Diego fight promoters, for the match to take place in Tia Juana.

SPLENDID RACING AT RIVERSIDE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

RIVERSIDE, Oct. 14.—Splendid racing programmes have been arranged for Sunday afternoon and for Monday, the closing day of the County Fair. Aviator Eddie Musick of Venice, who gave an exhibition flight this afternoon for the entertainment of the big crowd, will repeat, doing some fancy aerial stunts tomorrow as a feature of the programme.

Splendid racing featured the day's programme and although the track is a bit heavy yet as a result of rains, close finishes gave the events a thrill which satisfied the spectators. Allie Lou of the Hemet stock farm won the free-for-all trot in three straight, 2:15¾, 2:15½ and 2:14½, being pushed to the closest heat of the day by Ben Cress, J. J. Campbell in the last heat.

The first heat of the 2:14 pace was won by Silver Tips, C. A. Short, in 2:12¾, but Ben Corbett, Jr., Blosser and Finley, took the next two each in 2:14 flat.

Jockey Nolan, up, on Tight Boy, took a nasty fall at the finish in the Riverside Derby, the classic of the week's running events, after he had ridden the mile on one stirrup. Casa Loma, Fay up, won the $500 purse with Tallow Dip, Chico up, a close second. Blue Dog, Lane up, won the quarter-mile in :25½.

JUNIOR COLLEGE BEATS CLUBMEN.

Slipping over the only touchdown of the game in the last five seconds of play, the Los Angeles Junior College eleven won from the Los Angeles Athletic Club huskies yesterday afternoon at Bovard field by the score of 6 to 0.

The first half of the game was featured by the smashing drives by the heavy clubmen, after which they failed to stand the pace and were slowly shoved into their own territory. The clubmen had one dandy chance in which to score. In the second quarter they had the ball on the Junior College 1-yard line but lost out on downs. After this they never had a chance.

During the last half of the game the Junior College boys, mainly through the sterling work of Cyril Tipton, bucked the ball over the club goal just before time was called. Isenberg failed to kick goal, ending the game, 6 to 0. Art Gilman, playing right half, was the star for the clubmen.

SANTA ANA AND REDLANDS TIE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SANTA ANA, Oct. 14.—A scoreless game was played here this afternoon by the fottball teams of the Santa Ana and Redlands high schools. Both teams were ragged on offensive and forward passes were hardly thought of, though it was an intercepted forward pass that gave fullback Weissmore of Redlands the ball in the next to last play of the game for a run half the length of the field.

LINCOLN HIGH WINS AN EASY VICTORY..

Coach Tommy Davis's Lincoln High warriors went through the L. A. Military Academy eleven on the noon for a 25 to 14 victory. The game was featured by a 95-yard run by Captain Davis of the Military Academy after intercepting a forward pass on his five-yard line in the second quarter.

IOWA AGGIES WIN.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

AMES (Iowa) Oct. 14.—Completely outplaying their opponents in every period of the game save the second, the Iowa State College of Agriculture football team defeated the Kansas University eleven today on Ames Field by a score of 13 to0.

SAN DIEGO SWAMPS ORANGE ELEVEN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN DIEGO, Oct. 14.—The San Diego High Varsity football squad massacred the Orange High gridironers here this afternoon, 84 to 6. The game was marked by numerous freak plays, long runs for touchdowns and steller playing on the part of the local eleven. This makes the third victory of the season for Coach Price's squad.

Bry "Pesky" Sprott was easily the star of the contest, as he was the greatest ground-gainer and point-scorer. He carried the ball over the Orange line five times. Deeds scored two touchdowns and Garber, Sampson, Baker, Frick and Randall one each for San Diego. Randall kicked eight goals, Garber one and one field goal.

Blanc took advantage of Randalls fumble and ran fifty yards for Orange's lone touchdown. Eckles of Orange was carried from the field with a broken ankle in the first five minutes of play.

ARMY ELEVEN BEATS HOLY CROSS EASILY.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WEST POINT (N. Y.) Oct. 14.—The Army won from Holy Cross today, 17 to 0. The Cadets outplayed their opponents from the start, but some loose handling of the ball at critical times and penalties for holding occasionally nullified fine work in advancing the ball.

YALE EASY VICTOR OVER LEHIGH SQUAD.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW HAVEN (Ct.) Oct. 14.—Yale downed Lehigh today 12 to 0 in a desperately fought game. The feature was a sensational 65-yard end run through a broken field for a touchdown by Legore. Half a doen Lehigh players tackled him but he shook them off. Bingham made Yale's other touchdown on a fifteen-yard plunge through tackle.

STANFORD RUGGERS BEAT PALO ALTO.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Oct. 14.—Stanford Rugby football team won a hotly contested game here today from the Palo Alto Athletic Club. The final score was 19 to 10. The Rugbyers from the Stockton High School took the Stanford third varsity team into camp 8 to 5 after the varsity game.

Coach Moody's Hollywood 125-pound eleven defeated the Sawtelle team yesterday on the Sawtelle field by a score of 38 to 0. Lahman scored three of the touchdowns, and was easily the star of the game. Roper crossed the line twice and Jackson once. Lee added two more points by kicking goal twice.

HARVARD WINS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CAMBRIDGE (Mass.) Oct. 14.—A football eleven from the University of North Carolina, coached by a Harvard graduate and equipped with Harvard plays, was no match for the Crimson team today and they lost 21 to 0.

SOUTHERNERS LOSE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

MADISON (Wis.) Oct. 14.—The Badgers had little trouble in disposing of South Dakota State College today, winning 28 to 3.

Rod Murphy of the Oaks looks to be the fastest fielding third baseman in the league.

Whittier Looses.

straight passes, one good, and each bringing ten to twenty yards, at last took the play down to the California ten-yard line. Whittier at length maneuvered to reach a position from which she could execute a place kick. Butler sent in from the bench to replace Fawcett brought the play to an end. A buck was tried. The next down brought another attempt at a place kick. Finch's boot failed, and perhaps this was the one mistake that lost the game to Whittier. Close, tight football with no chances taken might have given them a victory that they earned.

Then came a great run by Sharpe. Another of the dazzling plays that carried the bleachers into the air and scattered hats over the side lines. The ball ended its flying course into Sharpe's arms on the Whittier twenty-yard line.

Counting on their previous success with the forward pass, the Quakers' quarter began the play which lost him the game. Brooks intercepted the ball and broke through for a touchdown. Montgomery kicked it and the game was California's.

By this time the fog had rolled in over the hills. Lights were on everywhere. Only the white numbers on the California jerseys were distinct. They stood out almost like ghost figures.

They might have been laid on with phosphorescent paint like the numbers of a night watch. But the crowd, there must have been 3000 of them, forgot about the fog and the darkness, and when Whittier started its finish their shouts half flung the fog clouds back into Strawberry Canyon.

An exchange of punts, Brooks and Finch, with Whittier gaining the advantage. A pair of flying range bands to left revealed a forward pass, first to right for ten yards; then to left for a gain of fifteen yards. From the bleachers the flight of the ball could be hardly followed. Again the ball sailed over the grass for a ten-yard gain. But the fifth ended the display, for it fell short, and California took the ball and plunged into the Quakers for gains that took the ball past center as the final horn sounded. Summary:

MULTNOMAH IS AN EASY VICTIM.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

EUGENE (Or.) Oct. 14.—University of Oregon won from the Multnomah Athletic Club of Portland on the local gridiron this afternoon by a score of 28 to 0. After a scoreless first-quarter, in which Multnomah was unable to break through Oregon's interference, Oregon got down to business and rapidly tired out the clubmen. Tegert, for Oregon, was the star of the game.

HARVARD CADETS BEAT MONROVIA.

Harvard Military Academy won its first league football game of the season by beating the Monrovia squad yesterday by a score of 19 to 7.

Craig of Harvard scored the first touchdown on line bucks. Monrovia's score came in the third quarter when a pretty 30-yard forward pass resulted in a touchdown. Carey scored for Harvard again in the last quarter. Captain Ide kicked goal.

COMPANY CLAIMS CHAINS MUST GO.

Has the time arrived when chains, to prevent skidding, can be dispensed with?

An announcement made this week by the Keaton Tire & Rubber Company, is to the effect that Keaton non-skids are to be guaranteed—and the guarantee absolutely insures the owner of a car equipped with these tires against skidding. And then they go still further and offer to give a free demonstration by placing a pair of tires on any car, with no obligation on the part of owner to purchase them.

As the rainy season has set in early, it is predicted that the company will be overwhelmed with orders in a short time, as a result of the new tire and the liberal guarantee which accompanies it.

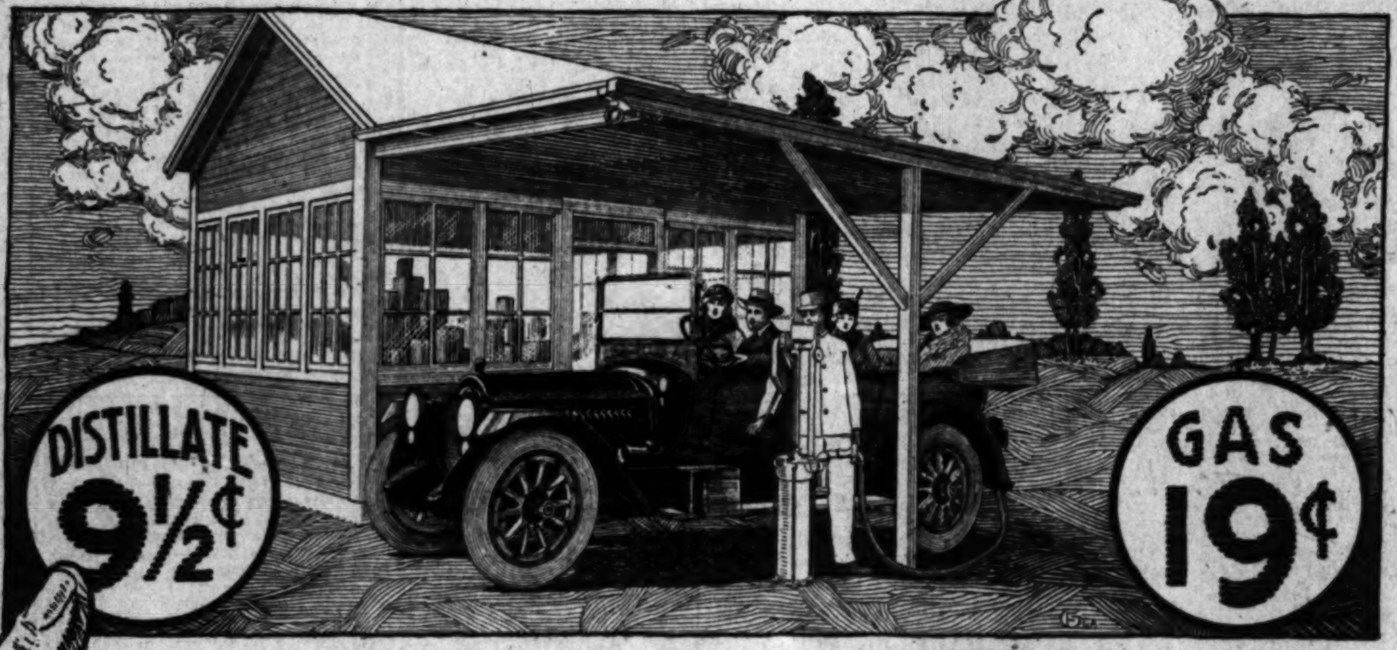
Another Exclusive Packard Twin-Six Improvement So far Reaching as to Revolutionize the Motor Industry



DISTILLATE 9½¢
GAS 19¢

The New PACKARD TWIN SIX STARTS and RUNS ON DISTILLATE

Owners of the new Packard Twin Six can now cut their fuel cost in half and at the same time secure greater power and efficiency.

The same Packard engineers who spent $600,000 in perfecting the world's greatest motor also spent nearly a year in perfecting a carburetion system that would efficiently handle the lower grades of gasoline.

But we have gone a step farther

Through tests and experiments in the Anthony Shops, we have discovered a further adjustment whereby this wonderful motor starts and operates on number one engine distillate.

Not as other cars have used or can use it, but an adjustment whereby it operates on distillate more efficiently than on gasoline.

Starts on it—Runs on it; smoother and cleaner in every way, with more power and better results.

In fact does away entirely with gasoline, thereby cutting the cost of fuel in half.

We will be glad to explain and demonstrate at any time.

THIS NEW PACKARD ADJUSTMENT IS ANOTHER EVIDENCE OF ANTHONY SERVICE.

1—"Now, isn't that too bad!" exclaimed General Gum-Gum, as he looked with dismay at the punctured rubber horse. "Here I have captured all of you and made you prisoners and I can't carry you home to have dinner with me!"

2—The General was on the point of tears when a strange man walked by, crying in a loud voice, "Automobiles to mend!" The Scarecrow called to him.

3—"If you can mend horseless carriages, can't you mend carriageless horses?" the Scarecrow asked him. "A person never knows until he tries," the automobile mender replied. "Trot out the carriageless horse."

4—The automobile mender proved to be very clever and it was not long before he had patched up the rubber horse and pumped him full of air. "I feel very much better," said the rubber horse as he frisked his broom tail.

5—The Scarecrow kissed the mender for patching up the rubber horse and promised to give him the first wooden dollar he found rolling up hill, but the mender told the Scarecrow that he never accepted any payment for helping any one in trouble.

6—General Gum-Gum was very anxious to get his prisoners home and as the rubber horse had to swim six miles across a lake of lemonade he asked Dickie, the Scarecrow and Mr. Twee Deedle to drum their heels against the rubber horse's sides to encourage him to hurry. The kind mender sat upon the ground and waved to them until they were out of sight.

COMMON SENSE in the HOME
EDITED by MARION HARLAND

A WORD FROM THE DEAF TO THE DEAF.

So many letters come to me from Cornerites afflicted with deafness that I believe the following communications will be of general interest. They ought to bring help and comfort to their readers. I print the longest one first. As will be seen, it was suggested by a letter from one of our deaf friends:

"How sorry I am for the dear sister signing herself 'Distressed.' I write this letter prompted by what she says and by the words of 'Aunt Maud,' but it is 'Distressed' whom I especially wish to reach. My dear, what would you do if you were blind?

"I was blind; then my sight came back and I lost my hearing. I have been deaf forty-three years and for the last six have been crippled with what some doctors call dropsy. It is so bad that I cannot do a great deal of walking.

"Yes, I agree with you. Those head noises are torture—ringing, pounding, and the like that never cease. But I've won the victory over all my trials and troubles. I certainly am reconciled to my deafness, and I make the best of my life. My dear, cheer up.

"I go out and have good times as a Christian should. I am secretary in our Sunday school, and for five years was treasurer in the church in the place we lived before we moved here. I can understand finely, although I cannot hear one sound of the voice. I can even play the piano; I crochet, and am busy all the time.

"When the dropsy doesn't make me so sick that I have to lie down I just won't give up and go to bed. I will keep up, and I feel that I have God's helping hand to sustain me in all. Read in Romans viii. and xxviii. how all things work together for good to those who love God. We don't know why we are afflicted, but God knows best and we can trust him and not be afraid.

"If I could only walk more I would be so happy, but even if I can't do that I don't go around with a sad face, weeping and crying. I am married and have six children. The youngest is 6 years old and the eldest 27, and I have never heard their voices nor that of my husband. He, too, is a cripple. He fell from a telegraph pole and one arm is fastened with wire and the other partially paralyzed, yet he can manage to take care of those that are still at home.

"As for you, Aunt Maud, God bless you! I wish there were more like you. I often wish I had a rolling chair to get around the block and to get to church, but I am happy even without that.

"I'll be glad to write to any one who sends a ready stamped envelope. I have a few crochet books also which I would give to some other one who lives in the silent world. Sometimes I feel as it were like being in a walled up room, but I remember the promise that there will be no afflictions and sorrow when we get to heaven.

MILLIE."

I call that a brave and helpful letter, and as I said in my preface to it, I feel it should be of help to all who read it.

The next epistle also strikes a note of cheer:

"I write to you to say how sorry I am to see so much discontent among the deaf who write to the Corner. If 'misery loves company,' here she is, but I am not 'misery'; I am 'company,' and I will try to entertain and to show that deafness does not shut out all the light of the world. I am deaf and have been so for years, and yet I have learned that deafness is not the greatest affliction. I have a friend who is crippled and one nearly blind, and I would not exchange crosses with them.

"Deafness, next to blindness, is the greatest hindrance. For an English scholar with a speaking knowledge of Spanish and a reading knowledge of French to have to resign a college position was hard. Canvassing for something reliable and special is good work for us. The open air exercise is excellent.

"In my 'long ago' I took an $80 book in four volumes with photogravures and 'made good.' A fine and well known house published it. And the crochet, knitting, and embroideries can keep us busy. We cannot nurse the sick, but we can read and sing to the convalescent and we can comfort the sorrowing and help the needy and make 'comfort bags' for the soldiers.

"Some of the unfortunate deaf ones may not count as many blessings as I can, but we can all count what God has done for each one of us. Keep busy and don't fret! Fretting killed a cat—or was it worry?

"Just now I was called into the kitchen to roll pie crust thin because my arm is stronger than my daughter's. There is something I can do in spite of deafness! I go to town alone and if the crossing is crowded I ask some nice looking person to allow me to cross with her. You don't know what sweet answers I get and how my arm is taken and I am led across. One woman with a young baby pulled me back from danger one day. I looked for her in the crowd, but before I could thank her she was gone. Yes, the deaf are objects of pity and kindness.

"I have found one appliance that helps my hearing: it is ugly and looks like a dust pan, but all helps are cumbrous, and this one cannot be hung around the neck. I inclose the advertisement of the article to which I refer. I hope I may have given some cheer to some one and I will sign myself,

"ONE OF THEM."

If cheer has not been conveyed to the readers of this it must be because they are deaf of spirit as well as of bodily hearing. Both this writer and the other correspondent are evidently determined to turn their clouds inside out and see the silver lining. The advice not to fret is admirable. I believe the correct form of the old proverb is that care killed a cat—but what is care but another form of worry and fretting?

One of the details which impresses me much about the first letter is that the writer was evidently not in good health. Discomfort of any sort almost always shows itself in the spirits and one hardly expects as bright an outlook from a deaf invalid as from one who is in good physical condition except for deafness. If "Millie" can view the world and circumstances with courage, those who are no worse off than she in bodily plight should surely show equal force and pluck. And it is a great thing to be able to pick out the advantages of the situation and to be thankful that one has strength enough to roll out the pie crust even if the hearing is defective.

A third letter differs a little from the others, but sounds the same note of optimism:

"I am sorry for all the deaf people who, like myself, cannot hear the voices of those they love, the songs of the birds, the notes of music, and all the beautiful varieties of heavenly sounds that are given to those whose ears are good. But we who have been called the 'barred out' have one great advantage over those with perfect hearing. We lose a lot of ugly noises.

"When I read in the papers of the persons who complain of the racket made by the early milk carts and trucks, of the banging of garbage cans on the pavements by the scavengers, of the yelling of the fruit hucksters and scissors grinders, and old clothes men, of the tooting of the automobile horns, of the discords of the phonographs, and pianolas in the adjoining houses, of the dreadful notes emitted by the man on the next block who is learning to play the cornet, and the child across the street taking music lessons, of the yells of the boys playing in the vacant lot. I just hug myself with satisfaction.

"Do I have any of these annoyances? Not a bit of it! A friend of mine who lives opposite is kept awake until all hours by the pounding of a piano at an open air motion picture show. I tuck myself into my little bed at any hour I choose, nestle down in my pillows, and go to sleep, confident that no noises from outside will disturb my peaceful slumbers! I grant that I, too, am bothered by head noises and ringing in my ears, but I get used to those in a way and would probably not know what to do if they were stopped. You recollect the tale of the woman whose husband snored so loud that after his death the only way she could get to sleep was by having some one grind a coffee mill in the room with her?

"That is something the way with me. If my head noises stopped I would probably lie awake to listen for them. As it is, I know my troubles and do not have to expect new ones sprung upon me at any time!

CONTENTED."

I wish "Contented" had given her name and address. I would like to write to her personally, for I think that a woman with such a spirit, reinforced by an evident sense of humor, would be well worth knowing. Has any one else among our deaf readers ever looked at the subject of this infirmity in just this light? And what do such sufferers think of it?

The last letter for which I have space today takes up our topic from a different angle.

"I would like to say that I am grateful you have published requests from the deaf. There have been a good many remarks lately in the Corner about lip reading. If the time comes when you do not care to publish more of these for a brief time, if you will give my name and address I will write brief items that may help.

"I am an established teacher of lip reading and I know what it means to be deaf, and although I do not have much free time, every appeal of those who are deaf or who are discouraged because of deafness touches me in a peculiar way.

"There is one request I would like to make—that when anything is sent to a Cornerite the recipient send a card or letter showing that it has been received. Is that asking too much?

L. R. C."

I do not think it is asking too much at all, and I trust that if this Cornerite is able to aid deaf members of the constituency they will acknowledge her kindness by a letter or card.

One question I would like to put in connection with deafness. Do we all make it easy for those living with us when they are hard of hearing? Are we not impatient and intolerant, cross and petulant when they fail to hear us and slow to believe they could not hear if they would? I am interested to receive replies to this query.

MARION HARLAND'S HELPING HAND.

When an address or other information is wanted by mail a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send parcels to the office.

An Exchange of Patterns.

"SOME time ago I wrote to the Helping Hand, and I want to thank you now for the addresses sent me. I have found some good friends, sent magazines, received baby clothes, and exchanged work. I have also formed a lovely correspondence. Will you please print my request for exchange of crochet patterns or embroidery patterns? I will also do any kind of embroidery or crochet for thread or material for my own use. I have a little girl 9 years old and I embroider and crochet all her clothes. I would like to get in touch with a mother of another girl of the same age who would be willing to furnish material for dresses for both children in return for my embroidery and crochet and I would also make the garments entirely. I should also like the address of any shut-ins whom you think would care for letters and camera views and I would send some pretty shells to an invalid or crippled child. I am strong myself and have six healthy children, so my heart aches for those less fortunate. I should be glad to receive letters from any of the Cornerites. I believe I could write them interesting letters. When I wrote to you before we were on a farm, but on account of continued drought had to leave. I dearly love the Helping Hand, and when the paper comes the children and I almost fight over it. They want the children's page and I want the Corner. I usually win in the 'fight' long enough to read the letters and cut out the recipes for my scrapbook. I hope you will be able soon to print my request for embroidery or crochet. I would certainly appreciate work of any kind, as I am out of town and it is rather lonesome.

"MRS. B. P. R."

As I have said before, I am always glad to receive these testimonials to the help the Corner has brought into the lives of our constituency, and this is a generous tribute. I am sure I shall get requests for the address by those who wish to receive the views and letters offered, and I hope the woman with a little girl of 9 may also present herself to take advantage of the exchange requested. I was much interested in the letter inclosed for my perusal and am most happy to learn of the help Mrs. B. P. R. was able to give to the correspondent whose acknowledgment she sent to me.

Made Money Making Marmalade.

"Some of the women who are seeking means of self-support may be interested to hear of the following: I know a woman who was left unprovided for and with two children to care for and educate. She made a grapefruit marmalade which is easily prepared and is inexpensive. She put it up in pretty jars and sold it for 25 cents a jar. I give here the directions for making:

"Slice grapefruit thin, cover with cold water, and let it stand for twenty-four hours. Put it on and boil for fifteen minutes. Weigh pound for pound of sugar and fruit, or it can be measured cup for cup. Be sure to measure both the fruit and the juice together. Put it back on the fire and let it boil forty-five minutes more, which makes one hour in all. Two or three grapefruit made up at a time are better than a dozen, as when so much is made the marmalade is too dark. It is delicious and beautiful. If each glass or jelly mold is sold for only 10 cents one could clear about 7 cents on each six ounces, as one grapefruit will make four six ounce glasses.

"I hope you received the card correcting the recipe for hot milk sponge cake. I give it here again: Beat two eggs until lemon colored; add one cup of sugar; beat well. Then mix in one cup of flour sifted once with one teaspoon of salt and one and a half level teaspoons of baking powder. Mix in then half a cup of hot milk, add one tablespoon of shortening, and flavor to taste.

"I have no trouble in keeping ants away with a good ant paste I use. As it is a manufactured article, I suppose you cannot print the name of it, but I would like to say with regard to any ant paste used that it should be kept out of reach of the children.

"Thank you for the talk on 'Worry.' It did me a world of good. L. M. F."

And thank you for telling me so. It always does me "a world of good" to know that my words have been of help or cheer to some of the constituency. I am glad to get the excellent and simple recipe for grapefruit marmalade and I am sure it will be of practical assistance to others, even if they only wish to make it for home consumption. I think possibly you are a little liberal in thinking 7 cents profit can be made on a glass sold for 10 cents, when you consider the sugar as well as the fruit, the fire, and the time required; but it is certainly an inexpensive delicacy even if it comes to 10 cents a glass.

Something About Homesteading.

"I would like to get into correspondence with people who know something about homesteading, either by experience or observation. I can, of course, get all the legal part from the government land offices, but nothing personal. I wish some of the readers who can give me first hand information would write to me. I would be grateful. As I am a widow, still young and without children, I would not need to be restricted to any part of the country. Now for reciprocal information. If when making corn meal mush the meal is first wet in cold water, it will not be lumpy when stirred into the boiling water in which it is cooked. Also, in making little cup cakes, when I want to put raisins in I first put about a tablespoonful of batter in the greased muffin tin, then drop in three or four raisins, putting another spoonful of batter on top. By this plan the raisins do not sink to the bottom or stick to the sides and burn. I thank the Corner for all the benefits I have received from it. Their name is legion! MRS. F. D."

We have had many homesteaders among the Cornerites and I am sure some one of them can supply the information Mrs. F. D. asks. We thank her for her helpful hints and pleasant acknowledgment.

Friends Through the Corner.

"It has been several weeks since I wrote and although I know you have not time for long letters I must write and tell you something about the friends I have made through the Corner. One is a dear little girl of 16 who lives on a farm and to whom I sent a copy of Shakespeare. Another is a young wife and mother-to-be who became my friend through a Bible I sent her. Still a third is a dear woman of 45 whose request for silk pieces I answered. I have written to a deaf Cornerite, too, who asked for magazines, of which I have quite a number to spare, but I have as yet received no answer from her. You can see by all this that I am a new member, but I am sure there can be no more enthusiastic or contented Cornerite anywhere than I. I have always read the Corner and wanted so badly to help, but as I am only a young girl I felt that the work of the Corner was for older people and did not realize how much good the young people could do. I am glad that I finally did realize it, however, and that I have been able to do even so small a part in your great work of happiness and comfort, and I shall always try to do all that is in my power. I wish that more young people felt as I do, but perhaps I am more serious than others of my age and it may be that they don't read the Corner. Of course I know now that there are a good many youthful Cornerites, but I would so love to know there were lots and lots of them. Now for the business part of the letter. I am inclosing several clippings and I would like to have the addresses on them and would appreciate a prompt response. I do not wish to complain, but heretofore my letters have not been answered for such a while that I would like to know if it is my fault or yours. A. O."

This is a delightful record of helpful enthusiasm and, with the writer, I wish we could get more youthful Cornerites. There is no age limit among our constituency, and no one is too young or too old to be of service. I am charmed to learn of the help that this member has given, and I trust she may go on with constant vigor. The addresses she asked for were sent promptly, and I am sorry there has ever been any delay about her letters. She and others must bear in mind that there are hundreds and thousands of letters, literally, pouring in to the Corner all the time. Occasionally there are unavoidable hindrances, but it is my effort to get them all answered as quickly as possible in the order in which they come into my hands. With all this I have once in a while to plead for patience.

Some Sheet Music.

"I should like to have some sheet music, sacred, instrumental, or songs, if any one has a supply which she or he no longer cares for. I am anxious to obtain such music and might possibly have something to give in exchange or return. P. H."

Every household containing musicians is likely to have an accumulation of music which is no longer used. Some of the pieces which are only in the way and take up room which is needed for later compositions might well be sent to the writer of foregoing letter.

Indoors All His Life.

"I would much like to hear from some of the Cornerites who have old or discarded negatives that pictures can be printed from. I have been shut indoors all my life and have never had the privilege of going about and taking pictures, although I have learned to print them quite well. I would like views of cities, parks, buildings, or landscapes. I will pay cost of packing and sending if there are those in the Corner who have negatives which they can spare.

"RUSSELL."

This request touches me deeply. When a shut-in has learned to do something to help pass the weary hours and accompanies his request for the means to do this with no pleas for pity it seems that the least those can do who are well and strong and have all outdoors at their command, so to speak, is to help him all they can. I shall hope to have prompt requests for Russell's address.

Old and Helpless.

"Will you please insert this in your Corner to help a cripple? She has a fifteen or sixteen inch clipped twist of hair, brown, sprinkled with grey, weight about two ounces, for which she would make something useful to a helpless, aged one whose helplessness makes her quite dependent. I expect she could get some brown combings rather longer to go with it. Please send self-addressed stamped envelope when writing to her. I wrote to the woman about the air cushion, but never heard from her. If it is not too presuming, I'd ask you to add to the above a request for a cast-off piano revolving stool. One would be a convenience to me to hold heavy books and magazines. If you will, I'll certainly appreciate your kindness. I do enjoy reading the Corner. M. A. R."

I am not sure that there will be any satisfactory reply to the first application, but stranger things than this have happened in the Corner, and so I print the request in faith. There seems more likelihood of the piano stool being bestowed.

Classical Studies for Piano.

"I wonder if any Cornerite has some classical studies for the piano. I should be glad to have such sent to me, and artistic material of any kind would be acceptable. K."

I am sure there must be such studies as K. asks, and I shall hope to receive requests for her address.

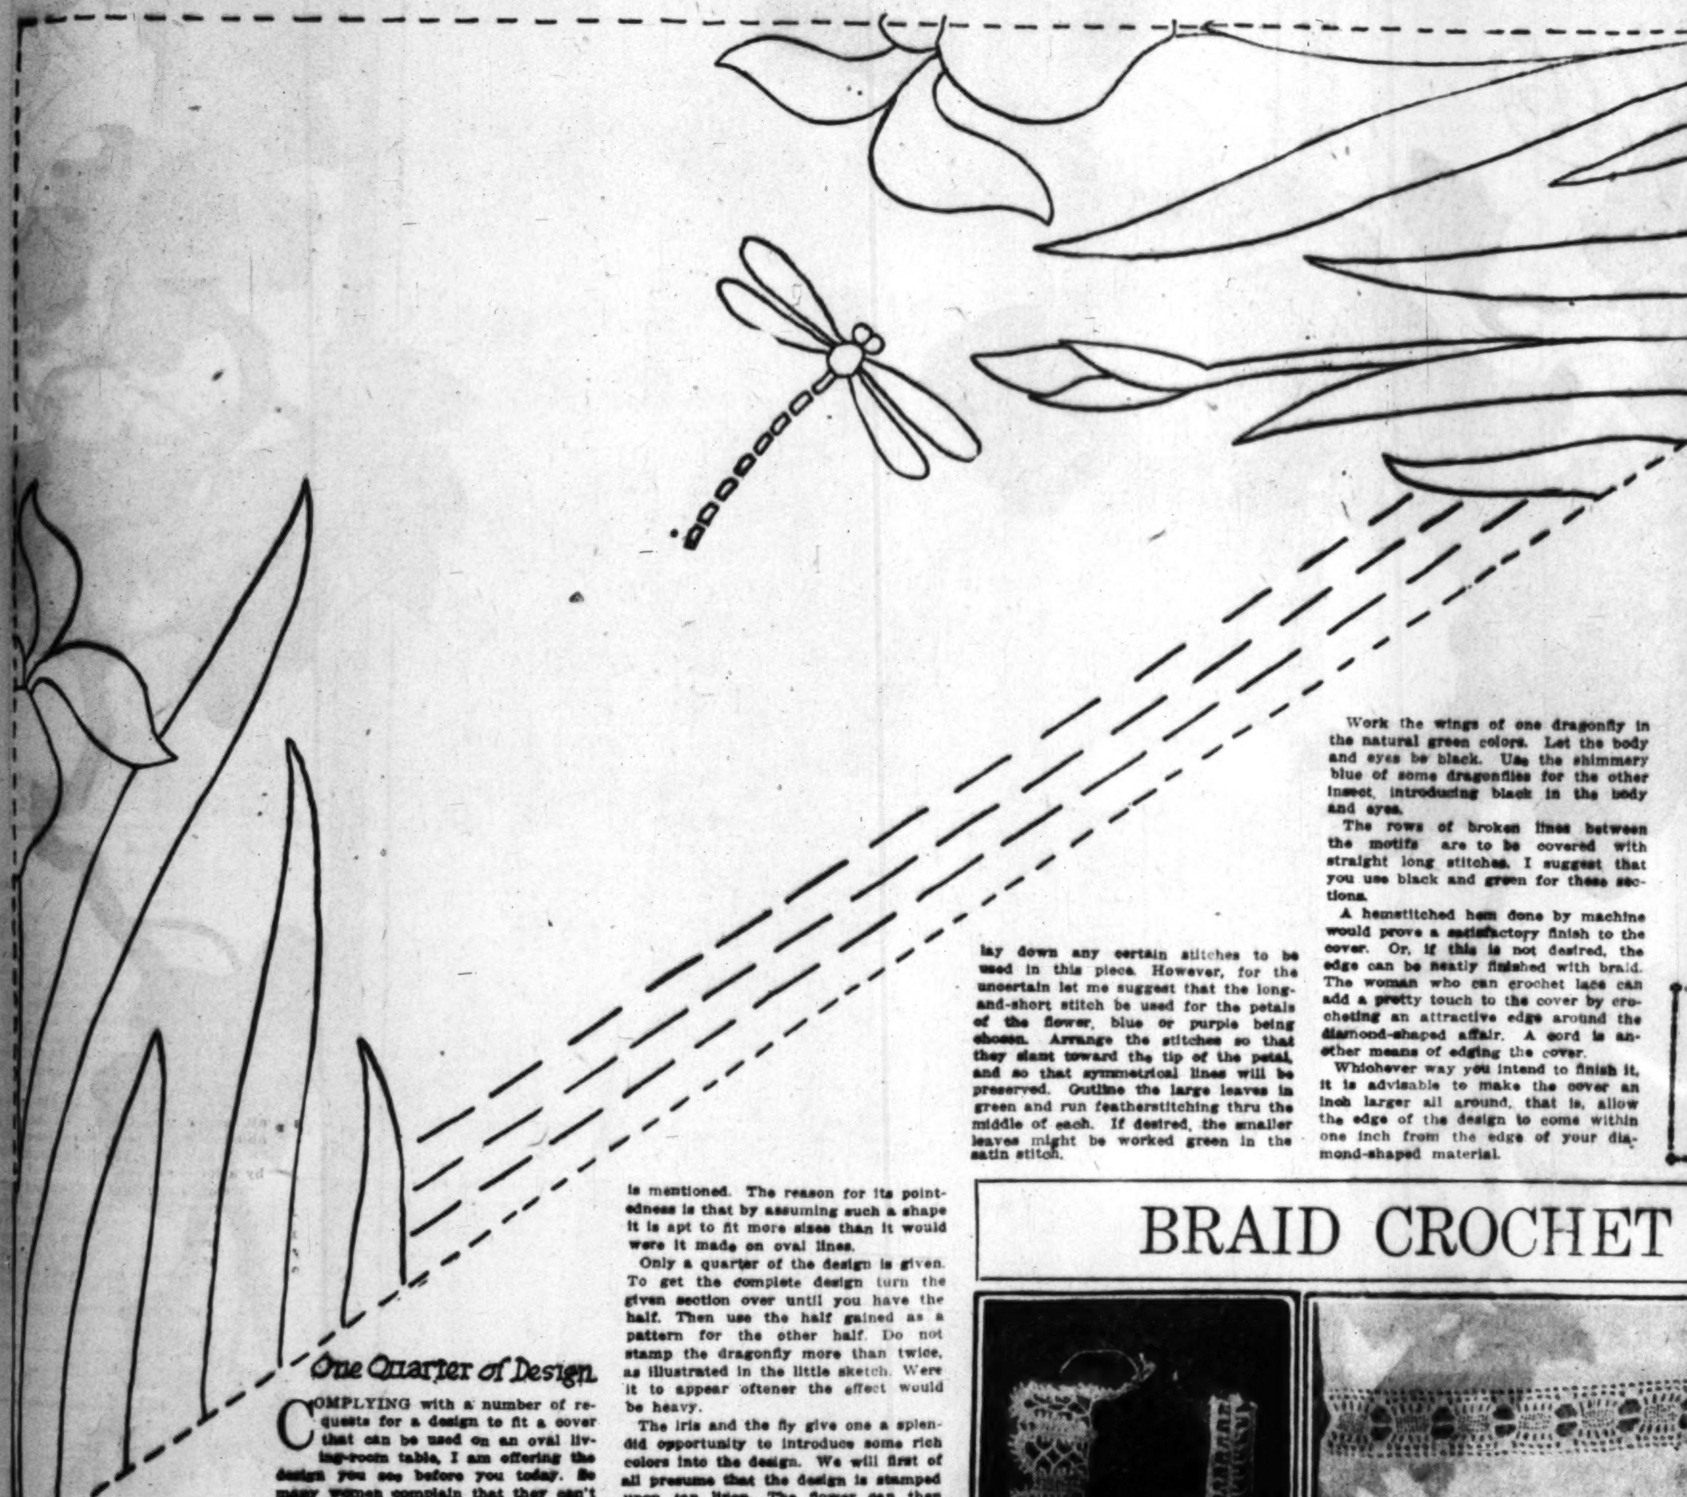
FOR THE INDUSTRIOUS NEEDLEWOMAN

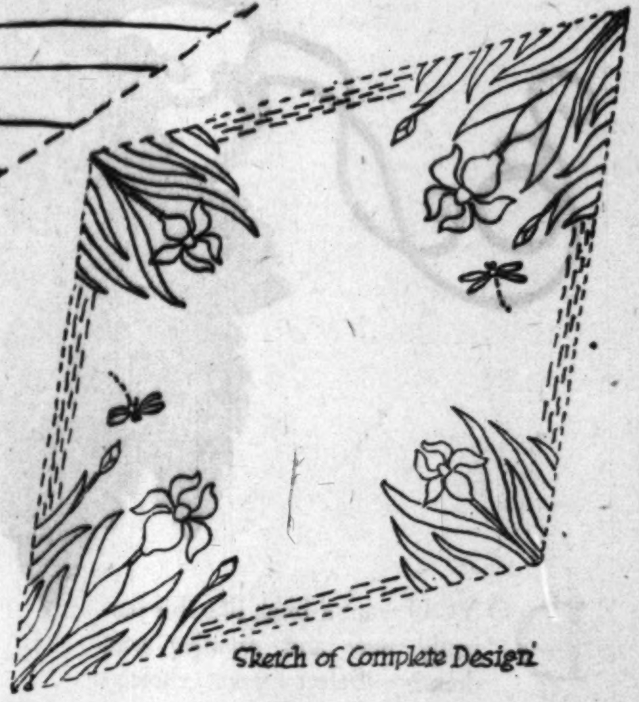
BY ADELAIDE BYRD

A COVER TO FIT THE OVAL TABLE

DESIGNED BY C. IDA FERRIS



One Quarter of Design.



Sketch of Complete Design.

COMPLYING with a number of requests for a design to fit a cover that can be used on an oval living-room table, I am offering the design you see before you today. So many women complain that they can't find anything large enough or of the proper oval shape to serve the purpose. You may wonder why the shape of this design is not oval, since the oval table is mentioned. The reason for its pointedness is that by assuming such a shape it is apt to fit more sizes than it would were it made on oval lines.

Only a quarter of the design is given. To get the complete design turn the given section over until you have the half. Then use the half gained as a pattern for the other half. Do not stamp the dragonfly more than twice, as illustrated in the little sketch. Were it to appear oftener the effect would be heavy.

The iris and the fly give one a splendid opportunity to introduce some rich colors into the design. We will first of all presume that the design is stamped upon tan linen. The flower can then be embroidered in the natural lead blue or rich purple of the flower. There is so much liberty allowed in embroidering that it hardly seems necessary to lay down any certain stitches to be used in this piece. However, for the uncertain let me suggest that the long-and-short stitch be used for the petals of the flower, blue or purple being chosen. Arrange the stitches so that they slant toward the tip of the petal, and so that symmetrical lines will be preserved. Outline the large leaves in green and run featherstitching thru the middle of each. If desired, the smaller leaves might be worked green in the satin stitch.

Work the wings of one dragonfly in the natural green colors. Let the body and eyes be black. Use the shimmery blue of some dragonflies for the other insect, introducing black in the body and eyes.

The rows of broken lines between the motifs are to be covered with straight long stitches. I suggest that you use black and green for these sections.

A hemstitched hem done by machine would prove a satisfactory finish to the cover. Or, if this is not desired, the edge can be neatly finished with braid. The woman who can crochet lace can add a pretty touch to the cover by crocheting an attractive edge around the diamond-shaped affair. A cord is another means of edging the cover.

Whichever way you intend to finish it, it is advisable to make the cover an inch larger all around, that is, allow the edge of the design to come within one inch from the edge of your diamond-shaped material.

FOUND AT LAST

THAT'S what will be said of the design offered today because it is intended to fit a cover for an oval table of any dimensions. Not only is it suitable for the oval table—it will show to great advantage on a square or oblong table, too.

Embroidered Neckwear

YOU girls who have never had the courage to embroider something large should be inspired now to try to add a few stitches to your neckwear. Embroidered neckwear is very stylish, but as the addition of handwork means an increase in the price of ready-made wear, it behooves the economical and progressive girl to do her own embroidering.

A very attractive collar in the popular rectangular shape can be made of sheer white lawn. To the edge of the collar sew fine lace insertion. At regular intervals around the edges of the collar embroider colored dots.

So many new models are made of net. The material is well liked, because it is soft and becoming and launders exceptionally well, if carefully done. On a collar of net one could easily embroider four, five or six petaled flowers. If one [illegible], the design can be original, but if one needs a pattern, one can use a section of a design found in any embroidery book.

[illegible] beading can be used successfully to beautify a collar. This, in conjunction with hand embroidery, would greatly multiply the value of a collar.

A very unique and effective collar can be made from a square of net, around which is joined an embroidered band of lawn or linen. To the edge of the lawn a lace edge can be joined to further elaborate the model.

If one has not the time nor the ability to work out one's neckwear, the next best thing is to buy ready-made models and elaborate them. Or, as one woman frequently does, a machine-embroidered collar can be bought and hand stitches can be placed over the machine ones, the latter forming a padding for the hand stitches.

How to Transfer

HERE are suggestions for transferring the design before you to any material.

Perhaps the easiest way is the "window-pane" method. This is successful when the material is thin, like linen, lawn, etc. Pin the sheet of paper and the material together and hold them up against the glass of a window. With a sharp pencil draw on the material the design, which can be easily seen thru the cloth. If one-half of the design is given, unpin the paper and turn the other side to the fabric.

If you have carbon paper you should place the sheet between the fabric and the paper. The latter is on top. With a sharp pencil go over the outline of the design. The impression will be left on the linen and will last until

Chemises and Camisoles

IT IS natural that every girl should crave dainty underwear, but it is usually impossible for the average girl to buy the attractive models shown in the shops. By making her own garments, a girl can acquire some of these things which she has long admired.

There is a variety of material from which the home sewer can make selections. Nainsook, fine lawn, silk muslin, crepe de chine and Italian silk are all admirable.

Hemstitching is a successful means for elaborating underwear. It is practical, too, in that it can be done so cheaply by machine and it wears much better than lace. If one has the time, hand embroidery is especially appropriate for underwear, particularly in these days of sheer blouses. An expensive blouse or frock is marred by shabby underwear or underwear which is cheap and showy.

The liberty to wear colored underwear has led some girls astray. They abuse the right and make themselves conspicuous by wearing beneath thin blouses camisoles or chemises of brilliant pinks and blues. Now either color in a dainty shade is rather attractive and lends beauty to a blouse or dress.

One little tip in the making of the chemise or camisole may prove helpful to the home sewer. That is to be sure to place the shoulder straps sufficiently over the shoulders to prevent them from slipping, thus causing much annoyance to the wearer. Pin them on first and see if they fit comfortably.

Embroidered shoulder straps are a feature of many new chemises. These are sometimes edged with lace. Ribbon straps are very much in favor, too.

A chemise which is so simple that a child could make it is made from a straight piece of material folded in half the length of the goods. The sides are stitched down to within a few inches of the bottom and the top is finished with beading, lace or whatever one wishes to use. Along the folded line the material is cut to form holes large enough for the legs to pass thru. The bottom, at the sides, can be shaped if desired, and the rough edges can be concealed with lace or beading. A touch of hand embroidery across the front and the addition of shoulder straps are all that are needed to complete the garment.

The Craze for Color

THE craze for color in the embroidery field is just as strong as ever. This fact seems inconsistent with the condition of dyes, but nevertheless it is and therefore must be reckoned with. The best thing to preserve the colored wools, cottons or materials used by embroiderers is to remember the various things that can be employed to set or to brighten the original color.

Yellow is one color which can never be depended upon and should therefore be treated with great care.

While a knowledge of chemistry would help in the treatment of colors, a few general rules can be depended upon to give satisfaction. For all general purposes salt or vinegar give excellent results. Allow one teaspoonful of salt to one quart of water. After the salt is dissolved soak the fabric in the solution at least an hour, and then rinse thoroly in three waters to remove all traces of salt.

Vinegar is considered better for dark colors. It has frequently proved successful in restoring faded colors. Allow one-fourth cup of vinegar to one quart of water.

Sugar of lead is splendid for delicate greens, blues and tans. It is used in the proportion of one teaspoonful of sugar of lead to one quart of water.

If there are any spots and stains on the fabric, these should be removed before washing the material. Perhaps among the commonest are fruit stains. These will usually disappear if the stained portion is held tightly over a basin and hot water is poured over and thru it.

On stains that cannot be classified it is usually best to rub them slightly with a pad dipped in a very weak lukewarm soap solution to each quart of which has been added a teaspoonful of water of ammonia. When you are ready to wash the garment do not use any strong soap, and never put the soap directly on the fabric.

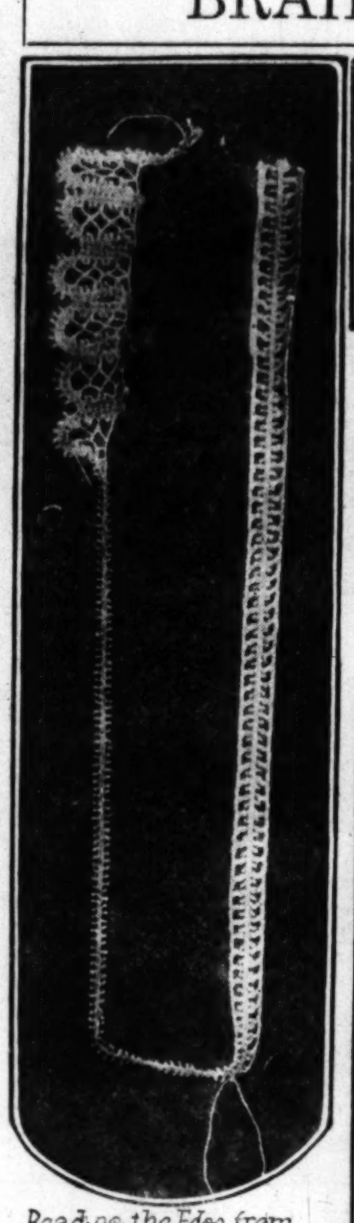
A Practical Gift

ONE cannot gaze at a dainty bit of embroidery without immediately calling to mind some girl friend who is about to be married and who would appreciate a similar piece of work. This is especially true of the towel set, which combines beauty and utility. The set consists of three towels. The first is intended for silver, and in order that it will not be used for anything else, it has knives, forks and spoons embroidered on one end. The edges are finished with scallops buttonholed in blue to match the color used to outline the utensils stamped on it.

The second towel is intended for one's tea set and is indelibly stamped with sugar bowl, teapot and a cup and saucer, which are also embroidered in blue. The ends of this towel are elaborated with crocheted lace.

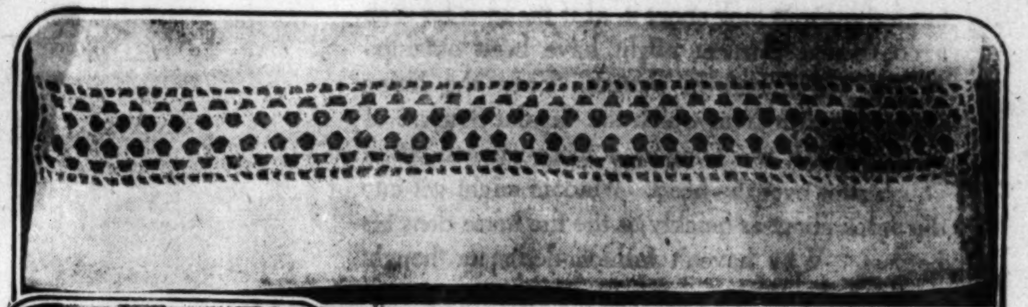
Glasses, too, demand a towel all their very own, so the third towel has tumblers and goblets embroidered in black and white on one end. Hemstitching is used to finish the edges of this one.

BRAID CROCHET AND ITS USES

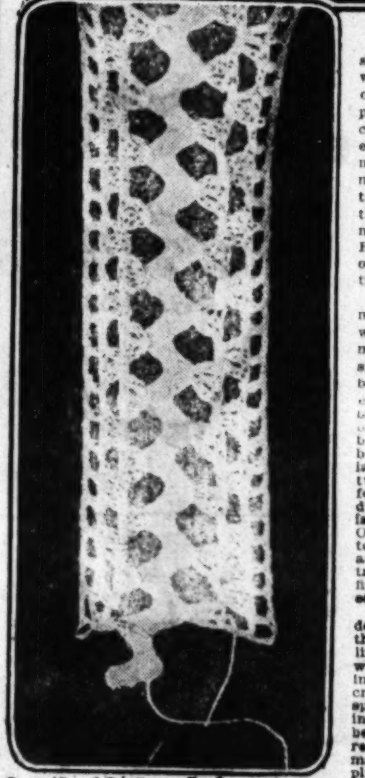


Beading the Edge from "Feather Edge" Braid

Novelty Braid Worked Into An Insertion



Towel Border from Rickrack and Crochet



Detail of Rickrack Insertion.

THIS braid crochet might be defined as a use of crochet stitches with some fancy braid as a basis upon which to work. It is a saving of time, inasmuch as the braid forms a large part of the pattern, and the stitches needed to complete the design are usually of the simplest variety. These braid patterns make excellent wearing edges and insertions for towels, bed linen and even lingerie.

You are probably familiar with the coronation braiding, and also the rickrack braid used in conjunction with crochet. Have you ever seen what a pretty edge the novelty braid used sometimes for the old "Renaissance" work, so popular some years ago, can make with a few crochet stitches? The towel photographed with the narrow edge shows this braid used very prettily. The original braid is a succession of small disks, each disk joined with a tiny length of twisted cord. Now, to make the edge which is set into the towel, you simply take the crochet hook and into one side of each little disk, or motif, take about six groups of two double crochets each, with no chain between. Make a chain of two between each twelve doubles, and proceed to next motif. When the sufficient length of braid has been thus treated, chain five for a turn and come back, making a filet mesh on this foundation, making a double crochet between each two of the preceding row, and four on the chain between the motifs. On the next row make all open filet meshes. Repeat the whole three rows on the other side of the braid, and your insertion is complete.

The second towel shows an insertion made from rickrack braid, a detail of which is shown, so that the crocheter may follow it the more easily. This starts out with the braid for a working basis, using three double crochets in each point of the braid, with one chain between. The next row has three doubles made on the chain between the doubles in the preceding row, with a chain between each group of these three. The last row is a filet mesh with a double between each group of the three in the foregoing row and a double on the middle of the group of three. The process is repeated on the other side of the braid. Observe how this insertion is set into a towel, at the ends. The last stitches across the width of the insertion are treated like a chain foundation for a finish, which will not stretch at the edges of the towel.

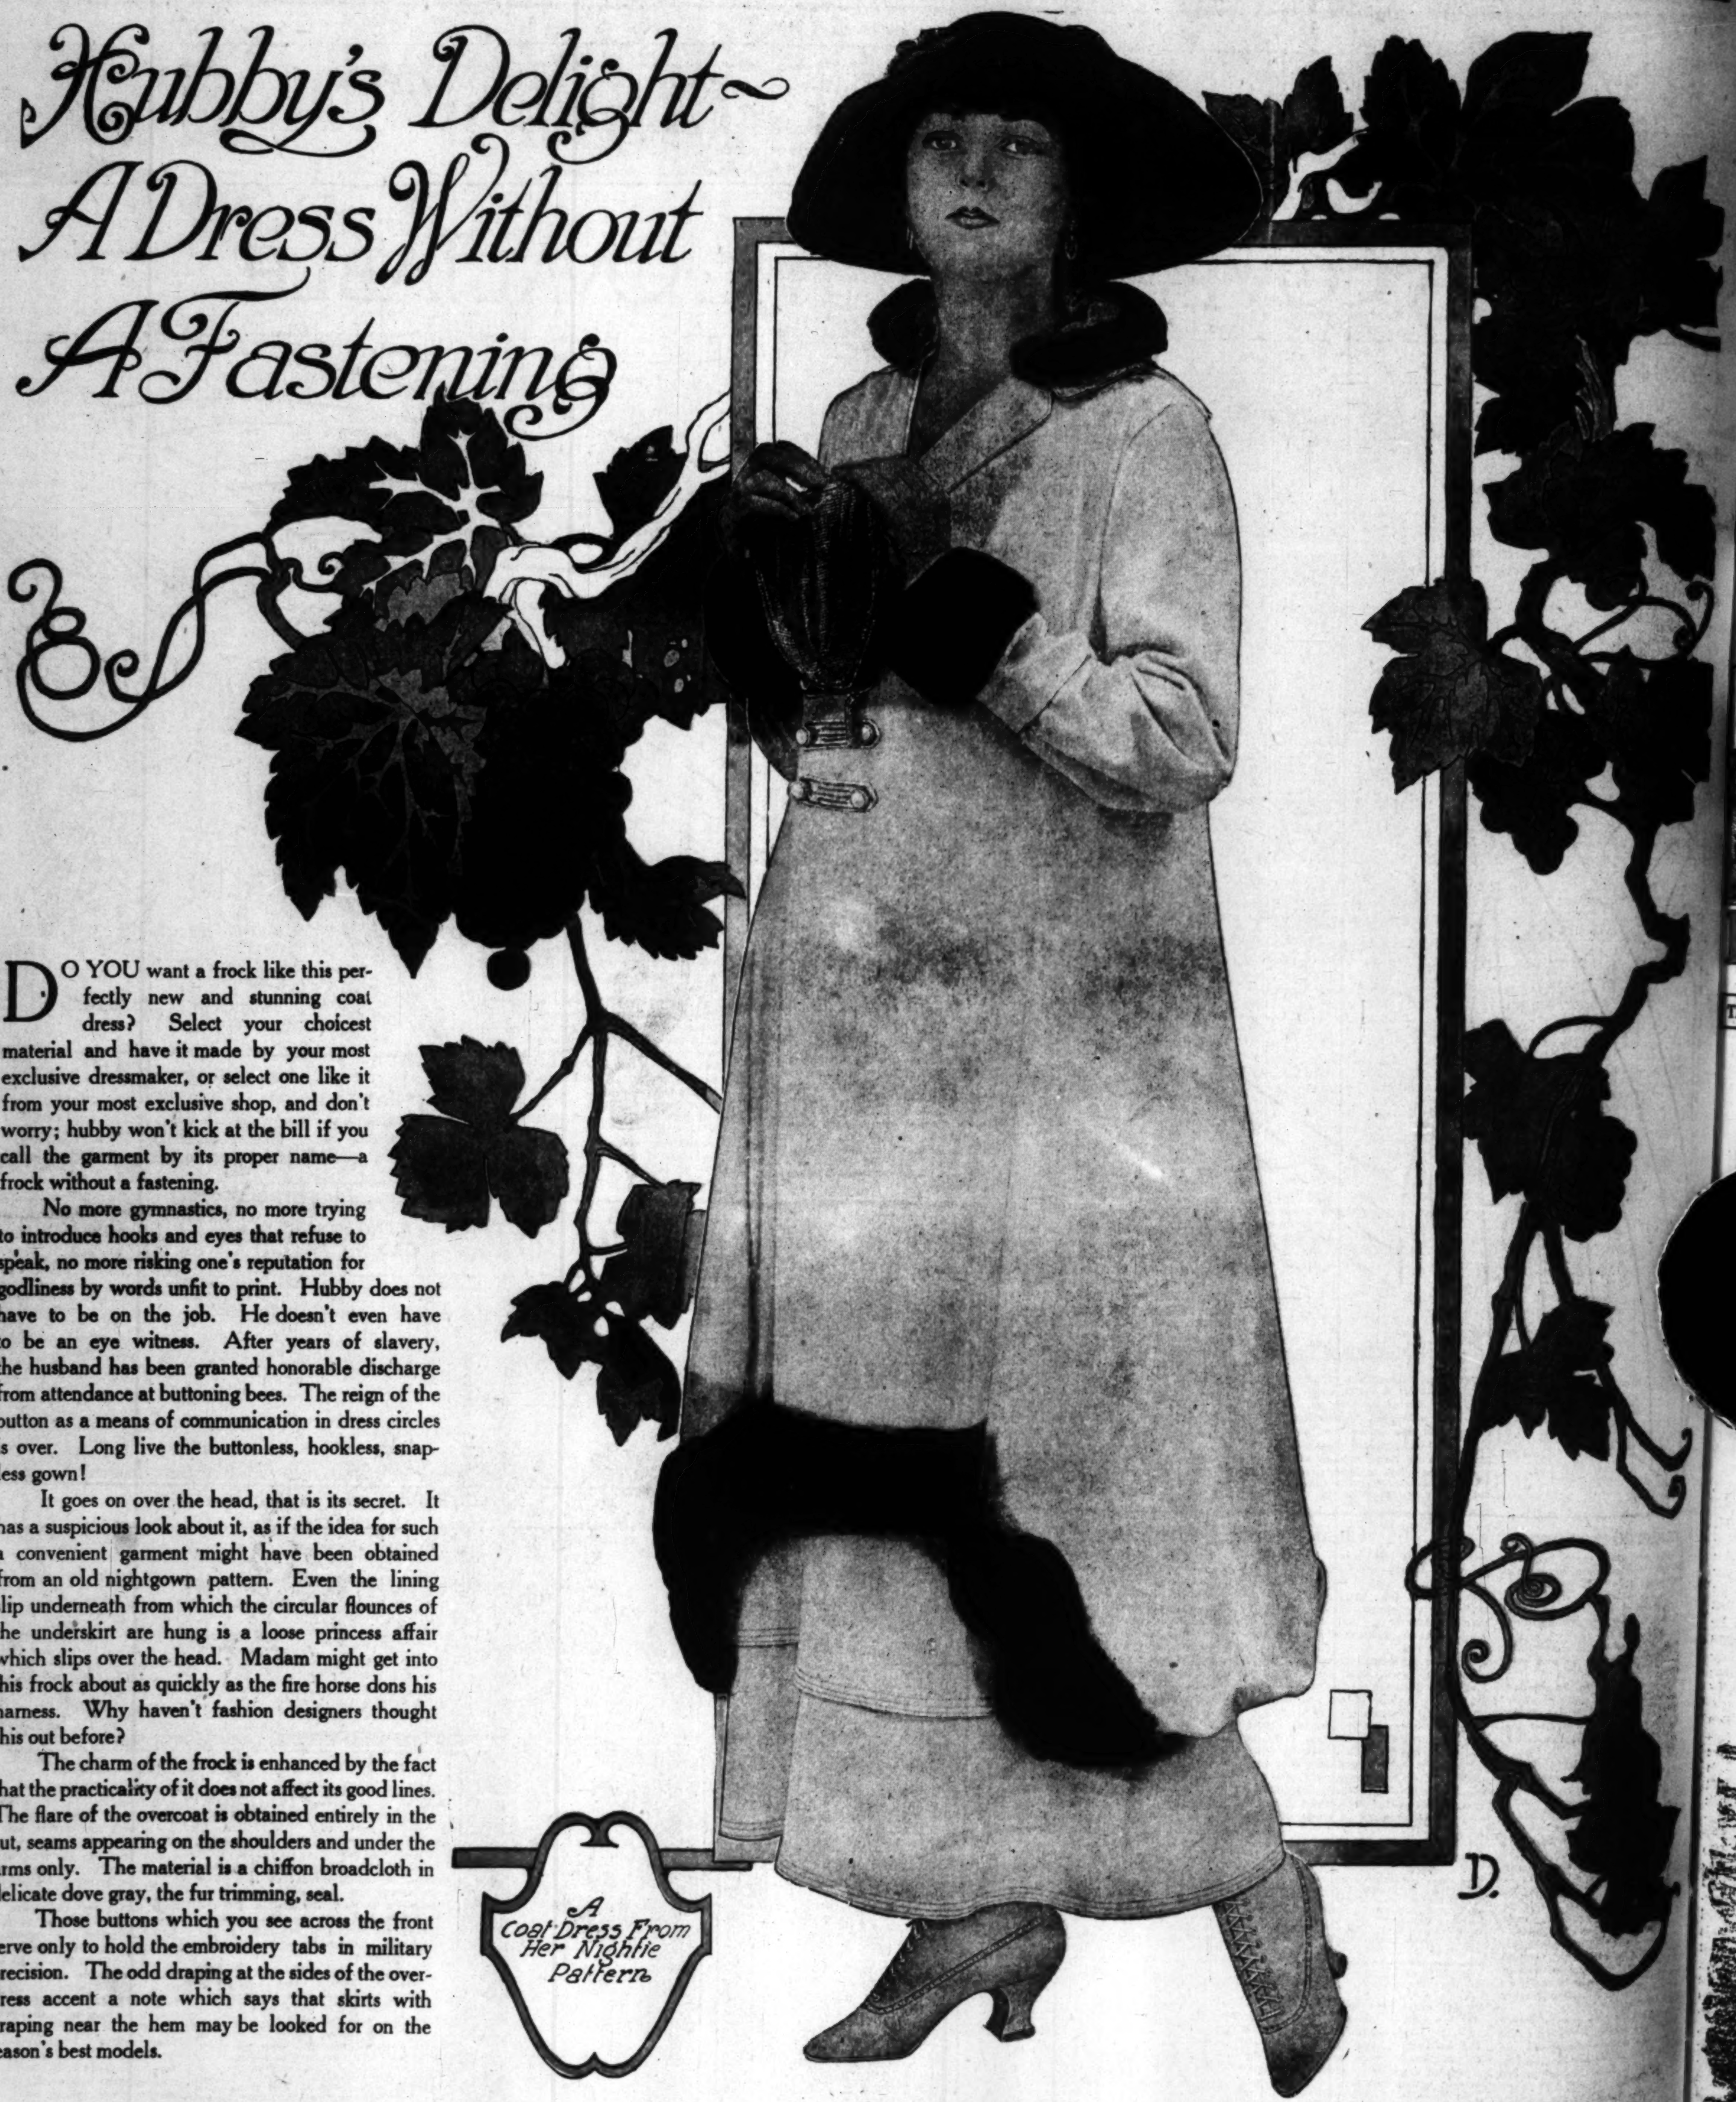
You have more than likely used the delicate feather-edge braid for beading the seams of children's clothes, or fine lingerie. Are you not surprised to see what a lovely insertion or wider beading and edge it will make with a few crochet stitches? The beading is a splendid substitute for fancy hemstitching in bed linens, while the edges can be used wherever a matching edge is required, as on towels or lingerie. To make the beading or insertion, you simply chain along, making a double crochet into every other loop on one side of the braid, with a chain of two between each double. After your length of braid has been treated in this manner on both sides, you may go back and make it slightly wider and firmer by going over the edges with single crochets.

For the edge the braid is treated in a different manner. It is used as a border, the crochet stitches serving to hold it into deep U-shaped scallops. Use a very fine cotton and begin by catching a loop of the braid with a single crochet, chaining nine, catching the third next loop, chain nine again, catch the next third loop, chain nine again and catch the next third, catch up the next ten loops with a single crochet in each, chain four and catch the middle of the last loop of nine, chain four, take up the next third loop of the braid, chain four, catch the middle of opposite nine, chain four, catch up next third loop of braid, chain four, catch middle of opposite nine, chain four, catch back of braid, forming one deep scallop. To join scallops it is necessary now to slipstitch together ten loops from both the outside of the scallop just made and the new one to be made, going back over these slips with a single crochet. This brings you to the top of the new scallop, ready to start with a chain of nine and repeat the directions.

Baby's Bib

THE queen of the household doesn't object in the least to wearing bibs of Turkish toweling or some other equally common material in her own home; but when she goes out among friends she is anxious to wear a bib that is a little bit more dressy, and it is quite natural for her to feel so. Therefore, make a bib of fine lawn or batiste and gratify her desires. It is advisable to make the bib with a waistband so that the protector will stay in place. The band can be made of ribbon or it can be an extension of the bib material. A dainty design embroidered on the bib, or the baby's initial, will beautify it and still keep it simple enough for the wearer. A dress shield or a piece of water-proof material should be basted beneath the bib so that the accessory will be a protection to the baby's frock.

Hubby's Delight—A Dress Without A Fastening



A Coat Dress From Her Nightie Pattern

DO YOU want a frock like this perfectly new and stunning coat dress? Select your choicest material and have it made by your most exclusive dressmaker, or select one like it from your most exclusive shop, and don't worry; hubby won't kick at the bill if you call the garment by its proper name—a frock without a fastening.

No more gymnastics, no more trying to introduce hooks and eyes that refuse to speak, no more risking one's reputation for godliness by words unfit to print. Hubby does not have to be on the job. He doesn't even have to be an eye witness. After years of slavery, the husband has been granted honorable discharge from attendance at buttoning bees. The reign of the button as a means of communication in dress circles is over. Long live the buttonless, hookless, snapless gown!

It goes on over the head, that is its secret. It has a suspicious look about it, as if the idea for such a convenient garment might have been obtained from an old nightgown pattern. Even the lining slip underneath from which the circular flounces of the underskirt are hung is a loose princess affair which slips over the head. Madam might get into this frock about as quickly as the fire horse dons his harness. Why haven't fashion designers thought this out before?

The charm of the frock is enhanced by the fact that the practicality of it does not affect its good lines. The flare of the overcoat is obtained entirely in the cut, seams appearing on the shoulders and under the arms only. The material is a chiffon broadcloth in delicate dove gray, the fur trimming, seal.

Those buttons which you see across the front serve only to hold the embroidery tabs in military precision. The odd draping at the sides of the overdress accent a note which says that skirts with draping near the hem may be looked for on the season's best models.

Los Angeles Times
Illustrated Weekly

Nineteenth Year. Vol. X, No. 16.

Average Circulation Weekly, 103,000.

"SAIL ON, SAIL ON!"

In this issue of the Los Angeles Times Illustrated Weekly, the important announcement heretofore published is followed up by presenting some of the striking new features promised:

ANNOUNCEMENT.

With a full appreciation of the high importance of the relations—trade, commercial, financial and neighborly—which should subsist between the United States, and particularly the Pacific Slope, and the Pacific lands lying to the southward—the Latin-American States—this journal has long favored closer connections in that regard. These States include—

Argentina
Bolivia
Brazil
Chile
Colombia
Costa Rica
Cuba
Dominican Republic
Ecuador
Guatemala
Haiti
Honduras Mexico
Nicaragua Panama
Paraguay
Peru
Salvador
Uruguay
Venezuela

To the end of encouraging such relations, and with the purpose of doing good to the best interests of all the lands named, and to their peoples, the Los Angeles Times Illustrated Weekly Magazine has begun a journalistic campaign having for its purpose the aiding of the solid and practical activities which must be carried on in order to achieve adequate results—results entirely within the realm of possibility.

A beginning is made in the present issue of the Magazine, which contains some authoritative and valuable articles, written by competent writers, at home and abroad, bearing upon the paramount subject in hand.

This is only a beginning, however, and it will be the aim of the Magazine to persist in the good work and to improve the character of its service until it shall have reached a higher standard and taken on a deeper interest for thousands and millions of the enterprising commercial, manufacturing, shipping and business men of the different American lands whose interests are so closely and legitimately intermingled.

This preliminary announcement does not by any means cover the entire ground which we expect later on to traverse, but the Illustrated Weekly will endeavor to interpret to its readers, through luminous text and brilliant pictures, the practical things that are gradually drawing the Americas into closer commercial, industrial, mercantile, social and educational intercourse.

Some of the forthcoming articles are here enumerated:

What European capital has done in Latin-America.

What American capital has done and is doing in Latin-America.

The United States tourist in Latin-America—Where to go; what to see; the cost.

Interviewing managers of American enterprises in Latin-America.

Will Latin-America's young men come to us or trade with us in the near future, and will the intercourse be mutual and reciprocal?

Interviews with South American editors.

Talks with famous men in Latin-America.

Latin-American schools and colleges.

Latin-American capitals and large cities.

The young man's chances in Latin-America.

Shall we encourage Latin-America's small industries? etc., etc.

These articles, and others of a like nature, will be written by capable men who have lived in the various countries of Latin-America and who know whereof they will speak; by men who have been received by presidents, and who have slept with cowboys on the pampas and in the great out-of-doors; who have spent much time in interior and unpopulated regions, as well as in the cities and among active men of affairs; who have navigated far-away rivers and encountered the wild man of the forest in his native lair.

Not the least interesting will be the series of photographs which will accompany the printed articles—photographs taken in widely-separated places throughout Latin-America. Many of these exceptional photographs, depicting unique and picturesque scenes, will be used for the first time in The Times Magazine, and the halftones will be handsomely printed. Later on rotogravure printing will be introduced—the last word in the art of magazine illustration. Men of affairs, of commerce and business, ladies' clubs, college students, libraries, etc.—in fact, unlimited numbers of intelligent people searching for fresh knowledge—will find in the forthcoming series of articles (which will require months for their publication) a great variety of interesting material, useful in their respective lines of endeavor and illuminating in the best sense.

ON ONE day last week more telegrams were sent from Jerome, Ariz., to Los Angeles than were dispatched to the world at large from Jerome in four months in any previous year. Jerome is becoming one of this city's best paying little neighbors.

Trade with Latin America.

AN EDITORIAL announcement on this page sets forth clearly, succinctly and graphically the new plans made by the editor-in-chief of this magazine, and speaks for itself.

As announced there, the first articles carrying out this new programme appear in this issue of the magazine. The main purpose of this editorial is to call emphatic attention to these articles, which will be found comprehensive, luminous, informing and interesting. This is especially true of an article from the pen of Dr. J. Ziegner-Uriburu. This article calls attention to the opportunities existing for international trade between all the Americas, the increase of these opportunities growing out of the war going on in Europe, and the conditions paramount to be followed by our manufacturers and exporters in order to make the most of these opportunities in building up trade between the various parts of the Americas.

The writer of the article just referred to is exceptionally well qualified to speak of the matters under discussion. He is a native of Argentina, educated partly in Germany, finished in England, and has been a resident of the United States for some considerable time. He was largely instrumental in organizing, and is now the head ot the Latin-American department in that home educational institution, the University of Southern California. This we believe to be the first effort of the kind made in connection with any school of higher learning in the United States, and at this time the only one.

There is much in Dr. Ziegner-Uriburu's article which will be familiar to old-time readers of this magazine. His ideas are directly in line with those reiterated again and again in articles in these pages during years past. The European war has created wonderful opportunities for trade between our country and the republics lying south of us. But it will require close and careful study on the part of American manufacturers and exporters to secure that trade. Conditions there are peculiar to a degree that makes it necessary to have an intimate knowledge of them as a whole, in order to accomplish the purpose now in the minds of many American business men. These peculiarities extend to the characteristics of the people with whom this business is to be carried on. It will not be a walk-over for our business men. The war must close before many months longer, and then the old customers who have done business in Latin America for years will come back to renew the ties between them and those with whom they had been doing business in the past.

As to the people of Latin America, they are a punctilious, polite people, who are unaccustomed to all familiarity of an unseemly kind, and this is a peculiarity that must be reckoned with. No agent should be sent into Latin America to sell goods who is not first a gentleman, and secondly who has not an exact knowledge of the language of the people he is to visit: and with these qualifications he will be able to meet business men on an equal and agreeable footing.

As the writer of this article in question says, 95 per cent. of the credits of the Latin Americas in the past have been made by Europeans. Here is where our opportunity comes in. The expense of the war has largely draine Europe of real money, which has flowe into the United States, a little mo than equalizing the interest rates be tween us and Europe in our favor. A the article points out, the bulk of th business of European banks has been i buying acceptances on goods sold i foreign countries. This has given th European shipper a great advantag over the American one. With the ban now established in foreign countrie our bankers are entering into this polic more and more.

Then there is the shipping to be con sidered. In order to do this busine properly, the American merchant ma rine must be rehabilitated to a point o efficiency. Latin-American countri numbering 90,000,000 inhabitants a doing an export and import busine amounting to close to $3,000,000,000, a most equally divided between expor and imports, will wish to sell us abo as much as they buy, which has bee substantially the course of trade be tween them and Europe in the past.

European shippers have been selli to the Latin Americans goods at ve good prices, but making very lo credits, extending as much as s months on very low rates of interes This is another peculiarity of the tra with which our people will be oblig to conform. They will have to stu too, the packing of the goods, so as accommodate the customers wi whom they will deal. The consul agents of European governments hav been very efficient in the past in stim lating trade between the Lati Americas and their countries, whi until about twenty years ago our po litically-appointed consuls were marke by inefficiency. Under President Mc-Kinley, who was followed by Presiden Taft, these conditions in our consula service were materially remedied.

The Turk in Europe.

ALBERT BUSHNELL HART, professor of government in Har-vard University, in a luminous artic published in The Times on Septembe 29, goes into the question of th Turk in Europe in a very brillian way. He refers to the struggle be tween Europe and Asia which bega away back 500 years before the Chri tian era and has continued almost un mittingly, from that day to this, fo 2500 years.

The Persians were less Asiatic th the Turks, but they were driven bac and refused a foothold in Europe. Th Phoenicians secured a footing i Northern Africa, where they bu Carthage. Rome and that Asiat city had a death struggle for gener tions, and the European won.

Then came the Saracens, wh overran nearly all of Europe, taking possession of Spain for hundred of years. Charles of France, s named the Hammer Man, smashe this force to pieces in the pla of Tours and put an end to th attempt of Asiatics to overrun Europ As Prof. Hart points out, only th Hungarians of all the Asiatic horde ever became Europeanized. They a cepted the Christian religion, whic although born in Asia, jumped the Bo porus and became a European insti tion, leaving the land of its birth a heathenism behind it. The allies i the fight going on now, the Englis men in particular, call the Teuton Huns as a term of reproach. The Te

It is Always So.

FATHER KNICKERBOCKER has been undergoing the throes of great anxiety because of the industrial rebellion attempted by some of his children. The operators of the street cars considered themselves badly treated and made demands upon the managers which these did not see fit to grant. A general strike was called, with a threat to call out hundreds of thousands of toilers engaged in other occupations in a sympathetic strike. It was something like the trainmen who held up the President and the Democratic Congress, resulting in the passage of the Adamson bill. Fortunately, New York has a government different from that at Washington. He warned them that no violence would be permitted while there was a policeman in the city to enforce order, and that if need be he would call upon the Governor of the State for troops to keep the peace.

This ended the strike where it began. The strikers have not returned to work nor shown much disposition to make peace as a body, but the cars are running about as normally, and no peaceable New Yorker is forced to walk miles and miles from his home to his place of business. That is all that is necessary to do usually in strikes. If the authorities will only do their duty the matter soon arranges itself, and this is the only fair way to do. It is all right and competent for any toiler in any occupation to make any demand for betterment he sees fit. If the employer refuses to grant his demand, then it is fit and competent for him to lay down his tools, forsake his place and go about his business. If his neighbor wants the job and is willing to do the work on any terms agreed upon between him and the employer, he should be protected in his rights. If he is, the matter soon arranges itself. If there are not enough men to do the work, then the employers must give in and grant the demands of their workmen. If there are enough to do the work it proves that the demands were exorbitant and wrong. It is the old law of supply and demand, for in despite of the infamous law passed by Congress, labor is a commodity, just as much so as potatoes or turnips, and must be regulated by the law of supply and demand, as every other commodity in the market.

The excellent roads constructed in California with the revenue derived from the State's first bond issue of $18,000,000 are a cogent argument for the second issue of $15,000,000 to be voted on at the coming election. Good roads are an asset to the State almost beyond computation and all classes share in the benefits.

While some damage has doubtless been done to a few interests by the recent copious rains, their effect in the aggregate will be beneficial. And they encourage the hope that the rainfall for the coming winter will be liberal. Liberal rains in California generally mean liberal crops, and liberal crops mean prosperity.

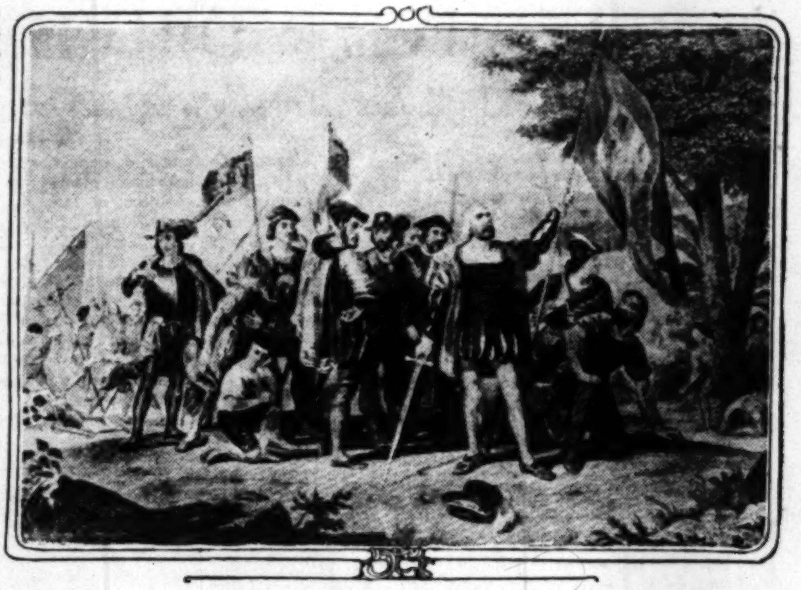
Most people like squabs, but cannot afford them. They might if they raised them for themselves. It is a great deal of fun and not much trouble. Get a wire coop, a small stock of pigeons and a big sack of grain, and you can trust the pigeons to do the rest.

A man who had five wives was sent to prison for three years. If he could have been sentenced to serve three years with each wife the punishment might have come nearer fitting the crime.

War news was, not long ago, the matter of most thrilling interest to the people of the United States, but that was before the World Series began.

Perhaps we may be permitted to say that the Atlantic Coast, as well as the Entente allies, has reason to be disturbed for divers reasons.

The special attention of new readers at home and abroad, particularly in the South and Central American States (to whom sample copies are sent (is called to the contents of this issue of the Los Angeles Times Illustrated Weekly. The publishers believe that the numerous varied and well-written articles published will be found of positive interest to intelligent readers. Several of the articles deal with that highly-important subject, the commercial and other business relations subsisting between the United States and the Latin-American countries, and further such articles are promised. These interests, already large, are steadily growing in volume and magnitude, and are surely destined to become of more and more consequence to the peoples of the Three Americas. Additional copies of this magazine will be sent to any address upon application and the payment of the small cost involved.



CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS,

The immortal discoverer of America, first setting foot on our soil at San Salvador Island, Oct. 12, 1492; shown in the historic act of raising the flag of his Spanish sovereign above the land, while surrounded by his officers and the crews of his little fleet of three crude caravels.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS.

By ELIZA A. OTIS.*

'Twas a fair city of those olden times
To which Columbus came, hugging his dream
Of undiscovered lands lying across
The shadowy sea, as yet unploughed
By keel of any ship, than the blue, starlit
Skies more pathless. For years, by night and day
Had the great Pilot heard its voice calling Him with enticing speech. Arise! Arise!
The beckoning West seemed crying. Beyond
The horizon's purpling lines the lapping
Seas seemed kissing golden shores, and as he Breathed Seville's soft airs, heavy with odors
Of fragrant jasmine and spicy pomegranate,
And dreamed beneath her opalescent skies,
Or within her Moorish temples worshiped
Where saintly statues rose, or walked in courts
Of marble, where fountains sang in tinkling
Melody, and grand cathedral walls, set
With bright gems, echoed the music of the Swaying bells, and where he drank the lemon's
Spicy breath, or trod between green-needled
Pines, their aromatic wine inhaling,
And watched the ships lying at anchor by
The Golden Tower, and had speech with men
Of science and of thought, he nursed his hopes Anew, and the New World brightened to his Vision. O large-souled man! waiting and Waiting still, through weary years, till thy smooth
Brow grew furrowed, and Disappointment's stern
Winter whitened thy hair, divinest patience
Was thy crown until the New World, mid its Smiling seas, rose to thy sight, set in the sunset's heart.
But not from fair Seville, where
Guadalquiver's shining waters sunward
Flashed, sailed his proud ships toward the setting
Sun; but from small Palos, dreaming by the Wave, home of sea toilers, did at last—like
A star out of midnight—set the great Captain
Forth to find the waiting world within the Unknown West. The little town ran to and Fro to see the three small ships upon the Shining sea, mere motes upon the waters;
And women, with their babes upon their breasts,
Bemoaned his folly in defying death;
And some among the curious watching crowd
Talked scornfully, and winked their eyes, and shrugged
Their heavy shoulders, and called him madman,
Fool, and driveling foreign idiot, who Yet should bait the fishes with his flesh when
In the restless deeps of unknown seas the Maddened billows raging in their wrath should Howl his requiem. The criminal, with
The strong iron bars 'twixt him and freedom,
Shut from heaven's blessed air and day's sweet light,
The foul dungeon walls his sunless and his Starless firmament, his strong limbs cramped by Narrowness of space, scorned liberty when Offered at the price of sailing with this
So-called mad adventurer, and hugged his Chains, and hugged captivity and noisome
Prison cell. Our God was there. The New World's Shores were not for such as he.
O ever
Blest Rabida! Beneath thy red-tiled roof,
Loved by the morning sun, kissed by his beams
When sinking to the west, beacon upon
The pine-clad heights of Palos, thus nursing
Mother of those mighty hopes cradling a World unknown! God touched the eyelids of Thy children, and friar and padre bridged
The deep with prayers, helped to swing backward
On their ponderous hinges the great Past's
Iron doors. And there with steadfast gaze walked Silently the noble Admiral, while Scanning sea and sky, Hope's fire burning beneath
His lids, and his large-visioned
Eyes, forever seeing things unseen, turned
To his golden dreamland of the fair yet
Undiscovered world. Upon thy shores, O
"Memory-haunted Palos," the midnight
Of Time's past gave place to golden dawn of Freedom, and those rude caravels, like specks
Upon the great sea's breast, saw a New World
Rise upon far-western waters, where, sleeping,
Lay the whole world's hopes, broad'ning the round, sweet
Earth, and broad'ning man as he inhales
Its atmosphere of freedom. O dawn most Pregnant when these small ships sailed from Palos!
The starlight pales within the glowing East,
From La Rabida's height Columbus comes
With hurrying feet; youth's heart seemed stirring
In his breast once more. The years of waiting
Are behind him now. The fluttering sails
Move him like angels' wings. The hurrying
Steps of sailors on the decks is music
To his ears. The boatswain's whistle is like Gabriel's horn. The Cross is there above
His vessel's spars The rising breeze swift fills
His waiting sails. Farewells are said, the anchor Weighed, the unknown sea before them, but Mystery beyond the blue horizon's walls.
O days and days with naught but sky and Sea! The blazing sun, the far and silent
Stars, or clouds and rain, and howling tempests'
Wrath, and those small ships upon the boundless
Waste of mighty waters. A mocking ghost,
Despair, sits at the helm and clutches each
Sailor's heart; only the leader's soul lost
Not its faith; only his dauntless courage never failed.
But one sweet morn, when purple
Lay the West and Morning's star shone on
The sleeping skies, and calm was on the sea,
And white birds floated on the rippling waves,
And berry-brightened boughs seemed laden with Hope's wine, floating the deep, sweet as the starry
Paean at Creation's birth, when sang the Morning stars together, one glad note ran Across that unknown sea. "Land! Land!"
Then pealed
The signal gun and shouts and joyous cries
Of sailors swept the air, and glad Te Deums Broke upon the decks. At last! At last! the Waiting years were crowned.
Four hundred years! Four hundred years!
And a continent we bring,
Where from ocean unto ocean
Each man a sovereign king.
Fling wide our starry banner,
No slave beneath its fold,
And tell our children's children
This deathless story old.

*Written more than twenty years ago by Mrs. Eliza A. Otis, long associated with the Los Angeles Times in a trusted staff capacity (now deceased.) The occasion was the celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America, the celebration, as will be recalled, having been postponed one year by the United States government, for reasons. It actually took place October 12, 1893, instead of October 12, 1892. The poem was first published in The Times on the first-named date.—[Ed.

EFFECTIVE "DRIVES" BY A DRIVING CITY

Los Angeles and Certain High Spots in Her Splendid Progress.

I.
THE PACIFIC WONDERLAND.

I hear the tread of pioneers,
Of nations yet to be;
The first low wash of waves where soon
Shall roll a human sea.
—[Whittier.

THE hardy settler following an ox-cart through the trackless wilderness, and braving the unknown in new, unpopulated lands, has set the style in pioneering for so long that it is of some such character that the average American thinks when he hears the term. One mentally pictures a gathering of white-haired old folk, swapping reminiscences of days long past, when pioneers are mentioned. Behold in Los Angeles a new and distinct type of the species!

Keen, vigorous business men, bankers, builders and manufacturers, still in the prime of life, some of them young men even, are numbered among the honored pioneers of this strong, virile young land of the Pacific Southwest. Nor is it any reflection on the graybeards who came here before the railroads that these younger men who were unborn when the graybeards first set foot in the old pueblo of Los Angeles should, like themselves, be called pioneers. Here is an apparent paradox, but it is only apparent.

There are two Southern Californias and two Los Angeles towns for the historian who is at all thoughtful and partial to facts. There is the vast dry land, with its Mexican village, that an older generation found and transformed, and there is the garden empire and its metropolis that have been built in a decade and a half upon the foundations they laid. Each is distinct, with a history of its own; and each has its pioneers.

The world knew only dimly of the changes going on in this corner of America until 1900. Southern California was a section with an unusually fine climate, a place everybody wanted to visit sooner or later, and Los Angeles was a large town, where the populace rented furnished rooms to tourists. Enough real settlers were constantly discovering the possibilities of the region, of course, to keep a steady stream of immigration coming this way; but there was nothing like a wide heralding of anything save the climate. Then came the Federal census of 1900, and all was changed. Los Angeles, the overgrown tourist town, had popped up in the leading city class among the proud centers of population, boasting 100,000 or more inhabitants.

Naturally this growth had not been overnight, but it might as well have been as far as the astonished nation was concerned. Instantly Los Angeles became a municipal personage, so to speak, in the national eye. From 1900 may be said to date the modern city of today. Truly the place was never the same thereafter. New blood surged in; old pulses were quickened. A city of skyscrapers, a new city, a different kind of city, sprang into being.

Pioneers of a new type, men in tailored clothes, men sitting at desks, men with all the courage, vision and initiative of the accepted types themselves, sprang to the plow. City-makers, builders in steel and stone, they wrought with zeal and activity. Nor has ever rugged, old-fashioned pioneer worked so great a transformation in a lifetime out of the primitive itself as has been wrought by these modern pioneers who have changed the Los Angeles of the latter part of the Nineteenth Century into the Los Angeles of 1916.

Los Angeles has eclipsed all records for growth since it broke into the 100,000 class. It took her just fifteen years from that date to get into the highly-exclusive 500,000 class. Chicago was from 1860 to 1880 doing the same thing, and Chicago had the palm for rapid advancement until Los Angeles came along. The whole country marveled when the Federal census of 1910 gave Los Angeles a population of 319,000; but no one would probably seriously question the city's present claim to between 550,000 and 600,000. Los Angeles, the world city, is now an accepted fact everywhere.

The statistics of Los Angeles' growth baffle, even as the kaleidoscopic changes in its skyline bewilder, the imagination. The sensational record of construction operations gives an insight into the world-beating material achievements of the city since it gave up the swaddling clothes of its tourist-town days. Since 1900, roughly 150,000 permits have been issued for new structures of all kinds, these improvements representing a grand total investment of close to $300,000,000 for the bare buildings. Los Angeles, the billion-dollar city, is at last a reality, if the uniform assessment of the city and county assessors' offices for the current year, the total assessed valuation of property within the municipality being this year fixed at around $490,000,000 on the customary basis of 50 per cent. of the actual valuation. An equal amount is assigned to the county outside the city limits.

II.
TOURING ON ASPHALT.

In developing the productive possibilities of the rich empire which stretches from the Tehachepi southward to the Mexican line, Southern Californians have had the good sense not to overlook the tremendous influence of climate and scenic charm in drawing population. They have remembered that the Southland was a playground before it was anything else. The dollar-and-cent possibilities of the venture were frankly in their minds, therefore, when they set out to build the matchless systems of paved highways that now form a network covering the section.

By opening up to the tourist a wondrous vista of rugged mountains, wooded foothills and canyons, seashore and cultivated valleys, they have made this region the mecca and paradise of automobile owners far and near. Beginning decades after some of the older eastern sections had started scientific highway systems, Southern California has outstripped them all. Los Angeles county, with 500 miles of good roads, now leads not only all other counties in the section, but in the United States as well, in its mileage of paved roadway.

The State of California voted during the Gillett administration a bond issue of $18,000,000 for two great trunk lines to extend from Oregon to the Mexican boundary, one down the coast and the other through the interior. This huge sum has now been expended, and the people are to be asked to vote still another bond issue of $15,000,000 to complete unfinished portions of the original magnificent plan and to extend the system into other parts of the commonwealth. The call is justified by the conditions.

III.
PORT OF LOS ANGELES.

The port of Los Angeles, even in its present unfinished state one of the foremost of several magnificent artificial harbors of the globe, was in 1900 only a dream in the minds of far-seeing men. It is true that there was a free harbor at San Pedro, established after a hard, uphill fight with private and corporate interests, but the mighty port of entry that now lies in back of the government breakwater, and inland in the channels and basins of Wilmington, is essentially a development of modern Los Angeles.

The money and effort required for the development of the Los Angeles outer and inner harbors, since San Pedro and Wilmington were taken into the municipal fold, would have discouraged a city of less clear vision and discernment than Los Angeles. The people of Los Angeles saw their opportunity to get a place in the sun in the world of commerce by scooping a port out of the shallows and marshes, and, with such help as could be secured from the Federal government, set resolutely about doing it. Their ambition was nothing less than to be able to compete with the great natural harbors of the Coast, and that ambition has been realized.

With the channels, basins, wharves and warehouses completed and those now being provided, Los Angeles will be enabled to take full advantage of the avalanche of ocean trade that will be unloosed through the Panama Canal when the war has ceased and the ships of all nations have been restored to their legitimate commercial uses. Its nearness to the canal, by comparison with San Francisco and Seattle, gives Los Angeles peculiar advantages over both as a port of entry for interoceanic commerce.

IV.
THE EXPANDING CITY.

Though mere territorial expansion is not everything, it is pertinent as well as important to trace its course and outcome in the present striking case.

Even as the growth of Los Angeles in population and material assets may be divided into two distinct epochs, so may its expansion territorially be likewise broadly classified. The first era of expansion began with the pueblo and lasted down through the beginnings of the city's modern development, and the liveliest days of its progress, almost to the present time. The second began only a little over a year ago, when the people decreed at the polls that annexation should from that time forth be a necessary step toward the securing by any and all outside territory of the surplus water from the aqueduct in which the taxpayers of Los Angeles had invested some $30,000,000.

Up to the time of this momentous and highly-practical decision the areas added to the city had almost all come into the municipal fold as the result of the natural spreading of development and population. The exception was the annexation of the "shoestring strip" and harbor district, which was a deliberate reaching out for territory needed in the port plans. The new policy of taking in farming suburbs and selling them surplus water for irrigation has already resulted in a territorial growth exceeding that of the city's entire previous history.

Los Angeles originally comprised Spanish-grant lands measuring a league each way from the old Plaza church, amounting to about thirty-six square miles. The first addition was made in 1869 and contained about 700 acres. Highland Park, large areas to the west and south, the University and Garvanza districts had come in by 1900. The harbor section was annexed in 1909, and within another year Colegrove and Hollywood had come in, bringing the total area of the city up to ninety-seven square miles. On June 7 of the present year, when Westgate and Occidental were voted in, Los Angeles became in area the biggest city on the continent, boasting 337.92 square miles—over twenty square miles in excess of the territory comprised within Greater New York.

The first outside region to join the municipality under the city's fair terms to those seeking the use of the Owens River water for irrigation purposes was the San Fernando Valley. This great agricultural and horticultural suburb had already, and without water resources other than those developed within its own confines, become one of the garden spots of Southern California before the voters of Los Angeles decided in May, 1915, that it should, upon building its own distributing system, be permitted to purchase the aqueduct water surplus; for that is what the annexation of the valley really meant. That distributing system is now under construction, with thousands upon thousands of acres of fertile soil already under temporary ditches in areas where the pipe lines are not completed.

The San Fernando Valley, with its producing farms, its wonderful flower-lined boulevards, its splendid public schools and its ideal community life, is easily one of the greatest territorial acquisitions ever made by Los Angeles. A spreading area of 47,500 acres, long occupied almost exclusively for grain farming alone, was bought, subdivided into farms and lots, settled, populated, and made the place of modern homes, where none existed before. Among other truly great results in the domain of agricultural production, the valley has in 1916 more than 18,000 acres in sugar beets. The year's yield, according to the figures available, will average between ten and eleven tons to the acre, making a gross tonnage for the valley of roughly 180,000 tons. From the average ton of beets the refiners get about 400 pounds of refined sugar, experts figuring the total net refined sugar production at a trifle over one-fifth of the total beet tonnage. This would make the San Fernando Valley's production of refined sugar for the current year about 36,000 tons. At the present price of sugar the net yield per ton of beets is around $29. With this as a basis for computation, it is estimated that the money value of the refined sugar produced from the San Fernando Valley beet fields, in other words, within the limits of the city of Los Angeles, in 1916, will be considerably in excess of $5,000,000.

The San Fernando Valley, Westgate, The Palms and minor districts, annexed under the aqueduct distribution plan, are to be followed by other areas now standing on the threshold waiting their turn. City and county consolidation, which looked remote a few years ago, has been automatically hastened and assured under the new of things. A borough plan, providing practical home rule in all affairs pertaining to strictly local management, is now devised to facilitate a union with Los Angeles for all eligible districts desiring to come in.

V.
COMMERCE AND INDUSTRY.

The statistics of business, commerce and industry of modern Los Angeles are, like the figures of its growth in population and in building lines—staggering. Bank clearings from 1900 to the present time aggregate over $12,000,000,000, the past years averaging well over a billion dollars each, and 1916 being now well on its way toward $1,500,000,000. Postal receipts jumped from $259,468 in 1900 to $2,3 in 1915.

Los Angeles is doing a jobbing and wholesaling business of over $300,000,000 a year.

Industrially, Los Angeles is now making its biggest strides. Starting out practically as a nonentity in the manufacturing world a dozen years ago, this city and its environs have made such strides in industry as to bring their total industrial output up to a volume matching that of many important cities that have known the smell of factory smoke for generations. To date, for 1916, 120 new industries, large and small, have been established in and around this city. The total number of new factories for 1915 was 143. The last official figure relating to the industrial output of Los Angeles was $130,000,000 for 1914, this being the Federal government's own total. Estimates for 1916 range all the way from $125,000,000 to $150,000,000.

VI.
THE "BACK COUNTRY."

Larger in area than some of the States of the Union, and rich beyond calculation in its varied resources, is the "back country" tributary to Los Angeles. Almost as sensational as the advance of the city itself has been the unfoldment of the empire of which it is the commercial capital and metropolitan entrepot. The eight counties of Southern California—Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Riverside, Orange, Imperial, San Diego, Ventura and Santa Barbara—comprise 45,000 square miles and possess a population approaching the 1,500,000 mark. No other similar area in the world combines such a wide range of soil products, with such capacity for development, and none among the globe's favored spots ever went ahead so rapidly once its possibilities were revealed to the ken of man. And, great as is this achievement, thoughtful observers must concede that the Southland's real advance has only begun.

The orange, the lemon, the olive and the grape were brought to perfection in Southern California by the Mission fathers before the enterprising American who made the section what it is today dreamed of settling here; but the groves and vineyards of the padres were as bits of an experimental garden in a world of unknown ground by comparison with the areas now able to cultivation. Between their picturesque day and the coming of the permanent settler even the beautiful romance of their labors was almost forgotten. The of Southern California, like that of Los Angeles itself, is essentially the consummation of a generation yet young, a fulfillment upon the foundations of a slower, leisurely development.

The wonders wrought by the farmers and horticulturists since began the breaking of the endless leagues of valley and foothill lands, owned by the old-time land barons, are but feebly visioned in the reports of the statisticians. Mere figures of planted acreage and crops can not graphically and adequately picture the miracles accomplished through the combined agencies of fertile soil, matchless, year-round growing weather, scientifically developed and distributed water resources, and modern farming methods in that portion of the Southland's empire already reclaimed to the uses of production.

Statisticians computed the value of Southern California's 1915 farm products at 000,000. The shipment of citrus from Southland points during the year amounted to 48,000 cars, with a value of around $40,000,000. Beans

ON A recent Sunday the Eagle, as is his usual custom, perched in a pew in a Christian church. When the sermon came the preacher quoted a sentiment from Matthew Arnold which he highly commended. The quotation referred to by the minister, which the Eagle approves of very highly, runs as follows:

"It is in making additions to itself, in the endless expansion of its powers, in endless growth in wisdom and beauty, that the spirit of the human race finds its ideal. To reach this ideal, culture is an indispensable aid, and that is the true value of culture. Not a having and resting, but a growing and a becoming, is the character of perfection as culture conceives it; and here, too, it coincides with religion. And because men are all members of one great whole, and the sympathy which is in human nature will not allow one member to be indifferent to the rest or to have a perfect welfare independent of the rest, the expansion of our humanity, to suit the idea of perfection which culture forms, must be a general expansion. Perfection, as culture conceives it, is not possible while the individual remains isolated. The individual is required, under pain of being stunted and enfeebled in his own development if he disobeys, to carry others along with him in his march towards perfection, to be continually doing all he can to enlarge and increase the volume of the human stream sweeping thitherward. And here, once more, culture lays on us the same obligation as religion, which says, as Bishop Wilson has admirably put it, that 'to promote the kingdom of God is to increase and hasten one's own happiness.'"

The part of this sentiment of which the Eagle approves most highly is contained in a couple of sentences. He thinks it is the highest philosophy that the human race finds its ideals "in the endless expansion of its powers, in endless growth in wisdom and beauty," and that to reach this ideal "culture is an indispensable aid, and that is the true value of culture."

Your Eagle, brethren, rejoices in the proud boast that he is the American Eagle. He knows America pretty intimately from Martha's Vineyard to the Farallone Islands, and from the Virginia capes to Catalina Island. He knows it from the extreme north of British America down to a large portion of Latin America, for the Eagle's eye has rested upon the Dipper when it lay low on the horizon, with the North Star just above the edge of the world, and has rested too on the Southern Cross below the equator.

And your Eagle thinks that more than any other people in the world the Americas have found their ideals "in the endless expansion of powers, in endless growth in wisdom and beauty," and that culture is more an ideal with them than with other nations anywhere on earth.

He knows, and he knows it to resent, that Europeans very generally brand Americans as gross materialists. They like the good things of earth and have them to enjoy beyond other peoples, but they are not obsessed by wealth, and they are not materialists as much as many of their critics are. The United States, the Eagle's particular country, spends more on education than any other nation on earth, gives more to charity than any other people in the human race, devotes more to spiritual development in money, time and effort than any other people.

When one considers how few centuries it is since Christopher Columbus, sailing under the patronage of Los Reyes Catolicos of Spain, traversed an unknown ocean and found a new world, and then when we contemplate the development that has gone on here all the way from the Arctic Ocean to Patagonia, he looks upon a period of history and a region of the world where more has been done in every way than was ever accomplished in any equal time since the human race came upon the earth. Of course great material development has gone on. That was necessary. All the way through the Americas the first Europeans to set foot upon the shores of the New World found before them a waste howling wilderness that had to be subdued before civilization, religion or culture could make a home for itself. There was a great temptation for these first immigrants to grab largely of material things because the material things were here to be grabbed. But the Eagle's proud boast is that energetic as they were in subduing the wilderness, their efforts were not spent nor their energies exhausted in the mere subduing of the wilderness. As they possessed themselves of material things they used them largely in endless efforts to realize the highest ideals that were ever possessed by any portion of the human race. They constructed magnificent cities, built long lines of railroads, constructed great factories, equipped and manned all these various human industries; but step by step with these efforts went the endless ambition for higher ideals.

Every nation in all the Americas has joined in this effort to realize the highest ideals of the human race. Perhaps not all with equal ardor, nor quite with equal success. Note Matthew Arnold's quotation at the end of the paragraph above from Bishop Wilson: "To promote the kingdom of God is to increase and hasten one's own happiness." Has not this been the ideal set before the peoples of all the Americas, ever since the first Spaniards set foot upon the shores of the New World, followed by the English, the French, and other immigrants from all parts of Europe? Why, the history of the Conquistadores who subdued the material Americas to the plow, the harvester, the fruit orchard and the meadow is not more glorious than that of the Spanish padres whose exploits are as marvelous as those of the first apostles in their efforts to win the redskins of the Western Hemisphere to Christ and to establish his cross on countless houses of worship. The peoples of all the Americas have built magnificent cathedrals, and side by side with their religious work have gone their efforts for intellectual culture. The schools of the Americas are on a level with those of any other peoples on earth, and education is as universal so far as opportunities go as it is in any other nation.

These are the things which make the Eagle proud of being an American, and his sympathies are as broad as the Americas are and reach from the British possessions to Patagonia.

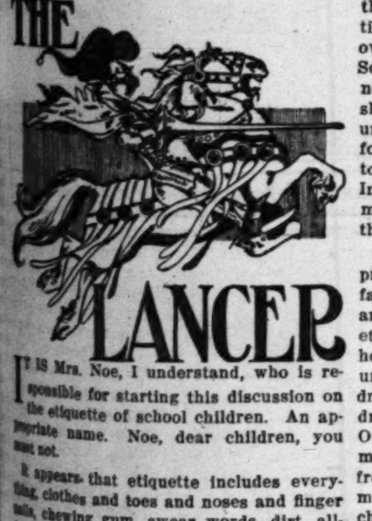
HIS MARK



THE LANCER

IT IS Mrs. Noe, I understand, who is responsible for starting this discussion on the etiquette of school children. An appropriate name. Noe, dear children, you must not.

It appears that etiquette includes everything, clothes and toes and noses and finger nails, chewing gum, swear words, dirt, all-day suckers, smells, tongues and hair-dressing. To the ardent reformer the field offers a large scope. The appalling lack of polished urbanity in our school children must be apparent to all. So many of them have signally failed to live up to that simple admonition of our own unblemished childhood.

"Come when you're called,
Do as you're bid,
Shut the door after you,
And you'll never be chid."

The infallibility of parents and teachers has become a classic. Do their bidding and error is impossible. We all remember the kind mamma who, shocked at little Tommy's gracelessness in pouring his hot chocolate into his saucer and proceeding to blow it, remarked severely "Oh, fie, naughty boy. It is all right to pour it into the saucer, but you mustn't blow it."

The Parent-Teacher Association of which Mrs. Noe is a guiding spirit, forms a fearsome combination against the child. A man may not be able to serve two masters, but the child is required to serve many. For then, that the painful truth must be told, parents and teachers so rarely agree upon the merest essentials of child-deportment. A New York teacher sent a small child home with a note to mamma requesting that he be bathed, since he exuded an unpleasant odor. He soon brought back the retort courteous: "I sends my child to be learned not smelt." No wonder the new Superintendent of Schools in this city found it desirable to make an address on the duties of parents in connection with the education of the child.

It is a horrid thought, but how came our present parents and teachers to reach such a sublime standard of infallibility without the Parent-Teacher Association to guide them. For this organization is a comparatively recent one and played no part in our own obviously satisfactory upbringing. Somewhere, somehow, we learned that it was not good form to wipe our noses on our sleeves, to throw our unappreciated crusts under the table, to comb our hair with our forks, to put our tongue out at teacher, and to tell the visitor what we thought of her. In fact, it is impossible to believe that any modern parent or teacher ever did these things.

Modern children are evidently a unique product. Somehow, with all the beautiful infallibility of their parents and teachers, they are, judging from the discussion on child etiquette, a collection of incredible little hogs. Mrs. Noe certainly finds them in urgent need of reform. Not our own children, you understand, but other people's children with whom they have to associate. Other children never learn bad habits and manners from ours; ours always learn them from other people's. I know one mother who moved out of a neighborhood because her children were becoming contaminated, only to find that other people moved out of the new neighborhood to get away from her children. That must be an embarrassing experience.

We have not been enlightened upon the form the new etiquette campaign is to take, but under the circumstances it might be advisable to keep the children individually in hermetically sealed compartments. One recalls the old cynical bachelor who declared that boys should be kept in a barrel till the age of 24 and educated through the bunghole. And we have heard so much about the elevating influence of music, that we might provide phonographs with classical records outside the bunghole.

Anyway, it is a comfort to know that reform is at hand.

Policing Us.

And while the parents and teachers are reforming the children, the police are busy reforming the parents and teachers. In the light of recent events in this city, it at least appears that the police are not infallible. Logically speaking, our police, with the fearful responsibility of the city's morals on their hands, should be unsullied angels, sans peur et sans reproche. But it is so difficult to get our human male angels to take the job. They don't seem to think it's quite nice. So many diamonds have a weakness for shining socially rather than dedicating their life to the workshop for cutting other but less perfect diamonds. Time was when the policeman's duty required nothing more than the capture and punishment of known sinners. But now their duties have been so enlarged on the prevention-is-better-than-the-cure basis, that their saintliness, like that of the parson, must be combined with a fearsome knowledge of all the possible sins.

Under the circumstances our police should certainly be women. Nearly all our reforms are instituted on the plea that the young women must be protected. And we all know that society's idea of suitable protection for an innocent maiden is a woman chaperon. Men have never insisted upon their own virtue—quite the contrary. How then can masculinity be relied upon to track down sins they regard as necessary and inevitable, with any sort of enthusiasm. Women, on the other hand, have always been expected to be virtuous—with the purity of the dove and the wisdom of the serpent. These are the attributes we require in our police. Male policemen must of necessity be sympathetic with the sinner. Women have never been accused of any such weakness.

We men can scarcely expect to have it both ways. Claiming our inherent right to sin and women's imperative duty to be sinless, we should in our pride of logic and exclusive sense of humor, put the guardianship of our morals into the hands in which it belongs.

The Candidates.

When the candidates for the State Assembly spoke their claims to office at the Woman's City Club last week, one gentleman told his hearers that he went into the Assembly a Republican but came out a Progressive-Democrat Prohibitionist. This sounds rather like going in as an Episcopalian and coming out a Methodist-Roman-Catholic-Jew

It was pretty obvious that the twelve out of forty candidates who faced the ordeal of telling their virtues in four-minute talks before this critical organization, were anxious to prove that they were all things to all women. They had carefully looked up every possible bit of legislation the club seemed interested in and stood for that to a man. And they all insisted upon the intelligence of their audience. Which somehow lacked conviction.

A young woman reporter who sat next to me at that meeting cynically assured me before the show began, that every speech would begin with this remark, and they always did. She was quite right. And the poor candidates could not see how they managed to raise a laugh so successfully at the very outset without trying. I am curious to know whether these same men begin a speech at a masculine meeting by insisting confidently upon the intelligence of their audience. Some compliments can be so insulting. As for instance, telling a woman that you are sure she is virtuous when she was unaware her virtue had ever been in doubt. This information may serve as a useful hint to my fellow-man when next he essays to explain himself before a woman's club.

Absent Treatment.

A Los Angeles lady who won a golf prize at the Del Monte meeting ascribes her victory to the "absent treatment" she wired for to friends in Los Angeles while she was away. "I was," she said, "playing very badly and had an awful go of nerves. So I wired down to a practitioner for absent treatment—and that's how I won my match."

This is alarming information. What is to become of the divine rights of sport if a practitioner in Los Angeles is permitted to influence the result of a match at Del Monte? The rules of golf forbid the acceptance of advice in a tournament, wherein victory must depend solely upon the skill of the player. Yet here is a young woman who admits that she would have failed without outside aid. Her opponent would surely be justified in lodging a protest.

But this whole question of absent treatment opens up a vast field of enterprise to the politicians. If only some of those candidates who made such a howling mess of their four-minute opportunities at the Woman's Club had had the forethought to provide themselves with a practitioner! Maybe the twenty-eight men who stayed away with polite regrets were practicing absent treatment with skill and finesse.

Slowness of Philadelphia.

[Girard, in Philadelphia Public Ledger:] After stewing for fifteen minutes in a telephone booth the man from Washington emerged. He is a member of Congress.

"There is service for you!" he faltered weakly. "I came to Philadelphia on business and I wanted to get a bit of information from your automobile club about roads and to find out from the Reading if a certain train stops at West Conshohocken. Those two calls—neither line was reported busy—just ate up fifteen minutes of my all too short life, reduced my weight at least a pound through perspiration and set back my temper a mile."

Then this mathematical man from the national capital assailed the slowness of our telephone service.

"Those two calls were worth just five minutes. At home they would have taken no longer. So I was robbed of ten minutes.

"I figure out that if only one-half the people in Philadelphia call on the phone but once every month your population wastes in a year 225 years of time."

This conclusion was so appalling that I now hesitate to pick up a telephone.

[Kansas City Journal:] "That pretty girl clerk of yours seems to enjoy her work."

"She does. She opens the proposals."

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

FAIRBANKS (Alaska.)—I have just returned from an automobile trip through some of the rich farming lands of the Tanana Valley. This part of Alaska has the largest body of good soil in the Territory, and the government is expecting an invasion of homesteaders as soon as the railroad from Seward to Fairbanks is completed. Much of the land is in what is known as the Tanana bottom. It comprises a tract about 200 miles long and, in places, seventy miles wide. Altogether it is about as big as the State of New Jersey, and its cultivable country is one-fifth as large as the State of Ohio. My journey today was through a rolling region as beautiful as the Pennsylvania foothills of the Alleghenies. The land rises from the river and gently slopes to the mountains, which are far off in the distance.

Inside a cantaloupe hothouse.

As we rode up the valley it was difficult to realize that we were on the border of Arctic Alaska. The thermometer was at 90 deg. in the shade. There was no snow on the tops of the mountains, and the hills and valleys were covered with green. At times we passed through plains spotted with wild flowers. There were beds of buttercups as yellow as gold, and daisies as pink as the cheeks of a baby. In some places the ground was covered with blueberry bushes, the fruit as large as cherries and loaded with juice. Now we passed through forests of birch, spruce and cottonwood. Some of the trees were two feet in diameter. Where the woods had been cut or burned away there were vast expanses of flaming pink flowers as high as the wheels of the car, and everywhere the roadside was hedged with green grass and red-top that reached to the hubs. Now and then we went over corduroy, our automobile bouncing high under the fast driving of the Jehu of this northern frontier.

Cut Out of the Woods.

We passed many small farms cut out of the woods, with oat hay and potatoes in blossom. We saw cattle grazing, and by and by came to the experiment farm which the government has established in the heart of the Tanana Valley, about four miles from Fairbanks. The farm is beautifully located. It consists of 1280 acres of gently sloping hillsides and bottom land, sloping at one side to a wide stream and rolling thence on up and over a low range of hills.

At one end of the farm is the site recently selected for the Alaska Agricultural College, the corner stone of which was laid in 1915. The college will stand on a hill, giving magnificent views for fifty miles up and down the Tanana Valley, taking in Fairbanks and also the blue mountains, far off in the distance. On a bright day Mt. McKinley is visible. The campus will include a forest of birch trees as straight as an arrow. Their trunks are as white as frosted silver, and they end at the top in green leaves.

The experiment station has now from eighty to 100 acres under cultivation, and forty acres more are being cleared along the roadside. As we rode by we could see men cutting the trees and burning the brush. A little farther on we came to grain fields, not little patches, but fields that would be large on any farm in Virginia. We passed tracts of oats ready for reaping, and rode through barley which was four or more feet in height. Above these on the hillsides were long strips of Siberian wheat, planted last spring and now ripening, and side by side with them strips of experimental grains of one kind and another. On the crest of the hills were the farm buildings with buckwheat in front, and a potato patch of five or six acres between it and the oat fields we first passed. The potatoes were in full blossom, the vines were luxuriant and the hilled-up rows reached to my thighs.

Big Results With Potatoes.

Potatoes grow well in this part of Alaska. Two hundred bushels per acre is not uncommon, and the country is now raising about all that is needed for the towns and the camps. A year or so ago the station sold the yield of five acres for $3500, and it has records of three acres which have produced a value of from $500 to $600 per acre for years in succession. Potatoes are sold by the pound. They bring from 6 to 9 cents, according to season. Some claim the tubers lack the mealiness of those of the Rocky Mountains. Those I have had, have been dry and delicious.

I spent some time at the experiment station. The home of the farmer is a one-story cottage surrounded by beautiful flowers. At one side of it is a great bed of pansies, and in the front yard are more pansies, in patterns of intricate design. About the porch sweet peas have climbed to the height of your head, and the blossoms have a color and freshness not found in the sweet peas in the States. This is so of all the flowers of Alaska. The growth is so rapid, they seem to have been born overnight and that in the rain.

Near the cottage is a hothouse where tomatoes and cucumbers are grown, and across the way are barns and outhouses where grain hay is stored for the winter. There is also a root cellar in the side of a hill not far from the barn. This is a cave about sixty-five feet in length and so lined with board that it is clean and dry the year round. It will hold hundreds of tons and is used for storing the potatoes and other root crops. The potates are put into the cellar as soon as they are dug, which is some time in August, and they will keep there for more than a year. Just opposite the root cellar and a little below it is a large turnip patch. I climbed the fence and pulled up a turnip. It was eight inches thick, and by actual measurement the leaves were seventeen inches long.

During my stay I talked with the superintendent. His name is J. W. Neal. He comes here from the Agricultural Department at Washington. He tells me he has about 100 acres under cultivation, almost all of which is in grain of various kinds. He is clearing more land and extending the farm. I asked him as to the cost of clearing. Mr. Neal replied:

"It cannot be done for less than $100 per acre, and some tracts will cost more. The trees have to be cut, the roots gotten out, and the ground and trees must be burned over in order to kill out the moss. Some of the land has to be drained, and it takes some time before it can be brought under cultivation. A great part of the country is un laid with prehistoric ice, the soil b frozen down to bedrock. In some cases frozen stratum is only a few inches b the surface, and in others it may be a or so deep. After the land is cleared gradually melts until it has no effect u cultivation and growth."

Mr. Neal does not think that large fa will pay in this part of the world. He s the markets for a long time will be lim to the local community which will be s ported by the mines. The demand steadily increase as the country is ope and in time there will probably be a c erable population of small farmers.

The Homesteads.

Leaving the experimental farm, we vis some of the homesteads near by. The was owned by a man named Young, came to Alaska with nothing about years ago. He took up 320 acres of ment land and a large part of this under cultivation. He is raising and potatoes; he has also a big gr where he grows tomatoes and other tables for the mining camps and the Mr. Young was not at home when we but Mrs. Young showed us about. looked over the farm I asked her liked living in this far-off Alaska. plied that she had been a little until she had gone "outside" last but that since she returned she had desire to go out again. Said she:

"This country is my home, and a good home it is. You can see what the mer is like. We are perfectly during the winter. We always have to eat, we get high prices for all that we and we are further ahead every year."

At that moment we were looking over stock in the barnyard. It included two sows, each of which had eight or ten pigs running with her. The pigs were haps a month old. Mrs. Young pointed them, saying, "We sold a pair of those pigs yesterday for $20. That will give you some idea of what things bring in this country."

Our next visit was to a dairy farm belonging to a Mr. Hinckley. This farm supplies much of the milk and cream consumed in Fairbanks, and it also sells butter, buttermilk and cottage cheese. The milk brings $1 a gallon, and cream $1 a pint. Buttermilk sells for $1 a gallon, butter 75 cents a pound and cottage cheese or smearcase for 50 cents a quart. We went with Mr. Hinckley to the barn to look at his cows. He has twenty, which give on the average three or four gallons of milk every twenty-four hours. The milking is done twice a day, and the cows had been brought into the barn at the time of our visit. They are what you would call good average stock in the States.

The cow barn is interesting. It is a well built log structure, thirty feet wide and ninety feet long, with the stalls facing a platform which runs through the middle about two feet from the ground. The walls are sunk in the earth, and the stable is floored throughout with boards, the floors of the stalls sloping to the walks behind them, so that they can be kept perfectly clean. The building has a galvanized iron roof, in which are windows that can be raised for ventilation. It is well lighted. It has a large stove at one end, but Mr. Hinckley says that this is for cooking the feed only, and that the cows get along well without artificial heat.

Adjoining this barn is a hay shed filled with native grass, just harvested, and near it are large fields of oat hay ready for cutting. The dairyman has not bought any hay for several years. He relies on the native grass and his oat hay for his stock. He says the oat hay is quite as good as timothy, and very much crisper, the timothy brought in from outside selling for $100 per ton. Shorts and oats cost, respectively, $90 and $95 per ton.

Before leaving I pulled up a handful of the young oats growing outside the barn and measured it with a two-foot rule. The stalks were eighteen inches long. The oats had been planted only three weeks ago.

A Truck Farm.

Leaving the dairy, we went on to visit a truck farm which lies on the very edge of Fairbanks. This is a homestead that was taken out ten years ago by Stacia Rickert, the wife of a business man of Fairbanks. It consists of 320 acres of land, and it lies within a mile of the center of the town. Mr. Rickert has built here a very pretty cabin surrounded by flowers, and his home is as well furnished and as comfortable as that of any well-to-do farmer of the States. He has cleared about one-fourth of his land, and the farm is one of the show places of Alaska. The ground is as flat as a floor, and as green as the Valley of the Nile. He is now cutting oat hay, of which he has many acres. He has also great fields of barley and potatoes, the latter now in full blossom.

The Rickert farm does a large business in trucking and hothouse farming, supplying a great part of Fairbanks and shipping vegetables to the towns and mining camps for miles around. It sends green stuff to Hot Springs and Fort Gibbon, and also to the gold mines of the Iditarod and Ruby. The freight rate to Ruby is $32 a ton.

The gardens of this farm cover twenty or thirty acres. As we walked through them I asked as to the crops, and was told that there are now in the ground 29,000 cabbages, 30,000 stalks of celery and some acres of head lettuce. The celery is especially fine, growing to a height of four feet. Some of it was sent to Montana a few years ago to show what Alaska could do, and President Taft sampled it during his trip through that State. He declared it the finest he had ever tasted. Mr. Rickert expects to harvest this year about twenty-five tons of turnips, five tons of beets and thirty tons of cabbages. As we went through one of the fields I pulled up a cabbage and put it on the scales in the greenhouse. It weighed twenty-six pounds. Others weigh more. Cabbages are now worth 8 cents a pound, and cauliflowers are selling at from 25 to 26 cents a pound. Some of the crop is sold when it is taken out of the ground. The rest is stored away in the cellar and marketed during the winter.

The hothouses are one of the most important parts of this farm. There are several, each devoted to a different crop. There is one 120 feet long that grows melons only, including watermelons, casabas and cantaloupes. The vines are trained upon wires running along under the glass, and from the beds up to the roof. From these wires the melons hang down, the heavier ones being supported by rags as though in a sling to prevent them breaking the vines. Some of the cantaloupes are now ripe. I asked as to the price, and was told that they sell for $1 a pound. Some of the melons weigh four or five pounds, which means $4 or $5 for a cantaloupe.

Another hothouse is filled with tomatoes and cucumbers, all trained upon wires, and another is devoted to raising green peppers such as are used for pickles and salads, and to be eaten with stuffing.

Unique Seasonal Conditions.

During my stay in the Tanana Valley I have asked the farmers and agricultural experts some questions as to the farming conditions. They are altogether different from those of most parts of the United States proper. Fairbanks is more than 100 miles south of the Arctic Circle, and the growing season is short, ranging from three to four months, and extending in favorable seasons perhaps a half month longer. The last spring frosts occur about the middle of May, and frosts begin again during the latter part of August or first of September. There is really no darkness in midsummer, and the long sunlight adds to the growth of the crop. June, July and August are warm, the thermometer sometimes going to 96 deg.

The winters are cold, in the Tanana Valley the mean temperature in January being about 20 deg. below zero. The thermometer ranges from the freezing point to 60 or 70 deg. below zero during December, January and February. After the freeze-up, which begins about the last of October, there is steady cold weather from then until May. The ground is frozen as hard as a rock; quiet bodies of water become ice to a depth of six feet; and there is from three to six feet of ice on the lakes and the streams. The Yukon has three or four feet of ice. The streams are then the sled roads; and travel is easier than in the summer. The ice and snow begin to melt in April and early May. The small streams flow into the larger ones, raising the ice sheet so that it is torn away from the shore. It breaks into pieces and starts on its way to the sea, the cakes of ice grinding against one another and piling up in great masses. As they go on they carry every movable thing in their path. This movement lasts for a week or so, when the streams clear, and the boats start out from their winter quarters.

Good Soil; Little Rain.

The Tanana Valley is a land of scanty rainfall. Heavy showers are almost unknown. It drizzles often in summer, and much of the rain is during the growing season. The yearly average is about ten or twelve inches of water, including the snow of the winter. Added to the moisture from the skies is that from the strata of perpetual ice, which is found from eight inches to a yard below the surface of the ground. When the land is cultivated, this gradually melts, making the soil deeper and deeper from year to year, until at last the ice has no effect on the crops.

The soil is fairly fertile. Some of that about Fairbanks grows 200 bushels of potatoes per acre without manure. When the woods are cut down the native red-top springs up. There is pasture everywhere in the summer. The best lands are the gently sloping hills, composed of fine silt, sand and gravel. The most of the soil is sandy. The very best is the Fairbanks silt loam, of which there are altogether a half million acres in the Tanana Valley.

I close this letter by warning the would-be settler that cutting a farm from the forest and dragging it out of the ice is no baby job. It is better suited to men of from twenty to thirty than those over sixty. The first year or so will be full of hard work, and the homesteader should bring along enough money to keep himself and his family during that time. Practically all the land needs clearing. A cabin will have to be built, and a garden patch cut out of the woods. A log barn will be needed; and, if possible, a hothouse should be erected. The most of the work will have to be done by the farmer and his family. Wages are high. A common hand gets $5 or $6 a day, and board, or, if hired right along, from $100 to $150 a month. Mr. Rickert pays his "lady cook" $75 a month and her board. A servant who does general housework will want $10 or $12 a week, and women who come in to help on wash days and sweeping days will charge from 50 cents to 75 cents an hour. These are the wages in Fairbanks. The result is that most of the women do their own work, hiring help only for the heaviest kinds of labor.

Husbands to Mend, Wives to Commend.

BY HOLMES HYERS.

"IF 'THE HAPPY WIVES' will please come to order, Mrs. Dolittle will read a paper entitled, 'Mending a Husband's Faults.'"

This announcement brought a sudden hush over the chattering, gaily-dressed women who filled the clubrooms. A subdued undercurrent of excitement betokened an unusual interest in the day's programme. Plumed heads nodded earnest attention, bright eyes glanced at the speaker with sparkling expectancy. But the newest member of "The Happy Wives" sat with downcast eyes and flushed cheeks when the subject of the paper was given out. Having recently qualified for membership, she felt deeply conscious of the dignity of the married state as well as immensely proud of her "Bobbie." Mrs. Bobbie had ideas of her own about wifely loyalty and discussion of husbands. In two months of honeymooning she could bring herself to recognize no flaw in her idol. True, she had come upon unexpected sharp corners in her big man's moods and they hurts in her girlish heart, but to mention them to her dearest friend—impossible!

"To continue the simile"—Phyllis brought her wandering thoughts to the words of the speaker—"faults are like clothes, 'a stitch in time saves nine.' Never put off your mending, Happy Wives. Catch up the little broken places of character before they become yawning habits difficult or impossible to mend. Many a girl has secretly longed to take charge of her lover's socks or shirts [here the newest bride blushed guiltily] but think how much graver the responsibility and keener the pleasure that awaits her in the mending of character. One point I wish to impress upon your memories, however: Never let the dear man suspect that a fault is under inspection. A husband may witness the darning of his socks and take pleasure in the picture of domesticity, but character mending must be done in secret. It requires patience, tact and long-suffering silence. She who aspires to it must study the question from all sides, accept light from every possible source and apply herself diligently to her task.

"Now if there are any questions bring them out. For the benefit of those unacquainted with my history I will state that I have been married three times and consider that I have made a success of all three matrimonial ventures. I am qualified to give advice to the less experienced members."

For a long sixty seconds Phyllis waited for the proverbial pin to drop and break the deadly silence that followed the closing words of the speaker. Mrs. Dolittle's large well-kept face beamed on her silent auditors in suave self-assurance till Phyllis imagined she could hear the purr of satisfaction the husband-expert took in the prospective discussion. Finally a mouse-like little woman rose in her seat and all eyes were turned in her direction.

"My husband is a good man but he has one fault that is very troublesome. He will not come home on time to his meals. Can you suggest any way of curing him?"

A ripple of approval running through the audience might have indicated the presence of other wives whose better-halves were disposed to be late. The cool authoritative voice of the expert pounced on the poor naked fault with eager alacrity:

"There are several remedies, Mrs. Brown. You may choose the one best adapted to the ways of your houshold or in an extreme case you may apply all three. First, give the patient a dose of his own medicine by not beginning the meal until he arrives and letting him do the waiting; secondly, have your dinner at a certain fixed hour and let the late-comer take it cold; thirdly, refuse to prepare meals at uncertain hours and demand that your husband take you to the restaurant. That is sufficient, I believe; now who is next?"

Now that the ice was broken many Happy Wives bobbed up eager to expose their husbands' frailties. A homely woman dressed in a three-seasons-ago style had the floor:

"My husband is too extravagant in his ideas of women's dress. He is always admiring some expensively-gowned woman and asking me why I do not look like that. I am trying to put aside a savings account and it is too annoying to have him admire things I might have if I spent his money recklessly."

"I agree with you that it is annoying, but you need not put up with it. Study the fashions. Subscribe for the ultra-fashionable style books. Be well versed in the latest thing from Paris. Criticise the gowns your husband admires, intelligently but ruthlessly. Make him believe his judgment is worth nothing at all. Lastly, and mostly, buy the very best you can afford and study your own needs. It is more important to keep your husband's regard than to have a private savings account."

By this time Phyllis shared the excitement that attended the next move, and her horror of the whole proceeding was almost swallowed up in her feminine curiosity. But the next question sent the blushes chasing over her fair face.

"My husband wants a house full of children. I think two are quite enough, but he is continually pointing out his sister's family of six (only a year apart, too) as the ideal family."

The expert mender, not at all disturbed, came forward with the remedy.

"Send your sister-in-law for a vacation and have her leave her six cherubs with you. See that your husband shares in the care of the ideal family. I'll warrant the cure."

A sudden panic seized the newest bride lest these awful women should expect her to rise in her seat and complain of her Bobbie. During the burst of applause that greeted the answer concerning the too-large family Phyllis slipped out of the room, ran breathlessly to the cloak-room, snatched up her wraps and scurried to her waiting electric. She drove home in a hot-headed fashion and threw herself on the couch. She buried her aching head in the pillows, her brain whirling through a maze of husbands with ragged clothes and torn characters. If men were such dreadful creatures why had her mother allowed her to go through the marriage ceremony with one of the deadly species? Was her dear, adorable Bobbie like all the rest when the honeymoon veneer wore off? She saw herself a neglected wife burdened with an enormous family and a husband who forgot to come home and who admired other women's gowns. What had become of the dreams of tender partnership whispered in her lover's ear?

At this point in her reflections Mr. Robert, member of the faulty sex, let himself in at the front door, whistled a cheery announcement of his arrival, met with no response, and searched frantically for his bride, who had never failed to meet him with a smile and a kiss. When he found her on the couch with hot head and tearing sobs he turned sick with fear.

No—nothing was the matter. No—she was not sick. Nothing to tell—she would be all right in a m-m-minute.

The big fellow picked up the slight figure and carried her to the arm chair where their little differences usually melted away in renewed tenderness. In spite of her terrible discoveries about husbands the newest bride found much comfort in the strong arms that held her close and the cool hands that charmed away her headache. She was on the point of telling Bobbie everything when she remembered Mrs. Dolittle's admonition, "never let the dear man suspect," and she kept silent. The man waited expectantly for the explanation, but he had to give it up when the maid announced dinner.

In the course of the silent meal the young husband suddenly remembered an engagement for the evening. He regarded the tear-stained face opposite, doubtfully:

A Good Tip.

A WILD-EYED, disheveled gentleman, apparently from the country, rushed into the police station, shouting he had been robbed.

The sergeant finally succeeded in soothing him into coherency.

"Now, let's hear all about it," said he.

"Well, a half an hour before we reached St. Paul I had $5000 in paper that I was bringing here to put in the bank. When I got outside the depot I couldn't find it anywhere. I don't know where it went. That money means a whole lot to me. If I don't—"

"Now, now. Don't get excited again," exclaimed the officer. "That train breaks up here. Maybe the porter saw your money when he was cleaning up. I'll send for him.

"Did you see anything of a small package when you were cleaning up your car?" the sergeant asked when the porter arrived.

"Yas, sah. It's a lot of money, sah."

"Where is it now?"

"Here, sah," and he produced it from an inside pocket.

The gentleman from the country cheered up perceptibly when he saw the roll.

"That's it," he exclaimed. "And it's all here, the whole $5000."

"Now, look here, porter," said the officer severely. "I want to know why you didn't turn that package in the minute you found it."

"Why, sah," he replied in an injured tone, "I s'posed de gemman had left it for a tip." —[Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"Go Up Front!"

THE district trustee was addressing a school in Ohio.

"Children," said he, "I want to talk to you for a few moments about one of the most wonderful, one of the most important organs in the whole world. What is it that throbs away, beats away, never stopping, never ceasing, whether you wake or sleep, night and day, week in and week out, month in and month out, year in and year out, without any volition on your part, hidden away in the depths, as it were, unseen by you, throbbing, throbbing, throbbing rhythmically all your life long?"

During the pause for oratorical effect a small voice was heard:

"I know—it's the gas meter."—[Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Disadvantage of Armor.

WHEN Princess Mary was quite a little girl the Queen took her one day to the Tower of London, and was very anxious that she should understand the historical associations of the place. In the course of their tour the royal party came upon a particularly fine suit of armor with spiked helmet, spikes on the knees, and spurs.

Thinking to impress the Princess with the chivalry of those days, Her Majesty said: "This, Mary, is a suit of armor that used to be worn by the knights. What do you think of it?"

For a time the Princess remained silent, while she seemed to be thinking deeply.

"Perhaps it was all right," she said at last, doubtfully; "but can't you imagine how awfully it must have scratched—the furniture?"—[Pearson's Weekly.

With the Other Porkers.

"STOP!" The brakes of the motor were suddenly applied, a pandemonium of whirling wheels ensued, and the motorist came face to face with Constable Coppem, who had been hiding in the hedge.

"Excuse me, sir," said the portly policeman, taking out his notebook and pencil, "but you exceeded the speed limit by two miles over a measured piece of road."

"I have done nothing of the kind," retorted the motorist; "and besides—"

"Well, if you don't believe me I'll call the sergeant, bein' as it was 'im as took the time. 'E's in the pigsty yonder."

"Don't trouble to do that," was the prompt reply: "I would sooner pay fifty times than disturb the sergeant at his meals!"—[London Tit-Bits.

A Diplomatic Answer.

[Chicago News:] "How did you come out?" asked his friend. "Will she have you?"

"Her answer," replied the diplomatic attache, "is partially satisfactory. Enough so to continue negotiations. She says if she ever does marry it will be a man of good looks, courage and ability."

CALIFORNIA'S FIRST CROP OF COTTON.

A Romantic Tragedy. By Edward A. Morphy.

IF YOU study the official data on the subject, you will find that the California cotton industry is but seven years old, that the first bale was ginned in 1909, in the Imperial Valley, and that the cotton output of the State for the current year will probably exceed 100,000 bales.

Imperial Valley claims the pioneer crop, and—commercially speaking—Imperial Valley is quite right in doing so.

As a matter of fact, however, the first California cotton crop was raised in the Kern Valley, some forty years ago. It never was picked, ginned or baled; and the history of that failure is a romantic tragedy.

For reasons that need not here be stated, the published chronicles of Kern county gloss over the titanic struggles which lent contemporaneous interest to the development of those great irrigation schemes which eventually brought agricultural prosperity to the region.

There are men living, nevertheless, who will recall the disputes which ensued upon the earlier efforts of Messrs. Haggin, Tevis & Fisher to divert into alien channels the life-giving waters of the Kern River. Those disputes were no paltry little hole and corner affairs, with clubs or six-shooters. Serviceable armies of men, with Remingtons and Winchesters, were installed on the spot by the rival interests, and odd little clusters of split redwood headstones cropped up like mushrooms along the river bank to mark the places where these armies met, and engaged each other, and left their dead.

Haggin, the head of the firm, was J. B. Haggin, the famous mining magnate and race horse-breeder; Tevis was the equally well-known Lloyd Tevis, head of the Wells Fargo Company. Jim Fisher was just Jim Fisher—a grizzly-bearded, weather-bitten, self-contained 'Forty-niner, whom nobody would notice in the crowd on Montgomery street, San Francisco. He spoke little, never butted in on any proposition, and had a habit of eternally chewing a cigar. He was the man who actually handled the Kern county enterprise, and conducted to a successful termination the incidental riverside war.

During all the strenuous years that he was building his dams, digging his canal, and littering the battle-fields with neat wooden gravestones, Fisher had his mind set on one great purpose: He would transform Kern county into the cottonfield of the new California.

"Folks can eat anything!" was his theory, "but they've got to have cotton for their shirts! There's nothing on earth to touch cotton!"

So, as soon as everything was ready, and the irrigation of the valley an accomplished fact, he quietly marked off a square mile of the new fertility as his very own, and planted it out in cotton.

Then he built himself a snug but unpretentious little house, and sat down in it to watch that cotton growing.

It grew.

Under those blistering skies, anything that loves the sun grows wonderfully.

It flourished.

The deeper lines seemed to fade from the face of old Jim Fisher, his cigar took a jauntier angle.

No blight came, no pest, no blizzard. The small plants waxed strong; they gleamed awhile like a sea of emerald green, then burst into bolls of snowy white, like wisps of spray on gleaming water.

Fisher, watching from his lonely house by the cotton-field, realized that his dream was coming true.

This was all nearly forty years ago. Kern county had not the population it boasts today. Fisher's cotton bloomed in a desert of yesterday—a freshly-irrigated wilderness that, as yet, was hardly known. Labor was scarce, but Fisher was indomitable. An order went forth from Bakersfield, and presently from somewhere back in civilization men came with saws, and nails, and lumber, and axes, and built up sheds and shanties under Fisher's approving eye.

The cotton had to be picked, the pickers had to have shanties, the picked cotton had to have sheds, even though there was only a square mile of it.

"Looks like 600 bales at least!" chuckled Fisher. "It'll paralyze the Pacific Coast! Next year I'll plant 6000 acres of it!"

Sheds and shacks were ready, the soft breeze of the eventide fanned the fluffy bolls on the cotton plants like waves of warm snow. Fisher contemplated in his mile of California cotton the dreams of a life time made concrete at last.

The labor problem had still to be considered, of course; the cotton had still to be picked. The country was new and men were not plentiful. Fisher fully realized that it would be useless to attempt to cultivate cotton in Kern county if it cost more to gather than it would fetch on the market.

But he had calculated on this item, too. He was not a man to be caught napping. He had hired his pickers—$2 a day and their board—and carted them overland. Everything was ready for the psychological moment when the harvesting was to begin.

The men were to arrive on Sunday. On Monday the picking would start. On Saturday Fisher began counting the hours.

The men arrived on time. Fisher was so happy that he did not go to bed. His dream had come true, the ambition of his life was attained. Of all living mortals, he alone had arrived at the other end of the rainbow. Who could sleep in the middle of such happiness?

So he sat up. So, for a reason, did the cotton-pickers.

They were a mixed grill, a hard lot at that, and some of them were even harder than the majority. All were out for the main chance, and none of them nourished any of Fisher's romantic sentiments in regard to cotton.

"Boys," spoke one of them softly. "This here cotton field is sure the apple of Old Man Fisher's eye. Guess he'd ante up some bucks sooner nor see anything go wrong with it."

Somebody grunted a dubious assent.

"Maybe so," grumbled another. "But nothing never goes wrong with none o' Jim Fisher's lay-outs no-how. You bet he's got it all cinched up tight."

The first speaker laughed quietly.

"Dunno," said he. "Seems to me we've got him where the hair is short. Cotton ain't stuff as waits for no Mister Jim Fisher when it feels as how it wants to get picked. If it ain't picked polite-like, there and then, it gets peeved-like and huffy, and jest blows off in alabaster puffs—all snowy and promiscus-like."

The man paused and his comrades gathered in closer around him. He grinned knowingly and resumed.

"Now if we men just stick together," he explained, "and put it plain to Fisher that it's six bucks a day apiece, or nothing doing, what's he got to say about it only to hand out the spondulicks! He's got to pay it, boys! We got him by the neck!"

The men listened. To their ears and intellects the plan seemed good.

Jim Fisher, on his veranda, heard nothing, but watched the moonlight gleam on the cotton bolls, and thanked his lucky stars.

He was standing by the edge of the field when the men came out at dawn, and he welcomed them genially to the achievement of his heart's desire.

One of the men stepped forth from the rest.

"I'm speaking for the crowd, boss," he announced grimly. "We've been figuring as how this is very special and very high-toned cotton in this here field of yours, and as how, therefore, it's worth $6 a day to pick it. That's what the boys say!"

Fisher got his teeth into his unlighted cigar and tilted it to an unholy angle.

"Suppose I say it's only worth $2—same as you agreed on—?" he asked tentatively.

The spokesman smiled.

"Picking don't start till it is six bucks!" he answered.

Fisher vouchsafed no further comment for a moment or so. He took his unlighted cigar from his lips and seemed to be seeking inspiration through the process of contemplating it.

"Got a light?" he asked the spokesman mechanically.

The man handed him one of those wads of evil-smelling, sulphur-tipped matches that were in those days universally popular on the Pacific Slope.

Fisher thanked him, tore off a match, and held it—the sulphur still sputtering—to the end of his cigar.

"The stinking stuff!" he coughed, and expectorated vehemently. "Guess you've got me rattled!" he added, nodding sulkily at the spokesman. "Looks as if you reckoned you'd got me in the hat."

He drew an old letter from his pocket as he spoke and began twisting it into a spill with which to light his cigar, well and properly, while he sucked out the horrid taste of the sulphur.

"Guess we did figure it something that way," admitted the other. "Cotton pickers don't seem so thick out here that they're fighting for standing room. This crop will be gone before you can bring down another crowd. Better smile and hand us the six bucks!"

Fisher nodded musingly, and took the cigar between his teeth again while he struck another evil-smelling match and lighted the twisted paper.

"The hell you say!" he murmured, as though speaking to himself.

The spokesman smiled and turned to wink at his waiting comrades.

As he did so, Fisher stepped forward.

The morning breeze was blowing from behind him, gently fanning the cotton in the pale flush of the dawn.

"The hell you say!"

He opened out the little wisp of paper and flicked it into the cotton.

Hissing softly, like the alarm of a rattlesnake, the cotton sucked up the flame, then blazed out, yellow and beautiful, into the cool air of the morning. Then there was a whirring swish and a crackle, as the fire made a draught for itself; then the rush of a hurrying conflagration.

"Great God! Save it, boys!" shouted the spokesman of the strikers. "Lick it out before the whole field is afire!"

Ready as terriers, the men dashed forward, eager to beat down the withering flames.

Swifter than the men, more menacing than the blaze that leaped behind him, Fisher turned on the strikers. He held a revolver levelled at the stomach of their leader. His cigar stuck out above his undershot jaw, perpendicular to it and parallel with his barrel.

"Stand back you b'anked swine!" he gritted, venomously. "That's my cotton! I'll shoot hell out of the first sweet[illegible] mother's son of you that tries to put it out!"

The men shrank back, dumfounded.

Tipped with an opalescent haze of shimmering smoke, the flames spread forward gleefully, fan-fashion, swallowing the whole plantation, and leaving but a black swath of smoldering blackness where they passed.

A generation later, when J. B. Haggin and Lloyd Tevis had become more nearly [illegible] mere memories in the land, and the name of Fisher—who never courted the limelight anyhow—signified nothing to the modern Californian, another man conceived the idea that cotton growing would greatly contribute to our prosperity.

Under better labor conditions, and in kindlier circumstances all around, the Imperial Valley crop of 1909 succeeded gloriously where Fisher's Kern county venture had failed.

But Fisher was the first man to grow cotton on an elaborate scale in California, and pioneer honors should not be withheld from his memory merely because the first and only crop he raised here was fated to go up in smoke.

Trench Men's Dreams.

STUPEFYING EFFECT OF EXPLODING SHELLS IS EXCESSIVE COMA.

[Springfield Republican:] Wounds that the soldiers suffer only mentally; "trench dreams" that bring an imaginary enemy tearing down upon them; stupors, crouchings, starings, tremblings and nights of sleeplessness that follow in the path of all these things are taking as great a toll from the European armies as shot and shell.

More and more, every day, the scientists point out, it is becoming apparent that the nation of the strongest nerves is going to win this war, for in increasing numbers are soldiers being taken from the ranks who have neither a scratch nor a hurt, but who are incapacitated for action because their nerves have broken down in one or more of dozens of possible ways.

That the horrors of trench warfare, with its sudden alarms at night, the bursting of shells and the burying of men by mine explosions have a lasting effect on the men who undergo them, is the conclusion reached by Dr. E. Murray Auer of Philadelphia, who for some time was attached to the twenty-second general hospital of the British expeditionary force, "somewhere in France." In a paper which was read recently before the Philadelphia Neurologists' society, Dr. Auer gives the results of his observations.

In practically all of the cases which were observed by Dr. Auer, the soldiers received no appreciable physical injury, the effect being purely mental. One such instance cited by the physician was found in a boy, 19 years old. This boy had been three days under a sustained and heavy shell fire. At the end of that time he was threatened by his sergeant with courtmartial for sleeping while on sentry duty. This led to an examination and the sending of the boy to the hospital. He was in a stupor for ten days. The same was true of another soldier who had seen his chum blown to pieces.

During the time of their coma, which in some cases lasted more than a week, the soldiers gave the impression that they again were living through the experiences which had caused the stupor to come on. This was evidenced by their terrified expressions. They crouched, started and stared wildly when spoken to. One such man rose from his bed in the middle of the night and recited in a one sided conversation his experiences of a charge and burial by a mine explosion, and then relapsed into his stuporous state.

Another result of the shock, according to Dr. Auer's observations, is a continued shaking of the entire body, accompanied by various pains and unusually severe headaches. In some cases this shaking has been observed to last several days, and even weeks, although in most instances its duration is of a few hours. In one instance this trembling came after a soldier had twice been buried in a mine explosion, had been through a charge and under heavy bombardment in a trench and finally was hit by a piece of rock, which while not injuring him, knocked him down. In this case the tremor of the head was marked, and lasted for some time.

Temporary loss of memory is a common thing with the men who have been through some extremely trying period or who have suffered a sudden shock. One such soldier, after being near a shell which exploded, could remember nothing which happened to him until he came to himself walking along a lane some time later. Another man in the hospital thought himself back in the trenches and became violent, moving his cupboard about as though it were a machine gun and pointing it at his enemies. When he suddenly returned to a normal state he could remember nothing of his experiences.

One of the most common, and at the same time most pitiful, of the many mental results of the struggle is the inability to sleep soundly and recurrence of so-called trench dreams. It is not uncommon, Dr. Auer says, to see soldiers start from their beds in the middle of the night, crying out and weeping as they dream of being chased by Germans with bayonets, of being buried under debris following a mine explosion and of losing their way in a trench in a fog and being unable to get back.

The fear which is commonly found is not the kind which a layman would expect. The soldiers do not fear injury to themselves. They are rather afraid of doing something wrong, a fear of an emergency in which he will fail or that he will lose the confidence of his comrades. In one instance the patient was afraid to go to sleep for fear he would not awake. One man who had no fear of being wounded had a wild desire to get away from the din of battle and was afraid of the noise.

[Louisville Courier-Journal:] "That youngster of yours is pretty bright, eh?"

"Reads Henry James at sight," answered the Boston man.

SEEING DARKLY, THEN FACE TO FACE.

A Question of Stars. By Arthur Wallace Peach.

TWICE the young fellow passed the half-opened library door before he could spur his courage to the point of entering. The first time the sight of his father's serene face intent on the page of his favorite evening paper had proved a deterrent. The image of the face remained with the boy as he stopped in the dining-room—a kindly face, aristocratic in its calm repose, regular in contour and firm in texture. The thick gray hair, parted on the side and frosted at the temples, only served to heighten the thoughtful air of the countenance.

The lad dreaded in his inmost soul to cross the threshold of the door; so he passed the door again, and went on into the vestibule. There he hesitated, whistled a feeble strain, steadied himself with an impatient gesture, and, going briskly through the hall, turned into the room.

Mr. Dean dropped his paper and looked up with a smile of welcome.

"Well, Raymond, how—"

"Pardon me, father, for interrupting you, but I've come to tell you it's no use."

The springtime on the older man's face changed to winter, but his voice was serene.

"Sit down, son, and tell me about it—all about it."

The boy caught his breath as he heard the pain in his father's quiet voice, and for a moment, he wavered; then he swung his eyes toward the glowing embers in the fireplace, and began to speak swiftly, letting the words leap and run over the choking barriers of his heart.

"It's just this way, father. I've stayed in the mills a year, but I can stand it no longer. I feel as if I were part of a machine, grinding, grinding, grinding. It wears on my very soul. I want to do something that isn't all machinery; I want to work in a field where there is more beauty; I want my life to be of service; I want to make it count for others in the world. Money isn't everything; and I'm tired of hearing talk, talk, talk, of sales, expenses, competition—it's all sordid, lifeless, inhuman, this industry. On one end, raw material; on the other, dollars; and between machinery made of men's souls, that, worn out, go to the junk heap. It's too sordid; there's no beauty in it; there's nothing inspiring about it except bigger sales, bigger sales—the petty material triumphs." In the fervor of his outburst, he whirled toward his father, and saw the shadows of deep, sudden shock in his face. He stopped suddenly, letting the vibrant tones of his voice soften.

"Father, forgive me for speaking this way; but I've been brooding on this matter, down there in the grind and grime, until the very thought of going to the office in the morning fairly sickens me. I should have spoken long ago, but I've been in hopes, for your sake, that my feeling in the matter would change. It hasn't, and I think it right that I should tell you."

There was a brief silence between them, broken only by muffled sounds from the servants' division of the house and the slow majestic ticking of the great clock.

His father picked up his paper with fingers that fumbled awkwardly as if the numbness of age had suddenly come to them. He brushed his forehead aimlessly, and said in a monotone:

"What do you wish to do?"

Before answering the boy let his gaze drift again to the fire. "I want to go to New York and study art. I may never achieve anything, but I hope to do something that will bring something into the world besides money—something of joy, pleasure, happiness. I hate to say these things, Dad, but the work down there is in my very marrow."

"When are you planning to go?" his father asked in the same monotonous key.

"I'm ready to go tomorrow with your permission," came the quick answer.

The paper was shuffled a few inches lower between Mr. Dean's fingers. He, too, was now looking at the fire. He cleared his throat and his lips parted as if in the preparatory act of speech, but the lips sagged into place in silence. After a moment they moved.

"My boy, I have always felt that it is morally wrong to compel another to do any work in which he is not content. I had supposed that after college you would work with me, but my father gave me full freedom of choice, and I gladly give you yours—and wish you the best of luck!"

He turned and smiled.

The boy rose with an answering smile, eased in mind and heart by his father's quiet acceptance of the situation, unconscious of the wintry grayness of his father's smile.

"Dad, I certainly am grateful; I know how you feel. I certainly will make good."

He managed to get away quickly, and he was relieved that he was able to, for there was a great love between them and the imminence of parting lay on the heart of each.

As he went whistling up the stairs to his room for a light coat, he heard a sound from the library that was suggestive of a newspaper suddenly being crushed between locked hands; but he thought nothing of it; such things are recalled only in after years when memory knocks at the door of the heart and asks: "Do you remember?"

"Another one of those editorials that make him angry, probably," the boy thought.

He was wrong. In the library the head of the great Welsh mills sat with clasped hands, with his forehead pressed upon them; and in his soul was the twilight of Gethsemane.

"Be back in a couple of hours, father," the boy called on his way to the front door, and the father answered, "All right, son."

The starry twilight seemed to greet Raymond like a friend as he walked the spacious grounds of the estate. With youth in his heart and a sense of great relief in his soul, he swung lightly down the street on his way to the hotel.

Eberton was a village of the type termed "manufacturing"—seldom suggestive of comfort or charm; but the natural scenery gave it an air of distinction while the prosperity and evident well-being of the dwellers therein were visible in the neat, comfortable houses that lined the broad streets.

Down those streets Raymond went with a sensation such as a prisoner might have who walks for the last time the paths of the prison which he is to leave. From the residential section, he entered a broad well-lighted common, in the center of which a fountain played. Around the square were the business places of the village and on one side the postoffice.

As he went up the office steps, a voice spoke his name in a respectful tone, and he turned to see one of the old workmen, McAndrews, touching his cap. McAndrews's craggy face seemed suffused with a warmth not usually visible there, and his eyes under their white brows were bright.

"Pardon me, Mr. Dean, but the boys in the mills are after wantin' to give your fither a wee bit of a gift for his birthday; an' we've just had a meetin' of the committee"—he accented the last syllable—"an' it broke up in a fight, because each mon wanted to be the mon to presint the gift. It's been done in years past by ol' Timothy Dugan, but—he's dead, so he can't do it. Now, we thought we'd ask you. Who'd you think ought to make the speech "

Raymond was a little embarrassed, for the old workman's voice had been tuned to the roar of machines, and the need of loud speech was upon him; moreover, his voice grew louder as his absorption in his topic increased. Then, too, the boy was puzzled.

"Gosh, I don't know, Mac. I know only a few of you. You could send it through the mail and sign all your names. That would save picking out one man to make the speech."

"'Through the mail,'" the old man repeated with the faint suggestion of a snort as he shook his head. "You ain't been here long, Mr. Dean, or you'd know. Why, we all get in the big yard at noon; then we send for him, an' he comes out on the steps; an' then—why, boy, there ain't a man in all those mills"—he pointed in their direction with a stiff emphatic finger—"but what loves the Big Boss! We couldn't go signin' all them names! Why, boy—"he covered his mouth suddenly and looked around the postoffice with the shock of realization of his location in his eyes. His voice dropped. "You think we're doin' this for politeness's sake? Not a bit of it! We're with the Big Boss, first, last, and all the time!"

Muttering to himself and shaking his head as was his wont when aroused, McAndrews hurried out; and the young fellow knew, though he knew not why or how, that he had offended the veteran workman.

From the office Raymond went to the hotel, picked a time-table from the rack, and sat down by a desk. After noting the information he desired, he leaned back to day-dream a little, for the thought of New York and art was like the touch of a magic finger upon his imagination.

Into the midst of his brief dreaming, a voice, clear-cut, low-pitched but incisive, came. The hotel was the haven of all business representatives who came to the factories; so the first words of the speaker did not surprise Raymond; thereafter, he listened intently.

"I enjoy my visits in this place, for it's a place where a man has made business a fine art. I have always been willing to believe that there's nothing esthetic in efficiency; but I find that there is here. Somewhere I've read something to the effect that history is merely the shadow of a man; this village with its prosperity, its contentment, good schools, happy homes is the shadow of 'Jim' Dean. There's music and beauty and happiness in his plant, its machines and its output. He's put business on a plane where it's more than even a science; it's an art. In my humble opinion, any work is an art when it reaches a stage where its principles are so intricate that only a man who is an artist in soul can master them; and Dean is an artist."

Raymond glanced sharply at the speaker, and saw a man of thoughtful face and cultured appearance.

His companion, after a moment, said: "I hardly agree with you in your conclusion—"

Raymond rose, thinking to himself, "And I don't either. Art in a lathe factory—whew!"

As he left the hotel his pace quickened, for his last intention of the evening carried him to the home of the One Girl.

He found her waiting for him in the immemorial way of a maid with a man. He gathered her slight but supple form tightly in his arms, then looking down into the fair rosiness of her face, he asked her to guess what the good news was that he had for her concerning himself.

"You've been promoted!"

His face lost its glow. "No, not that."

She guessed again and again, but each guess was wide.

So, his happiness returning with the thought, he told her: "I'm going to New York to study art!"

He saw various changes come to her face—from surprise to wonder, to astonishment, to thought, to seriousness.

She drew away from him and sat down, bidding him with a shy gesture to sit beside her.

"What about your father, dear?" she asked. "You know his plans for you and for—for us."

He let the music of her voice echo to silence in his heart before he answered. "Dad will miss me; but as he practically said, it's a case of each man following his own star. We didn't argue; we never do. He knew how I felt. But you, Ruth!" He turned to her and spoke earnestly, in an anxious and surprised tone. "You don't seem very glad for me? Yet I suppose you will miss me."

For a moment she let him see the deep, dusk-hidden lights in her eyes; then her will veiled the glimpse of her soul.

"Dear, you know I shall miss you," she answered softly, "but I'll tell you frankly why I am not glad for you in the sense you wish me to be. I suppose I should be enthusiastic about it. I know that many of your friends will be, and will speak with a long sigh of your going to study art. Somehow, art and music seem to have an aura about them that suggests mystery and holiness. I imagine I am too practical, but it seems to me that the man who builds a great insttitution, guides it and directs it to the benefit of men, is as great an artist as the man who paints a famous canvas, makes a great speech, writes a great book—yes, when I think how closely the former's efforts lie to life, how much they mean for human lives, I think he is really the greater artist!"

Silence approached as if reluctant to end her words.

The boy stirred in his seat. His voice was moody in tone. "I heard a chap tonight saying something like that, only that wasn't what he meant. I suppose it's been said hundreds of times, but I just happened to hear it when I had the thought of art in mind."

He repeated the conversation as he remembered it, and in a few quick words, she made him see that her thought and the speaker's thought were fundamentally the same.

She went on gently, a little air of regret playing through her accents. "I often think how far your father's life reaches, how closely and deeply it is entwined with the happiness of the people here. Mrs. Randolph lives just next door; she's an invalid, you know; but she's kept her house for forty years, and educated the two girls—just because she has some stock in your father's mills. You see, he has made possible all that she has done; and no doubt there are others—thousands of whom we do not know, whose happiness he has made possible. He's almost like Kipling's artist, painting on a league-long canvas. Dear, if you've thought of all these things and many more, and still want to study art—then do! But I've always thought you regarded your painting as just a hobby; and I don't want you to make a hobby your life-work. I have always admired your father as my father did. I think there's beauty in your father's work, and wonder in it, and the glory of service, and as your father does it, there's something heroic in it. And oh, dearie, I want you to be heroic!"

She laid her dark head against his shoulder, after her last words which came soaring up from that mysterious and beautiful place where moving thought is transformed into moving speech. She drew his arm around her. "I don't want to discourage you," she said tenderly; "nor do I want you to think that my heart is not with you in any work you undertake; and it is for you to follow your star, only be sure it is the right star! I must tell you, too, that I have dreamed of your growing up beside your father, joining gradually in his splendid work of service, taking the burdens from his shoulders as the years go. That is why I have spoken in the way I have—Why, are you going to leave me?"

His face was a little pale, but a dim smile burned faintly in his eyes. He held her for a little and looked into her wondering eyes; his voice and his words were gay and whimsical, but the undertone was like the sound of far waters—the undertone of the tides on the shores of the great decision.

"Sweetheart, the star I saw has vanished; I think it was an imitation one. I see another, rather dim, but brightening, and that I shall follow. I can understand how a man can see darkly and then face to face! Anyway, I've had my angle of vision twisted, and it's done me good! Now, I'll see father. Pleasant dreams—"

As he approached his home, after a rapid walk, he noticed, for the first time, how large and lonely the great house looked.

"Ten years since mother died. Father has been lonely—Jove! how thoughtless I have been! That star may be only the star of duty, after all; but with God's help I'll follow it till following days are done!"

He found that his father had retired, and went to his door and knocked. In answer to a faint call he entered.

A soft light was shining over the bed; his father was partly sitting up; at his right were letters that had been suddenly shuffled together.

With quick vision, realization came to the boy that his father was growing old, and the knowledge stung him. He tossed his hat onto the bed, drew up a chair, and began cheerfully: "Well, Dad, I've had a complete change of heart tonight! I'm going to stick by you after all!"

To the boy's utter astonishment he saw his father's hands go to his face and the face turn to the pillow.

"Why, father!"

He sprang to his feet, and in one stride reached the bed.

MOHAIR PRODUCTION IN AMERICA.

The Angora Goat in the West, Southwest and Northwest.

IN RECENT years the goat has been coming into his own, made respectable at last, after centuries of opprobrium. This has been despite the fact that from time immemorial he has been useful to man, possibly domesticated as early as was the dog. He is mentioned in Genesis and Deuteronomy. In the Book of Samuel is note of a man whose possessions were great, for "he had a thousand goats.' In Chronicles it is told that the Arabians as tribute brought Jehoshaphat 7700 rams and 7700 he-goats. The Egyptians reared goats 4000 years ago, as shown by stone-cut pictographs. Inflated goatskins served to float the rafts on Mesopotamian rivers when Nineveh and Babylon flourished. Virgil wrote an ode to goats.

Yet, however valuable he was in furnishing food and clothing to man, the goat once was considered not exactly respectable. There is Hebraic separation of the blessed and damned into "sheep" and "goats." Very ancient, yet still known in Latin countries, is the scapegoat, driven away or killed after being loaded with the sins of a repentant one. In Mexico, to apply any form of the word "goat" to humanity is gravest insult. Goat-footed was Pan, the piping god of woodland and flocks, and so is the Devil, of more modern mythology. At the best, the goat may have been considered frivolous, despite the gravity of his beard, for our word "caper" comes direct from the Latin "capra," meaning goat; also the word "capricious."

Herein, however, there was intention to refer only to the modern and refined goat, now assuming aristocratic place among the beasts of the field. The common goat is passe. In his place has come the Angora, provider of both raiment and food. The breed comes from Asia Minor, around the vilayet of Angora. It is absolutely distinct from the ordinary type, though interbreeding is possible, and, at times, has served to strengthen the stock at the expense of the fleece. Somewhat similar is the Cashmere, a somewhat smaller goat, from whose fleeces are made the shawls of the famous Himalayan Valley.

As a gift from the Sultan of Turkey, the first Angoras, nine in number, are understood to have come to the United States in 1849. Credited with the first Angora importations, also, are Dr. J. B. Davis of South Carolina and Richard Peters of Atlanta, Ga. In 1881 the Turkish government prohibited exportation of Angoras. Yet the stock, some of it of no very pure strain, continued to be received in South Africa and the United States till these parts of the world were well stocked.

It is believed the first Angoras on the Pacific Coast were brought overland by William M. Landrum of Watsonville, Cal., later of Texas. Twenty-six animals, mainly bucks, were brought to California from South Africa in 1894-1895, apparently before enactment of a South African law prohibiting exportation or placing a prohibitive tax on exports. The first American Angoras were crossed largely with the common goat. Thus size and hardiness were secured, but years of careful breeding have been necessary to bring the fleeces back to the desired quality and weight. As early as 1909 in the United States were 1,000,000 goats of enough Angora blood to make shearing profitable.

"Mohair," the trade name for the fleece of the Angora, carries over into the cloth trade, after manufacture. The material has a pleasing luster of its own, and is especially suitable for women's wear. Rarely or never does it appear to be combined with wool or used in place of wool. The word is only a short departure from the original Arabic and means "choice" or "select." A variation is "moire" (French) applied to a sort of watered silk.

In addition to the making of dress goods, mohair is used for automobile tops, coat linings, men's summer suits, braids, rugs, carriage robes, imitation furs, couch and table covers, sofa pillows, portieres, doll hair, and, divulging a deep trade secret, even for false human hair, after being carefuly dyed. For such uses, extra lengths of mohair sell from $5 to $20 a pound, according to length and quality. The best fleeces come from kids, young mothers and does, the older animals producing a coarser quality, with less luster and curling qualities.

Skins (pelts,) with fleece attached, are salable at from $5 to $10 each, to be made into carriage robes of very attractive sort, as well as into muffs and "fur" trimmings.

According to a report received from Secretary J. E. McCarthy of the National Mohair Growers' Association, prices for mohair vary greatly, ranging downward from 65 cents. Prices in Texas are better than in Arizona, where current sales run from 38 to 42 cents, with almost no separation of grades. A Texas estimate, probably striking an average for the entire country, is from six to nine pounds of fleece a year, in two clippings, from grown does and muttons, the bucks running from seven to sixteen pounds.

Official data at hand give the average scouring value of mohair at 85 per cent. Yet the Angora is a cleanly animal, its fleeces in several southwestern flocks visited scouring without even 5 per cent. of dirt or grease. In the mohair trade is a curious feature that surely will be corrected in the future. While mohair goods sell even higher than woolens, the mohair grower gets less for his product than does the sheepman. Good Arizona merino grade wool is notably heavy with grease, burs and dirt, and when bought on the range at 20 cents, is said to cost in the East, after scouring, at least 62 cents; this compared with 40-cent Arizona average for clean mohair. Just why this discrimination has not been explained satisfactorily. The trend of the market is upward, however. Mohair goods have become fashionable, and the Turkish sources of supply, whence have come the most esteemed fleeces in the English market, have been cut off by the war, while the flocks themselves have suffered.

Much of the "mutton" sold on the block nowadays really is goat meat, ordinarily of inferior quality. Angora wethers, however, are considered superior to even the best mutton. Angora meat usually is sold as "lamb," with full satisfaction to the purchaser. Fat goat wethers, averaging 100 pounds on foot, have been selling in Kansas City from 5 to 6¼ cents a pound.

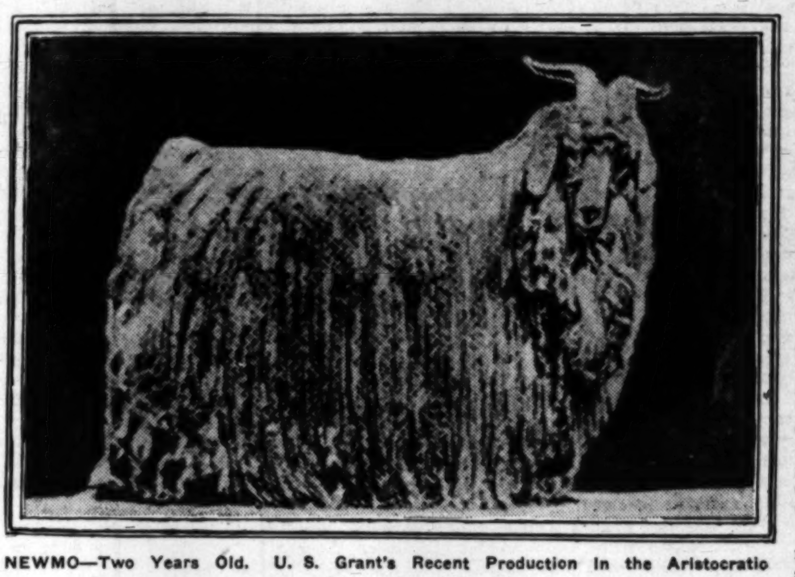
Especially strong foothold has been secured by the Angora in the Southwest. The first band was taken into Northern Arizona thirty years ago by John Simmons, from the Van Doren flocks of Western New Mexico. Then the fleeces averaged only two pounds a year, increased now to about six pounds. Arizona growers seem rather of the opinion they are approaching a practical limit in breeding, considering the conditions of their range. By inbreeding there might be had a finer fleece, but with less weight and at the expense of hardiness in the stock. Shearing in the South generally is twice a year, despite somewhat better prices received for longer fleeces. The fleece is considered a bit heavy to carry the year around and there is some added loss in the brush.

One Arizona grower left a prize buck unshorn for three years. The fleece then weighed thirty-two pounds, measuring up to forty-six inches in length and dragging on the ground. In the Northwest, growers have reported an annual shearing of twenty-one and one-half pounds from a single buck. Fleece forty-one inches long was measured on a forty-three-month-old Oregon buck in Southeastern Arizona. One beautiful Oregon fleece at hand, silky and lustrous, is seventeen inches long. "A fleece more golden than that which adventurous Jason on his Argo bore, from the lulled dragon and the Colchian shore."

An old authority declared that, in Asia Minor, the best mohair was that from goats fed on fir; the next best from goats fed on oak, arbutus, etc. This dictum is given for what it is worth.

The enormous weights sometimes attained after one and even two years' growth of fleece, are of course exceptional; the lower averages are good enough to justify the industry.

Angora increase on the open range hardly keeps pace with that of sheep, which in ewe bands often show 125 per cent. of spring gain. Usually ewe kids are 5 per cent. in majority. Care must be taken of the kids, which at first are delicate, while the mothers are sometimes a bit careless. Practically no disease is known among the goats. Though there is no scab, dipping after shearing is advised, to eradicate a peculiar louse, known to science as Trichodectes Limbatus.



NEWMO—Two Years Old. U. S. Grant's Recent Production in the Aristocratic Angora Class*

Year by year, there is betterment of the Angora industry of the nation. It is true there are many large bands with owners who prefer to let reckless Nature take its course, and where the trend is downward. But upward is the pathway of the members of the National Mohair Growers' Association, which has its headquarters at Bluff Dale, Tex., with executive committee members in Oregon, California, Arizona, New Mexico, Kansas and Texas. At least one publication is devoted to the industry. The organization not only stands for breeding improvement, but protects the interest of the grower in marketing.

Naturally, there has been deep study over betterments. According to one grower: "Grading has been practiced for half a century, and often with good results in ameliorating the fleece of the common white, short-haired doe. In brief, this project is based on the practice of crossing pure Angora bucks, persistently and systematically, on the common, almost hairless female, and thereby producing a mohair-bearing animal after the fourth or fifth generation. The practice is defensible and even commendable, when the object is strictly for the purpose of creating a mohair-producing animal through the cross described, but the method is never to be resorted to, of course, in any honest crossing ly breeding purposes, which stock on both sides. This is a not susceptible of contravention breeder who runs counter to the this regard is not to be 'straight' goat farmers."

The grade of goat has much the weight of the fleece. of an Angora buck upon a gives but a small amount of the increase in quantity is crosses become higher. On this P. Bailey of California once made ment: "Half-breed goats enough to pay for the shearing fourths-bred goats shear one one-half pounds, worth 15 to seven-eighths-bred goats shear pounds, worth 20 to 30 cents; teenths-bred goats shear three pounds, worth 30 to 40 cents."

From the same authority may "The Angora goat is hardy spects, but tender in others. ceptible to the effects of wet exposure in bad weather, and neglect by his keeper. He free the year round in mild picks up his own feed, astonishingly from brushy ranges; but this ment can be overdone. Mr. Grant, as well as other growers, remarks on the inutility of growing long mohair. Former prices ranged up to $20 a pound. Same quality now brings only $8 a pound, or less. Demand for doll wigs and switches, as well as for theatrical purposes, has fallen off since the European war, causing a decline in price for all long mohair. —[Angora Journal, Portland.

CALIFORNIA, LAND OF FRUITS AND FLOWERS

Real Life by the Great Western Sea.

The Western Sea.

BY THE "Western Sea" in this magazine is plainly meant the Pacific Ocean, and that is the largest of all the seven seas by many leagues in length and just as many in breadth. In the immediate past the Atlantic has been the great sea on which the commerce of the world has been carried on. In ancient times most of the commerce of the world centered around the shores of the Mediterranean. And so we can go back in thought to times when commerce was carried on only on the rivers of Asia and Europe.

As the commerce on rivers was changed to that in the Mediterranean it expanded wonderfully. Then came the discovery of the Americas, the colonizing of them and the building up of an immense trade between the mother countries and these colonies. Just as the trade carried on on the Mediterranean between Northern Africa and Western Asia and Europe was greater than that carried on along the Euphrates and the Nile was increased in volume, so the commerce of the modern world is to that of the ancient one about as the Mediterranean Sea is to the Atlantic Ocean, volume compared with area.

The commerce on the western sea, or the Pacific Ocean, is growing now apace, and will grow until it shall have eclipsed that of the Atlantic just as that ocean's commerce surpassed that of the Mediterranean Sea. Commerce goes with population, and the population around the Pacific Ocean is now vastly greater than that of Europe. The Americas lying south of us known as Latin America have a population of close to 1^0,000,000. The United States counts fully 100,000,000, and with Canada added, the population of the Americas is now much more than 200,000,000. And this population is growing amazingly with each passing year. The Latin-American countries have been growing rapidly, but this growth has been checked a little by the war. They are looking there for an immense influx of new blood when peace shall have been established in Europe. The growth by immigration to the United States surpasses an average of 1,000,000 a year. As the years pass these 200,000,000 will increase to 300,000,000, to 500,000,000, and on to 1,000,000,000, until the western hemisphere will contain the bulk of the population of the world.

On the other side of the Pacific Ocean there are already nearly 1,000,000,000 people along the littoral from Bering Strait to the Straits Settlements, and reaching back to the western confines of China.

The growth of the commerce of this Pacific Ocean is indicated by the size of the steamers that ply her great waters. In comparison to the little boats that paddled down the Euphrates or the Nile, with the triremes and quinquiremes that carried wheat from Northern Africa to feed the Romans, the ships increased their carrying capacities amazingly in the big steamers that now ply the waters of the Atlantic. But even these are small compared with the great leviathons of the Pacific.

Westward the Star of Empire.

IT WAS a profoundly philosophic remark that Bishop Berkeley made in his famous line, "Westward the star of empire takes its way." So it has been from the dawn of history. Every migration of men has been largely from the East toward the West ever since men inhabited this globe of ours. The empire of the world is moving rapidly toward the western hemisphere in accordance with this law apparently established by nature. It is but about four centuries since civilization first was planted on these western shores, and never in the history of humanity has there been such progress made as in the Americas during these four centuries. Not only in material things but in every other effort of human energy the western hemisphere is surpassing the Old World rapidly. We have dug the Panama Canal, the greatest material undertaking ever entered into and accomplished by man. We have built longer railroads than the world had ever known, and carry more freight over them in a day than the world saw move in a year not long ago. We are now engaged in constructing a continuous line which finally will reach from the frozen lands of Alaska to the southern point of the continent in Patagonia. The Americas are drawing together more closely in every respect than ever before and the cutting of the Panama Canal and the building of this continental railroad will help these ties very much. The commerce between the Americas is growing rapidly and by sympathy between the peoples of the different parts of the Americas this commerce will be kept at home largely.

Harbors and Ships.

SHAKESPEARE tells us, "There is a divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them how we will." This seems to be carried out in the providential design manifest in the creation of the earth and the formation of its continents. The Americas not only contain the longest rivers of the greatest volume, tha longest range of mountains of the greatest altitudes, the most magnificent woods and the broadest and most fertile plains of the world, but they also possess the finest harbors of any portion of the globe. The harbors are particularly fine on the western slopes of the United States. Puget Sound, San Francisco and Los Angeles harbors are the safest and most commodious of any harbors in the world. Besides these there are large rivers running into the Pacific Ocean which lead shipping far inland to trade with cities away from the Coast. The Yukon and the Columbia are the most important of these. Then there are smaller harbors all the way from Bering Strait down to Cape Horn. The smaller harbors of western America are as commodious and safe as any on the western coast of Europe. Coos Bay furnishes a shipping point for Southern Oregon; San Diego for Southern California, Mazatlan and many other small harbors furnish opportunities for shipping for Mexico. And so it goes all down the coast to the Straits of Magellan.

With harbors of course go ships, and here we are very much lacking in this facility for trade. But we are a young people with our life before us, not behind us, and we count time here by years, not by decades nor centuries. We count money by millions, and have the raw material in abundance around us, and in time all the impediments to trade will be removed. Men do not spend money by tens of millions in building harbors, as Los Angeles has done with the aid of the Federal government, to allow them to "stagnate in the weeds of sloth." The same foresight and business energy that converted an open roadstead into a magnificent harbor, converting the old San Pedro embarcadero into a safe haven where the fleets of the world might ride, will see that this harbor does not go unused.

It is not only one of the largest harbors in the world, but it lies right in the track of trade. It is nearer to the line of traffic between the western end of the Panama Canal and the cities of Asia than any other harbor.

Garden Spot of Creation.

IN EVERY way the State of California is destined to play a great part in the future history, not only of the United States, but of the world. Possessing the most salubrious climate makes it an ideal spot for residence, its broad, fertile plains make it the farmer's paradise, full of riches, mineral and agricultural, it is already making millionaires by the dozen. Of course, Southern California is the cream of the State in every way. This magazine has already named it the place of opportunity for all men. It is so. It invites everybody of every age, of every talent, of every degree of ability, takes them all into its strong, loving, motherly arms and protects them, building them up to greater greatness.

It invites the young and the old, of each sex, of every condition of life. From the infant in arms to the nonogenarian tottering in his steps, there is a place here for all. The sick and ailing find here an asylum where they either recover their health or suffer much less than in any other spot on earth. To the strong and well it offers greater opportunities of business than any other spot in the world. In spite of the progress made here in the past, it is only an infant country yet. Its resources are only touched, and it will take years to develop them to their full extent, and in the development there are opportunities offered to hundreds of thousands to make homes and fortunes, to live happy and contented in perfect health.

What is Southern California?

GEOGRAPHICALLY, it is that part lying south of about the middle of the San Joaquin Valley. This is using the term in its broader sense. In a narrow one it means the counties south of the Tehachepi Mountains. Including Kings and Tulare counties, and reaching down to the Mexican boundary, Southern California contains an area of 70,000 square miles. Its population by the last census was less than 850,000, a density of twelve to the square mile. With a population like that of Belgium or Saxony, where "every acre maintains its man," the population would be 70,000 times 640. Belgium supported a population of more than 7,000,000 before the war. The population of Southern California at the present time is probably about 1,000,000. It is growing very rapidly, but will not be full in a hundred years. It has everything under the sun to make it great, the climate, of course, leading. There is very little difference between the mean temperature in the different parts of Southern California, and much less than in any other part of the country. At San Diego, for instance, the mean temperature of the winter months runs from 54 to 55 degrees Fahrenheit. For the spring and fall months the mean temperature runs from 58 to 59 degrees, and for the summer months from 61 to 69 degrees. The average rainfall there is ten inches, the clear days number an average of 266; the rainy days, forty-three, cloudy days fifty, partly cloudy, 49. The lowest temperature ever recorded there is 32 degrees, and that once in a century, while the highest temperature is 101 degrees, coming as infrequently as the frost. The mean temperature at Los Angeles for the winter months is only one degree lower than that of San Diego, while for the spring months there is scarcely any difference at all, and for the summer months the highest mean temperature in Los Angeles in August registered 69 degrees, just the same as at San Diego. The number of rainy days at Los Angeles averages less than at San Diego, being thirty-six, and the cloudy days are only fifty-six, just six more than at San Diego.

The Coming Metropolis.

THE coming metropolis of Western America is Los Angeles, and she has almost arrived. Geographically, she is situated exactly in the right spot to become a great city. Draw a line from Bakersfield to Tia Juana and a cross line from Santa Monica to San Bernardino, and Los Angeles will lie right at the intersection of the two lines. Taking a wider view, she lies on a big harbor at the shortest distance between two oceans in the United States. Taking a world view, she is the nearest harbor to the line of commerce which passes from the end of the Panama Canal to the Asiatic coast—nearer by seventy miles than any other. The region around her contains more fertile acres than surround most cities on the globe, and they are exceedingly fertile. The population of the city has been growing wonderfully right in line with the advantages the city possesses. A good many men now living can look back to the time when the population of the city was less than 5000, one-fifth of them Americans, another fifth European immigrants, and three-fifths native Californians. That is the mixture of Indian and Spanish that comprises most of the population of Mexico. The census of 1880 found a population of only about 11,000 in the city of Los Angeles. Ten years later the census enumerators counted over 50,000 in the same area. When the century closed the census of 1900 found a population of 101,000, which ten years later had jumped to 319,000, and is now a great deal more than half a million. By the time the next census is taken the population of the city will crowd 1,000,000 and by the time the quarter-century has come the million point will have been passed. The human imagination can scarcely put a limit to the population of Los Angeles. When we shall have a consolidated city and county reaching from Point Dume, north of Santa Monica, hugging the low hills running [illegible] ward to the San Gabriel, and following the stream to its mouth, there will be the biggest municipal area in the world, and in good time it will have the largest popu[illegible] tion of any city on the globe.

What Have We to Export?

LOS ANGELES HARBOR as an exporting point is a mere infant in arms, but she is an infant Hercules bound to increase its thews and sinews very rapidly. Of course a city, as a rule, depends upon the country for its importance. Fifty years ago the country around Los Angeles was devoted to pasture where immense herds of sheep, cattle and horses covered the plain. Then came the era of agriculture, followed by that of horticulture, and this is the real point of importance for the city. In 1912-1913 there entered the harbor a little less than 3000 vessels, with a tonnage of nearly 2,500,000 tons. In 1913-14 the number of vessels was [illegible] and the net tonnage was 2,759,274 tons. The imports for this year were just short of $4,000,000, and the exports a little short of $2,000,000. These last figures include San Diego and a few small places on the Mexican border. The harbor has cost a total of $11,211,250. In our dealings with [illegible] America we shall have to depend upon other commodities than those of the products of the soil to build up a large trade. The Latin Americans are for the most part agricultural countries themselves, and as their soils are fertile and their climate mild, they have been growing most of their foodstuffs on their own lands, and will continue to do so in the future. It must be manufactured products that will build up most of the commerce between the United States and the Latin Americas. As new countries, the republics south of us are backward in manufactures, and most of their imports consist of finished manufactures, including fabrics woven from the different fibers, machinery and other products of iron foundries.

Los Angeles is in a development state in regard to manufactures at the present, but the development is going on very rapidly and as opportunities in the way of foreign markets open up must grow apace. It has made an excellent beginning, but it is only a beginning. We have the raw material of every kind in abundance, and we have the capital and the hands to convert the raw material into finished products. One of the crying necessities of the times is a cotton mill to work up the abundance of this fiber of the most excellent quality known to the world growing right at our doors. The [illegible] industry is in its infancy, but is a vigorous infant and growing rapidly.

Multa in Parvis.

CALIFORNIA is 775 miles long, [illegible] miles wide, with a coast line of 1000 miles. It contains 153,650 square miles, equal to a dozen eastern States.

The population of nine eastern States of about the same area as California is about 27,000,000, and the population of California is only about 3,000,000.

The citrus fruit crop of the State of California is about 45,000 cars a year. Most of these are grown in the southern part of the State.

The assessed value of the property in the county of Los Angeles for the current year is nearly $1,000,000,000, and as the property is assessed only at about 50 per cent of its value, the real value is twice this.

The assessed value of the city of Los Angeles is more than half that of the county.

The county of Los Angeles contains [illegible] square miles, almost as much as the State of Connecticut. The shore line is eighty-[illegible] miles.

Mechanical cultivation of the soil is the pivot around which all work in agriculture rotates. "Go till the ground," is a first command, and its importance is not lessened by any invention or ingenuity. Indeed in this day and age the multiplication of population in the world calls for more and more intense soil study and work to supply the needs of civilization. Careful consideration of our manner and methods of cultivation is too frequently neglected until conditions have accumulated such a chain of troubles that the correction of the then existing evils, of our own making, perhaps, seems almost impossible or economically impracticable.

That we may understand ourselves and each other in considering this question, it seems well to define in detail what soil cultivation takes in. We find: plowing, harrowing (mixing and pulverizing,) rolling and smoothing as the processes of soil tillage. To avoid misconception it will be well to further define the service we claim for each soil working process.

Plowing.

The plow roughly breaks up and turns the earth for a depth which it is intended to establish the loam for the nourishment and feeding of the plants to be grown. Farming or tilling the soil is a taking advantage of all the available and useful natural processes, not letting nature take charge of us. The deeper the loosening of the soil can be accomplished and maintained, the more plants can be safely grown to the acre. This is an advantage not often appreciated, yet it is not uncommon to hear extravagant praises for the deep natural loams so often encountered in Southern California. In very light, easily-worked soils, it is possible to plow a full foot of depth quite easily if we have the power, but usually eight inches is the limit practically attainable. For most crops, and certainly all field crops, eight inches plowed and loamed is very ample, and a well-established six-inch loam meets the requirements of practically all single-season plants. All the plow does is to break loose and raise up a stratum of earth for further manipulation by the other tools of cultivation. If the soil below the plow depth is dense, and so heavy that it will not afford free drainage for the loam, it should be subsoil plowed to loosen it up. This can be done most easily just following plowing, because the earth will not have settled back into firm condition.

When to Plow.

All heavy lands under irrigation should be plowed annually for single-season crops or annual plants. The reason for this is that such lands settle back so closely that the air is forced out and excluded from the soil. There are exceptions to this rule, and practically every soil can be brought within the exception. If a soil is richly loamed, plowing has only one value, to break it up, because it does not run together when wet like a raw soil. The life of loam is the vegetable and organic matter in the soil and the humus developed from it, and the base of loam is lime. A well-loamed soil, then, is one carrying abundant organic matter and lime. There are some deposit soils showing two and three feet of loam depth, and the use of the plow in such soils is usually superfluous and may even be harmful.

The best time to plow a soil is during the coldest season possible, when the soil life, or so called micro-flora, is dormant. By the soil life is meant the bacterial flora of the soil that works through the vegetable matter on the soil compounds, continually breaking them up into other compounds, and so producing humus for the process of plant nourishment. While air, warmth and moisture are necessary to the health and activity of the bacteria of the soil, yet light and free exposure to the atmospheric air is harmful and will even destroy the bacteria in their active stage. This teaches us to avoid plowing our soils during the active seasons, or, in a word, the time to plow is from late fall to early spring.

Orchard Plowing.

So far we have been discussing general field plowing, but we are confronted with the problem of orchard plowing; and reading between the lines of experimental data and every-day practice, problems present themselves for adjustment, if not for solution. The use of the plow is embodied in principle in the facts already discussed. It is much more important to have a deep loam in an orchard than in a grain-field, because the fruit-producing power of the trees is measured by the amount of rootlets developing root hairs in the loam. The fertilization of the blossom and the setting of a large crop of fruit may be the forerunner of a sad disappointment through the inability of the loam to nourish it. If the loam is shallow the rootlets are confined to such a limited cubic area that they exhaust the immediate feeding power of the loam. The exhaustion of a soil by cropping does not seem possible, and has never been shown by actual controlled experiments, but it has been repeatedly shown that the humus of the loam can be exhausted. A soil without humus is practically barren from a farming standpoint, for humus is the main source of plant food. The rootlets gradually become roots by growth, with no feeding power; and while new sets of rootlets may strike out from these growing roots when they have reached the re-budding stage, the limit of the feeding power of the loam curtails their development and consequent nourishment of the trees. In time the loam becomes a mass of tangled roots, and perhaps starving rootlets, sent out by the tree in search of food. This mechanical fouling of the loam when supplemented by chemical fouling, is commonly called souring. By some this has been considered as toxic emanations, or even exudations, from the roots. This is on the same principle that we note lands becoming sick by continuous single-crop production, or the plants seeming to sicken one another in the soil. This chemical souring is often very marked in soils poor in lime, but is not observed in a well-limed soil. The result of the fouling of the loam is usually a lessened production, and often first noted by die-back in the tree top, but like the chemical fouling, with the weakened condition of the trees, it opens the way for disease.

Intervals of Plowing the Orchard.

We know that the plow is the implement to use, but do we know how frequently we may use it with safety for the best results? Some fruit trees will reach their height of production in eight or ten years, and after that will wane in average production if the loam is not turned, aerated and re-mixed. Some trees seem to be affected earlier, and instances are pointed to of healthy bearing trees under what we might consider inimical conditions, but which, after a careful study of the existing facts, might disclose exceptionally favorable soil or other surroundings. While there is not enough controlled experiment to set a positive rule, and each case may be said to stand on its own merits, there is sufficient evidence to warrant the advice to plow and thoroughly cut out all surface rooting every five years, with eight years set as the limit. This is of course general advice, because the natural texture of the soil and the drainage have marked effects on the conditions arising in unplowed loam. There is another advantage to be noted for the short-interval period of plowing in that it buries and destroys the eggs, larvae, etc., of injurious insects that accumulate in the surface of the loam beneath the trees. While plowing deals primarily with the depth reached by the plow, and consequently with surface rooting, it has an important influence on the lower roots. It promotes deeper air penetration and stimulates the movement of the free water in the soil. Thus the tree is enabled to more easily obtain the deep water of the ground and the full benefit of such soluble mineral food as it may contain, while the dissolving of the soil minerals is probably increased by the deeper aeration. This may be considered a minor benefit, but it is along the modern lines of efficiency. Plowing is thus seen to be an essential and first detail in soil cultivation, and is as important for the orchard as for the field worked in annual seeding.

The Harrows.

The next step in soil working is the cultivation for separating the soil particles and mixing them so as to make a loose, homogeneous mass through which the air can easily circulate. To stir the full depth of the loam is desirable, but not always feasible. As the top of the soil, which has been turned to the bottom of the furrow by plowing, is usually better conditioned than the rest for two or three inches, a cultivation five or six inches deep must be considered good work in an eight-inch plowing. The most commonly used tool for pulverizing and mixing is the spike-tooth harrow, and it is a question if any tool does better average work. The spring-tooth harrow is considered more economical in heavy or cloddy soils, as it digs and keeps up a vibrating, hammering action that reduces a soil more readily than the plain-tooth harrow. A properly loamed soil is not cloddy. Various styles of cultivators have been made, but for the pulverizing and mixing of a plowed soil the two mentioned cover all requirements. If we wish to cultivate the soil without first plowing, as in the case of general orchard work, which is plowed only at intervals of several years, the harrows are of no use. We must use the disc, or a tool with narrow-necked teeth terminating in small double-mouldboard, plow shape. Either of these tools will lift, loosen and stir the soil and accomplish a result similar to that gained by plowing and harrowing, though not so thorough. For the cultivation of meadows, particularly alfalfa, the disc is preferable above all other tools, but the heavy spike-tooth harrow finds favor in some light soils.

Rolling and Smoothing—Why?

Presuming now that we have a loam eight inches deep, and it has been plowed and cultivated so as to effect a thorough loosening, aerating and mixing, what other cultivation may be desirable? We wish to make the loam act like a candle-wick in absorbing and distributing water. That calls for a gentle setting together of the particles to fine the capillaries, or soil passages, and forestall the action of water in running them together. This brings into use the roller and smoother, the first to firm the soil and the other to close the pores at the surface of the soil. Unless a soil is well loamed, rolling is of no advantage, as a raw sand will settle without help, and an unloamed, heavy soil will be hardened by rolling.

Time to Look After Shade Trees.

Advice on what to do for trees in October is furnished by the American Forestry Association of Washington, D. C., in the following bulletin, and special and detailed advice will be given free of charge upon request by addressing the American Forestry Association, 219 Maryland Building, Washington, D. C.

(1.) Prune all dead branches. The advantage of doing this work now before the leaves fall is because one can distinguish the dead from the live better at this time than in the winter; because one can climb better now than in winter, when the trees are covered with ice and snow; because the branches are not so brittle, and because the trees will now suffer less from bleeding, etc.

(2.) Take care of all wounds. Use coal tar and creosote to cover all exposed wood, and be sure to remove all decayed and diseased wood in the treatment of the wounds.

(3.) Destroy nests of the fall web worm.

(4.) Fertilize with well-rotted manure all weak trees and evergreens.

(5.) Spray for scale insects; but before doing this determine the character of the insect and receive specific instructions as to the strength of the solution and what material to use as well as the best time for doing the work.

(6.) Thin apple trees and other fruit trees if necessary.

(7.) Pick off galls on small ornamental evergreens.

(8.) Plant deciduous trees and shrubs but not evergreens. Poplars, magnolia trees, willows and oak had better be planted in early spring; but other trees, such as maples, lindens, etc., can be planted in October.

[Youth's Companion:] The enemies of the Germans are fond of asserting that in spite of their cleverness in many directions the Germans are "slow-witted." These two advertisements that were printed in a German newspaper give amusing evidence to the contrary. The first one was:

"The gentleman who found a brown purse, containing a sum of money, in the Blumenstrasse, is requested to forward it to the address of the loser, since he was recognized."

A couple of days later appeared the response, which, although courteous, had an elusive air, to say the least:

"The recognized gentleman who picked up a brown purse in the Blumenstrasse requests the loser to call at his house at a convenient day."

LOS ANGELES GOODS AND WORLD TRAD

By Arthur W. Kinney.

Industrial Commissioner Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, and Former President Associated Chambers of Commerce of the Pacific Coast.

IT WAS Sir Walter Raleigh who said, "Whosoever commands the sea commands the trade of the world; whosoever commands the trade, commands the riches of the world and consequently the world itself." This was a true statement four centuries ago, and it is just as true today.

According to figures recently issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, the exports of our nation for the fiscal year ending June 30 amounted to $4,345,000,000 and the imports were valued at $2,180,000,000, making a total foreign trade for the year of over six and one-half billion dollars, which is the largest total in the history of American commerce.

While these figures on our foreign trade appear on the surface to be satisfactory indeed, the truth is they are in many ways disappointing. America has lost trade amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars—lost it because of two reasons: Lack of ships to carry our goods and the failure on the part of our government to pass legislation which would remove all doubt as to the application of the anti-trust laws to export trade and which uncertainty prevents concerted action by our manufacturing exporters.

Our Handicaps in World Commerce.

"If the United States had possessed," declares the Boston Chamber of Commerce, "as it should normally have possessed, 10,000,000 or 15,000,000 tons of overseas shipping in August, 1914, at the outbreak of the present European war, its ocean delivery service could not have been broken down by the wholesale diversion of foreign ships whose first duty was owed to foreign governments. Reduced or disrupted steamship service and abnormally increased freight rates have cost the American people uncounted millions of dollars since the war began, and as agriculture still supplies the major bulk if not the major value of our exports, the heaviest loss has fallen upon the cotton-growing South and grain-growing West, many of whose public men have historically been most blind and indifferent to the need of a merchant fleet that would serve 'America first.'"

As before stated, doubt as to the application of the anti-trust law has greatly prevented concerted action and thus hindered the growth of our export trade, even among the manufacturers of goods that are not in competition. At the third National Foreign Trade Convention held at New Orleans last January, Hon. Joseph E. Davies, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, told the many hundreds of delegates present that "our investigations disclose that doubt as to the legality of such enterprise amounts in many instances to prohibition of any action in the foreign market. This belief is undoubtedly one of the factors in the situation which hinders the development of foreign trade." Hundreds of the great commercial and foreign-trade organizations and business men throughout the country have urged Congress to take such action as will facilitate the development of American export trade by removing such dangers as may be now imposed by our anti-trust laws. They have done this to secure freedom in utilizing the advantages of co-operative action for American workmen and American enterprises in meeting the combinations of our foreign industrial rivals, who are leaving nothing undone to keep American goods out of our choicest possible markets. However, in spite of all that has been said and done, the necessary legislation has not as yet been enacted.

Pacific Coast Factories and Foreign Trade.

For various reasons, principally the lack of ships, many Pacific Coast manufacturers are devoting comparatively little attention to foreign trade. This is especially true with respect to the South American countries. In normal times, the United States exports about 5 per cent. of its manufactures. Our export business is, therefore, an important factor in disposing of our factory outputs, although it is a greater one in England and Germany, which export practically half of theirs. If the industrial centers of the East can make money in this business Pacific Coast manufacturers can do the same. It is said that with normal times prevailing, many thousands of American factories would have reached their limit in business with our domestic markets. This is especially the ease in the West, where the home market is limited indeed. For the foregoing reason California factory owners, of which there are more than two thousand in Los Angeles alone, should be vitally interested in everything that will improve their facilities for greater export trade.

In South America the question of credits is no longer a barrier. Our commercial leaders have as much ability and enterprise as those of Europe, with whom the South American merchant has formerly transacted a large part of his business. There is a wonderful opportunity today for our manufacturers to do business with the west coast of Mexico, Central America and South America. There are even greater opportunities in Australia and New Zealand. The United States is now a favored nation in China. We are buying more from that country than ever before. Furthermore, in the stores of Hongkong American manufactured products are supplanting the goods of Germany. Steamer lines to our port would give us our share of this business.

The paramount demand of the hour is for improved shipping facilities. While there are now merchant ships building in various yards on the Pacific Coast to the value of $40,000,000, many of these are being built for the carrying of oil, and will afford no relief to our manufacturers in general. Scores of products are being made in Los Angeles for which there is today a ready market in other countries. The manufacture of these commodities will quickly extend the activities of our local plants and greatly increase their pay rolls. This will give us the same kind of prosperity that is today being enjoyed in many of the manufacturing centers of the East. As conditions are now, we are obliged to send many of the products of our factories to other cities for trans-shipment to foreign countries.

"Bah! Yo ulook so gloomy I thought it

Los Angeles Products and Pacific Markets.

Los Angeles made goods are good goods and they will yet make our city famed everywhere. All they need is a fair chance before the world on their merits. What is true of the nation is true of the city, and of the former the late James J. Hill thus declared: "In the vast pool of the world's activity, where the material, the worker, the machine and the method fly from one end of the earth to the other at call, only a purblind nation can dream of basing its future on anything less commanding than equality or superiority in the elements of production, including, of course, the wages of labor and the remuneration of capital."

Los Angeles, the nearest great port of call to the Panama waterway, is the logical fabricating and distributing point for a large number of the commodities largely used in the Latin republics of the south. In a line of food products alone we can furnish large quantities of canned fruits and vegetables, olives, jams, marmalades, crackers, meats, pickles, flour, cereals, beer, olive oil, sugar, wines, cottonseed oil and macaroni. Our local beer has already established a fine reputation in Central America and is preferred to the German article.

About that Calf.

A CONFIDENTIAL CONVERSATION BEBIND THE BARN.

BY ANNA LANDSBURY BECK

Abram Griswold moved around to examine the half dozen head of cows and calves confined in a pen near the auctioneer's stand. He took no interest at all in the discordant assortment of household goods waiting to be sold to a country crowd which was gathering in spite of a drizzling rain. Abram—nobody, not even his wife ever called him Abe—considered himself above buying his neighbor's "traps," but somehow this same shiftless neighbor had picked up a likely young Hereford heifer, and Abram ran his practiced eye over the critter, looking for any blemishes which might be detected should he see fit to include her among the half dozen thoroughbred heifers he was offering for sale from his choicest herds.

As Abram expected, Lem Applegate drove up at that instant, bounded out of his buggy, flung down a weight, and joined Abram at the pen. Abram had now shifted his attentions to a weary old cow chewing a scanty cud. Lem furnished the conversation, for Abram wasn't for having his affairs "pried inta."

"Saw you when I was a good piece down the road, Abram'" said Lem, "and I druv my ol' nag inter a lather tryin' to ketch up. I see you're drivin' that mare I looked at las' week," he continued. "She's got good wind 't any rate."

Abram's chief joy in life lay in having his stock praised although he modestly refrained from any acknowledgment except to add a few dollars in value to the animal under regard. Down in his heart Abram knew that Lem wanted that mare. He waited for Lem to push the matter.

Abram's felt hat was pulled down on his forehead and his little bunch of chin whiskers rose and fell as he worked his chew of tobacco. His cheek bones pushed out more sharply every time his teeth came together. His unbottoned rain coat swung away from him behind, further aided by his hands in his trousers pockets.

Lem bent over Abram, taking in the silent, dumpy figure. He watched Abram draw a jack-knife from his pocket and shave a generous sliver from the top board of the pen. Abram carefully scraped the sliver and then whittled it tenderly to a point. Lem rested one foot on the middle board of the pen and followed every stroke of the knife. Abram surveyed the point—he even squinted one eye and sighted along the stick to make sure of his work's perfection. And then Lem spoke:

"I understand that Sam and his wife"—meaning the owners of the heifer—"is goin' home to live with her folks." Lem cackled and swept his eye over the scanty possessions about them.

"Lemuel Applegate," Abram objected to clipping names, "ain't you meddlin' where it's none o' your business?" And Abram turned away knowing full well that Lem would detain him, when he could, with dignity, hear the rest of the tale.

Lem glanced around to satisfy himself that they were reasonably alone and then he touched Abram on the shoulder. He closed one eye and jerked his head to one side as a signal for their remote withdrawal.

Abram was familiar with the trick. It was Lem's habit to meet a man along the road, and whether alone or in the company of others, to entice him to some fence corner and there whisper the most commonplace things in his ear. Lem had thus earned the title of "Whispering Lem"—later abbreviated to "Whisp." Abram had long ago resisted Lem's seductive tappings and head jerkings, but today he followed Lem out back of the barn. Lem got one foot up, and his eyes grew serious. Abram edged as close as his dignity permitted.

"Say Abram," began Lem, "what'll you take fer that bull calf o' yourn?"

Without a word Abram turned and stalked back to the crowd. Fully half an hour passed and then he spied Lem returning worked through the crowd with

This is quite true. There are many les sons on fighting in northern Mexico to b learned from the United States army expe dition into that country thirty years ag this summer.

In 1886, during the Geronimo outbreak, I was editing the Tombstone Epitaph, and incidentally acting as "war correspondent" for half a dozen of the leading papers of the country, from San Francisco to New York. Americans were then almost as much interested in Geronimo as they have been, of late, in Villa. Dispatches of a column or more, from the frontier, were common.

To understand the expedition into Mexico of 1886, it is necessary to know something of the causes that led to this "invasion." Ever since the first white men entered Arizona that territory had been a scene of constant bloodshed by the Apaches, with only an occasional lull of fancied security. Prospectors and ranchers were never safe. As in the days of the Puritans, in New England, the gun was laid across the plow, and often the plowing was never completed. The adobe walls of ranch houses were pierced for rifle fire, and the doors were of heavy timber. The few pioneer women lived in constant dread. On journeys through the mountains, every rock was watched for a possible ambuscade, for the Apache rarely fought in the open.

The Apaches are remarkable among the Indians of the United States. They are "natural born fighters," but they do not fight in the open. Also, they had a habit of torturing their prisoners, in which they were assisted by their squaws. Gen. Crook had great respect for the endurance and fighting ability of the Apaches. He is quoted as saying:

"I have come in contact with almost every tribe of Indians, but have never seen the equal to these Apaches, especially the Chiricahuas. They are absolutely indefatigable, and do not seem to tire. They live on food that we would starve on. When they go into camp they will leave scouts and outposts six or seven miles behind. They will travel a hundred miles a day over the roughest country imaginable. The country is so immense that if they are ever caught it will be the merest accident. A million men cannot take them. Their little camp at Funnel Canyon could never have been captured by a thousand men. When I left Omaha I knew what the task was before me. Formerly, when the Indians were poorly armed they were more easily subdued; but now that they have breech-loading guns, every rock is a fortress and ten men would be killed in trying to kill one of them. This was Custer's mistake; he failed to calculate the difference in the arms with which the Indians were supplied. Old Indian fighters, back east, fail to realize this same fact."

As in the case of other Indian tribes, the original provocation to these Apache outbreaks came almost invariably from the white man—from American renegades, or from half-breed Mexicans, and in some cases from men who should have known better. At Santa Rita, in the early days, a few mules were stolen from Mexican mine owners, by the Apaches. Thereupon, a Englishman in their employ, named Johnson, prepared a feast, and invited all the Apaches in the neighborhood to partake. About a thousand men, women and children assembled, and were caused to sit grouped together, as much as possible. Their host had prepared a six-pounder gun, loaded to the muzzle with slugs, musket balls, nails and pieces of glass, within a hundred yards of them. The cannon was concealed under a pile of pack saddles and rubbish. Johnson stood ready with a lighted cigar, and while all were eating, the storm of death was sped into their ranks, killing and wounding and maiming several hundred. This volley was followed by a charge on the part of the Mexicans, who killed the wounded, until nearly 400 victims had been

INVASION OF MEXICO THIRTY YEARS AGO.

After Apaches. By Harry Ellington Brook.

IN A RECENT dispatch from El Paso, when an invasion of Mexico appeared imminent, Harry Carr wrote:

"In the coming campaign, the army will be obliged to unlearn most of its modern military science and go back to the methods that were drilled into Miles and Crook and Lawton on the Indian frontier thirty years ago. The fighting in Mexico will be like the old Indian campaigns. The first and prime requisite will be good scouting. After that, hard riding."

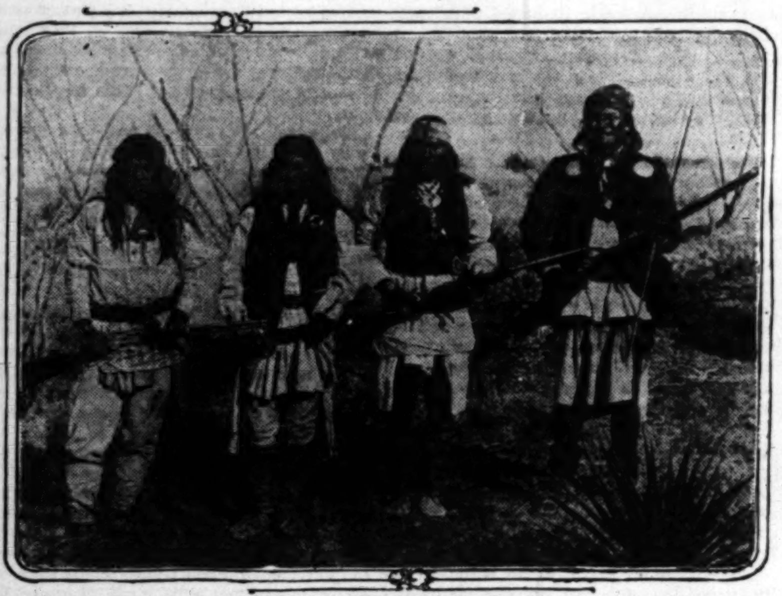
As in the case of other Indian tribes, the original provocation to these Apache outbreaks came almost invariably from the white man—from American renegades, or from half-breed Mexicans, and in some cases from men who should have known better. At Santa Rita, in the early days, a few mules were stolen from Mexican mine owners, by the Apaches. Thereupon, a [illegible] in their employ, named Johnson, prepared a feast, and invited all the Apaches in the neighborhood to partake. About a thousand men, women and children assembled and were caused to sit grouped together, as much as possible. Their host had prepared a six-pounder gun, loaded to the muzzle with slugs, musket balls, nails and pieces of glass, within a hundred yards of them. The volley was followed by a charge on the part of the Mexicans, who killed the wounded, until nearly 400 victims had been sacrificed. About the same time, the Governors of Sonora and Chihuahua offered a reward of from $30 to $100 for every Apache scalp brought in. This offer resulted in the formation of a number of bands of mercenaries, some of them headed by Americans of the desperado type, one of whom, finding that chasing the fleet-footed Apache brought little profit, turned to the slaughtering of friendly Indians, and finally he was caught in the act of killing and scalping a number of Mexicans.



SCENE IN GERONIMO'S CAMP.

Taken before the surrender to Gen. Crook, March 27, 1886, in the Sierra Madre Mountains of Mexico. Geronimo, son and two picked braves. Man with long rifle Geronimo; third man, his son.

Magnas Coloradas (Red Sleeves) was an Apache chief who ruled with great power for fifty years. He was a notable man, physically and mentally, and was a leader in reprisals for the above described massacre. Finally he was captured by American soldiers. During the night he was prodded with bayonets, and when he attempted to escape was shot down.

Frequent protests were made to Congress against the intolerable situation in the Territory, which kept back all development. Congress was asked to authorize the raising of a regiment of volunteer troops. In 1871 the Legislature told Congress that the constant Indian raids "will sweep from the country all traces of civilization, except deserted fields and broken walls." About that time occurred the Camp Grant massacre, when a number of Tucson men, headed by William S. Oury, a Virginian prominent in the history of Arizona, with the aid of Papago Indians, surrounded a number of Apache bucks and squaws, and clubbed them to death, while they were playing cards. A number of small children were spared, and brought to Tucson as captives.

In 1875 all the Apaches who could be rounded up were herded upon reservations, mainly at San Carlos. The agents appointed at these reservations were often mercenary men, who paid no regard to the interest of either settlers or Indians. An exception to this was John P. Clum, a man of force and ability, who was later postmaster at Tombstone, and founded the "Epitaph" there. He has told me that he was the only man who ever arrested Geronimo, and from what I have learned I believe he was right. Clum had more trouble with the administration at Washington than he had with the Apaches.

Cochise, the real chief of the Chirichahuas, whose name has been given to one of the counties of Arizona, was perhaps the ablest Indian whose name is linked with the early history of the Territory. He was a man of great natural ability, a fine specimen of physical manhood, standing about six feet two, with an eye like an eagle's. He had always been friendly to the whites, until about the year 1859. He had a contract with the Butterfield stage line for supplying their station at Fort Bowie with wood. His enmity to the Americans arose from the inexcusable action of an American army officer, who seized Cochise, and chiefs with him, while they were under a flag of truce. Cochise escaped, and then commenced his long series of raids against the Americans.

Capt. Thomas Jonathan Jeffords was a friend of Cochise, and had his entire confidence. Cochise always kept his word, and Jeffords arranged an interview between him and Gen. Howard, when they spent several days in Cochise's camp. Jeffords's name among the Indians was Chickasaw. Cochise said once: "Chickasaw, a man should never lie. They need not do it. If a man asks you or me a question we do not wish to answer, we could simply say: 'I don't want to talk about that.'"

Jeffords subsequently lived at the Owlshead Camp, near Tucson, where I met him about 1884. He was a typical frontiersman. If the Indian question had been left to such men as he, instead of to a muddling authority at Washington, and to selfish Indian agents, there would have been few Indian troubles. Jeffords died at Owls-head in February, 1914. The result of the interview between Howard and Cochise was the establishment of the Chirichahua reservation.

Cochise died of malarial fever on June 8, 1874. His remains lie in a cave in a rocky hill known as "Cochise Stronghold." The only white man who knew the secret of the burial place of Cochise was Jeffords, and it passed away with him when he died.

Geronimo, who figured so largely in the Indian campaign of 1876, was a politician rather than a chief. He was a great orator, and fond of talking. In fact, one historian declares he would rather talk than eat, although he had a voracious appetite. The same writer declares that he was spoiled by the recognition given him by Gen. Crook, and his sense of importance led him, for many years, to boast of being the real leader of the Apaches.

Gen. George Crook was known to the Apaches as the "Gray Fox." They had much respect for him, because he always kept his word, and, though stern, was just. It has been claimed that he was too lenient with the Indians, and had too much confidence in them. He introduced the use of Apache Indian scouts from the reservations, in fighting Apaches. They gave most valuable help, but a complaint was made that rifles and ammunition furnished these scouts were often passed to Indians on the warpath.

The murder of the McComas family by Apaches, in southwestern New Mexico, in March, 1883, aroused the country. The Apaches had a habit of slipping back and forth across the international line. Gen. Crook went to Hermosillo, where he conferred with Gen. Luis Torres, and arrangements were made for co-operation between the American and Mexican forces. Then Crook began his first expedition into Mexico, with a troop of the Sixth Cavalry, Capt. Chaffee in command. There were, also, a couple of hundred Apache scouts. A number of Indians were "captured," but really they came of their own volition, being tired of ranging, half starved, over the mountains, and anxious to return to the reservation. At one point Crook was practically surrounded by the Indians. The principal chiefs escaped on the march home, and only two-thirds of the captives reached San Carlos.

In December, 1885, Crook started another drive against the Indians into Mexico, mainly with Apache scouts. On this trip a command of Mexican soldiery approached stealthily, and on the morning of January 11, 1886, opened fire on the scouts. This was not a mistake, because when the officers waved their hats and shouted "Americanos," the fire continued. Then the scouts returned the fire, killing four Mexicans and wounding several. In the midst of the engagement, Capt. Emmett Crawford, while standing up and waving a white handkerchief, fell back mortally wounded, with a bullet through his head. Apologies were made by the Mexican commander, but were not considered sufficient by the American officers.

Geronimo expressed willingness to quit the war-path, but insisted on seeing Gen. Crook. A conference took place two months later, at Funnel Canyon, twenty-five miles below the line. The only white civilian present at that conference was Mayor Straus of Tucson. He came into Tombstone late at night, and, through me, dictated his account to the telegraph operator, who was Frank Prescott, now Gen. Frank Prescott.

Crook demanded an unconditional surrender, but the hostiles wanted to be sent back to the reservation. Finally they agreed to come in. They were not disarmed. On the way in they obtained some mescal from a white settler, who brought it into camp, and several of them became drunk. Then Geronimo, and others, again escaped. Only thirteen men and half-grown boys were left, the others being women and children.

Crook was thoroughly dispirited by this second failure. He sent in his resignation, which was accepted. The few Indians who had been captured were sent to Fort Marion, Florida. The Indians made strong objection to deportation, but they realized that their lives would be safer than if they were left behind among the thoroughly aroused civilians of Arizona. Later on, several hundred more Chirichahuas, men, women and children, were shipped to Florida.

Crook's successor to the command of the Department of Arizona was Gen. Nelson A. Miles, who had had much experience with Indians in the Northwest. He was instructed by the War Department to exterminate the hostiles at any cost. Thereupon he started the task of distributing about 6000 troops, or a quarter of the available United States army. The main object of this army was to capture fourteen Apache bucks and eight squaws, who had not been brought in by Crook's expedition. These renegades were well armed, and sometimes covered as much as seventy-five miles a day, easily eluding the heavily equipped soldiers sent after them. Murders were constantly reported. Capt. Lawton, who later distinguished himself in the Philippines, kept on a hot trail, and gave them no rest. With the force, also, was Assistant Surgeon Leonard Wood, later colonel of Rough Riders, and now commander of the Department of the East. The infantry section of Lawton's main command was given to Wood, one of the few medical officers ever placed in active command of troops in the field.

Geronimo soon found the pace set for him too hot, and again offered to surrender. At the same time, he was trying to make terms with the Mexican authorities. During the chase, Lawton's command marched 1400 miles, nearly all of the distance over high, rough mountains. The Indians did their best to throw the troops off the trail, but Lawton's Indian scouts were too keen.

Again the Indians offered to confer. Lieut. Gatewood met them in their camp, and to him credit is mainly due to the final capture of Geronimo, although there was, subsequently, much bitter feeling aroused between the Fourth and Sixth Cavalry, represented by Lawton and Gatewood.

After the surrender, Geronimo was shipped to Florida. Thence the band was taken to Alabama, and later to Fort Sill, Oklahoma. Many soft-headed people pleaded with the President and War Department that Geronimo might be permitted to return to his home in Arizona. Geronimo professed religion, and died February 17, 1909. Gen. Miles was entertained by the people of Ari-

THE UNITED STATES AND LATIN AMERICA

Mutual Business Opportunities. By Dr. J. Ziegner-Uriburu.

THE natural wealth-resources of Central and South America, their commerce and their remarkable progress are the cause of the great interest shown throughout the United States in the Latin-American nations in recent years. Consider the Latin-American countries in any phase one prefers, and they are worthy of keen interest. They spread over nearly 9,000,000 square miles, they contain mountains higher, rivers longer and more navigable, valleys wider and more fertile, and climates more varied than those of the United States. All the Latin-American nations approximately have a population of 90,000,000, which is increasing by reproduction faster than is the population of the United States. When the new immigration starts in after the European war, and when the Panama Canal shall be in full use by the shipping of a peaceful Europe, this total may soon overtake and pass that of the United States.

The figures of Latin-American commerce are astonishing; the twenty Latin-American nations having last year, in foreign trade, the enormous figure of $3,000,000,000. This amount was almost equally divided between imports and exports, with the actual balance of trade in their favor.

Let us see now which are the primary bases of an export trade: To take too much for granted is one fault discoverable in most of the articles and books, and in general in all informatory discussions of how to acquire an export trade with Latin-America the authors generally lose sight of the main issue in attempting to cover the subject.

Details of credit, transportation, packing, qualities and styles of goods, weights and measures, tariffs and customhouse requirements are all important, but only so in case the fundamentals are clearly understood and appreciated at their exact value. Among these fundamentals, the principal one is the economic status of the manufacturer in the countries competing for the Latin-American trade. Plainly, the question is this: Are the American manufacturers in a position to compete in quality and prices with the leading manufacturing countries? The American manufacturers cannot assume the attitude, without investigation, that they can manufacture everything a little better than any other country can, and that they can manufacture anything just as cheaply as the other countries can. As a matter of fact, there are some things wherein Europe excels America in the matter of skill, just as there are some things wherein America excels Europe in the same respect. There are other instances where Europe beats America in the matter of economic factory management, just as there are some points where America beats Europe in the same matter; and it is well that we should understand this and understand it clearly. The first step, then, for any American manufacturer in his investigation of the possibilities of exporting to Latin America is to inform himself exactly as to his economic status in manufacturing.

Let it be understood that no country whatever in any Latin-American nation enjoys any tariff differential in its favor; there is no advantage to England, France, Germany or any other country in any Latin-American nation in the matter of tariffs which the United States does not possess. It must be remembered that in the Latin-American countries the principal sources of government revenue is import duties. It is, therefore, not the interest of the government that these duties be prohibitive.

In nearly all cases, the tariff is a revenue tariff, and need not concern the foreign exporter at all. In many cases, where it is intended to be a protective tariff, the economic bases of protection do not exist, and so it becomes again a revenue tariff. In the very few cases where the economic condition for the operation of a protective tariff exists, the duties are generally so high as to be not protective, but prohibitive. A subject of greatest importance to prospective exporters is long credits. There is nothing else about which there has been so much misunderstanding, so many misstatements, and such misconception of existing facts. It may be easy to understand that a merchant who is able to give ninety or 180 days' credit enjoys a considerable advantage in the matter of gaining and holding trade over one able to give only thirty to sixty days' credit. In Latin America the purchaser by custom is used to the longer credits. The European exporter, who is able and willing to give the long credit, enjoys a double advantage over the exporter from the United States, not so able or willing.

The question is: "How is the European able to do this?" The answer is very clear; it is not because of larger capital nor because of cheaper money in Europe, but because the European has special credit advantages which the American does not have. These advantages grow out of different banking bases and usages in Europe and in the United States. It is a fact that the larger proportion of the banking resources of the commercial banks of Europe—and this includes all the manufacturing countries—is employed in the purchase and sale of commercial acceptances. In the United States, on the contrary, commercial acceptances, up to the present, have been almost unknown. This difference of credit between Europe and the United States is the a b c of the whole problem of long credits in Latin America. Under the new Federal banking laws, there is much improvement to be hoped for. So far as the law is concerned there is nothing at present which stands in the way of an equalizing of conditions as between the American exporter and the European exporter. The only thing necessary is for the American banks and American business men to accustom themselves to a new line of business and a new weapon of business, with which they have heretofore been but slightly acquainted.

There are two important phases of the present Pan-American commercial situation which should have frank and thoughtful consideration by the business men and others interested, if they would fully realize what must and should be done in the premises. The first is the amount or proportion of her foreign trade which Latin America conducts with European nations, many of whom are now at war and a share of whose trade the United States now expects to obtain. The second is the condition or capability of Latin America to transfer this commerce with the accompanying financial transactions from Europe to the United States, and so swell the volume of the reciprocal trade between the United States and Latin America. The figures connected with these phases are both interesting and instructive, and certainly not dry to the student of Pan-American possibilities.

In 1913 the twenty countries of Central and South America bought imports and sold exports valued at the immense total of approximately $2,843,000,000, of which the imports were $1,304,000,000, and exports $1,539,000,000. Of these imports, fully $770,000,000 came from countries now either at war or under the embargoes of war; and they were mostly manufactured products which could be supplied by the industries of the United States if Latin America wanted them or could afford to buy them. At present, by comparison, the United States sells similar products to Latin America valued annually at $317,000,000. These totals, in theory, speak for themselves; in practice the result will be determined by the ability of the American manufacturer and the Latin-American importer to meet the new and peculiar conditions of the market. Of her exports, Latin America sells to the European nations raw products valued at approximately $785,000,000. Although the United States takes Latin-America't output to value of $504,000,000, no argument is needed to point out the vital importance to Latin America that a market for these exports, which would usually, in times of peace, be found in Europe, should now be found as much as possible in the United States.

The grand total of the regular annual commerce which Latin America conducts with Europe, when relations are not disturbed by war, should convince everybody that it offers a remarkable opportunity for the United States. What it does will largely depend upon its own efforts. Here, in other words, is an annual business of approximately $1,553,000,000, which is awaiting an international adjustment. If, of course, the financial and commercial interest of the United States can devise ways and means to supply what, under the conditions, Latin America needs, and to buy, in turn, a goodly portion of her surplus raw products, which have heretofore gone to Europe, they will not only bring large and permanent benefits to themselves, but to the corresponding interests of Latin America. This is self-evident.

The general investment and loan opportunity in Latin America is great—possibly greater than that opening to direct trade. Up to the time of the outbreak of war in Europe, Latin America negotiated fully 95 per cent. of its public and private loans in Europe. National bond issues and loans for personal enterprises were floated and financed in London, Paris and Berlin, rather than in New York. Now the situation must change, for, even when the war is over, Europe will need all its spare money for home loans and bond issues to pay her debts and make up for the industrial ravages of the conflict. If the United States investors will reform their prejudices in regard to revolutions, the stability of governments and climatic conditions, they will enter upon a big new field of legitimate opportunity not unlike that which they enjoyed twenty years ago in the Western States. They will also earn the gratitude of the Latin-American governments and people whom they accommodate. Not only must governments have national loans, but railroad extensions, new steam and electric lines, water powers and plants, harbor improvements and docks, building operations, and harvesting of crops must be financed. With these demands of money covered by the United States the vast supplies and materials required by the subsequent development should come from the United States, and reflect favorably on trade.

An interesting opportunity of signal importance in the present crisis is that of developing the exchange of travel between the representative men of Latin America, and those of the United States. Instead of always planning trips and excursions from the United States to Rio de Janeiro, Montevideo, Buenos Aires, La Paz, Lima, etc., why not invite the men of those cities and their chambers of commerce to send delegations to the corresponding cities of the United States? The war has materially reduced the number of South Americans who regularly go to Europe and its capitals. Why not bring them to Los Angeles, San Diego, San Francisco, New York, Chicago, New Orleans, and the other interesting cities of the United States? Correspondingly, if only a small portion of the Americans who usually visit European cities will visit the cities of South and Central America they will enjoy interesting experiences, and gain new ideas of the Western Hemisphere. There is no more powerful agency for peace, acquaintance and commerce than traveling. Travel and trade, in short, travel and trade together.

There is also the little-considered but most important educational—and intelligent opportunity. Never was there a more opportune moment than this one for an intellectual appreciation of Latin America by the educated men and women of the United States. There should be a closer coming together of the men of intellectual leadership of all the American nations and people. There should be a migration to Latin America of the educators, scholars, scientists and students of the United States—not to teach and lead, but to learn and co-operate. Latin-American savants, professors, authors and publicists should be invited to the United States and to address the learned societies of its scientific institutions and colleges. Students, both those in course and graduates, should be exchanged in increasing numbers by the universities of North and South America. Allied to this idea of intellectual and educational relationship is that of the study in the United States of the Spanish language and its literature. During the next decade, this language bids fair to be of more practical value to the average young American than French or German. The more men and women there are in the United States who can speak Spanish fluently, the quicker will that sensitive line of difference between North and South America disappear.

In most of the Latin-American countries, manufacturing and mechanical arts in general have reached little more than the preliminary stage. In large measure, this circumstance is due to the relative backwardness in economic development as a whole, and to the lack of sufficient capital and skilled labor. It is desirable that this situation continue, since the countries concerned, for many years to come, will find it profitable to export food products and [illegible] material in exchange for American [illegible] than to attempt manufacturing on their [illegible] account.

The Latin-American nations need, [illegible] other articles, textiles, especially [illegible] goods, which constitute a leading [illegible] import among all the States; hardware, [illegible] chinery and construction material, [illegible] shoes, drugs and medicines, glassware [illegible] pottery, and large amounts of coal.

The United States has now an extraordinary opportunity in Latin America on account of the new conditions created by the European war. No doubt, when the war is over, it will have to face the powerful competition of the commercial interests of Europe, but there is abundant room for [illegible]. Only in recent years has the United [illegible] begun to realize the importance of [illegible] American markets, it has made remarkable progress in building up trade during the last ten years, and this is the more [illegible] able if we take into consideration that before the United States had made any effort in that field most of the commercial [illegible] financial interests of the European [illegible] were well established.

UNION DE LAS NACIONES DE AMERICA.

Por J. Ztegner-Uriburu, D. Jur.

LA GUERRA Europea ha venido á demostrar á las Naciones de este Hemisferio que es indispensable una franca unión entre ellas y que es menester por lo tanto buscar los medios para llegar á ese fin; los beneficios morales, políticos y comerciales que se derivarían de un contacto más íntimo entre ellas, son incalculables. No necesitamos demostrar esta necesidad, basta enumerarla, la franca y leal unión de este Hemisferio puede explicarse en tres palabras:

"Pro mundo beneficio."

Es menester transformar los prejuicios que desgraciadamente existen entre los países latinos y anglo sajones de este Continente, de tal suerte que establezcamos una unión espiritual entre ellos como base de relaciones.

Es indiscutible que entre los pueblos de origen Latino Americano existe un prejuicio marcado en lo que respecta á las tendencias del pueblo de los Estados Unidos. Esas naciones miran con aprehensión su desarrollo extraordinario y temen que sea este el precursor de una absorción política humillante. En la época en que las antiguas colonias españolas, después de largos años de lucha gloriosa, obtuvieron su independencia, los Estados Unidos proclamaron la famosa Doctrina de Monroe tan diversa como equivocadamente interpretada. La Doctrina de Monroe no fué nada más que un aviso á los despóticos gobiernos de Europa unidos en aquel entónces en la llamada Santa Alianza, que todo el Continente Americano estaba destinado á ser siempre el hogar de la democracia y la libertad, y que los Estados Unidos verían con inquietud cualquier paso que se diera en contra de la independencia de las antiguas Colonias Españolas. Era pues la expresión de los sentimientos de una Nación destinada á ser el campeón de la libertad en el mundo, declarando que en el Hemisferio Occidental las antiguas ideas del Viejo Mundo sobre los derechos divinos de los reyes eran reemplazados por más altos y nobles ideales. En este sentido la utilidad de la Doctrina será permanente.

Mucho se ha dicho sobre las convulsiones internas á que han estado sujetas las Naciones Latino Americanas, y hoy mismo muchos creen que á no ser por la Doctrina Monroe las hoy Naciones de Centro y Sud America serían colonias de algún país Europeo. Nos parece que es tiempo ya de poner las cosas en su lugar.

Muchos escritores, especialmente Europeos, critican muy amargamente la falta de paz y orden en las Repúblicas de América. No está fuera de lugar observar aquí que leyendo la historia del mundo desde la última mitad del siglo XIX hasta nuestros días, en todo el Continente Americano no han habido más que tres guerras internacionales; una en el Norte entre los Estados Unidos y España para ayudar á Cuba en su independencia; y dos en la América del Sud. una entre el Paraguay y sus vecinos, el Brasil, la República Argentina y el Uruguay y más tarde, en 1879, la de Chile contra el Perú y Bolivia. Durante la misma época principiando con la Guerra de la Crimea hasta esta guerra, Europa ha sido teatro de una serie de conflictos sangrientos llevados á Asia, Africa y hasta á América cuando en vano se quería perpetuar la monarquía en México; no debemos olvidar que mientras esas guerras internacionales progresaban en Europa, serias revoluciones afligían á algunas de las otras naciones del mismo continente, revoluciones de mayores consecuencias que muchos de los levantamientos militares que aun suelen aparecer en la vida política de las naciones de América.

El Señor Root en uno de sus notables discursos durante su viaje por Sud América dijo con razón que "self-government" no era un don natural, que era el resultado de práctica y experiencia. Cuando las colonias españolas obtuvieron su independencia estaban tan distantes de saber lo que era "self-government" como las naciones despóticas de Europa sabían de derechos del pueblo, sabido es que el Gobierno Colonial no era nada más que una dominación arbitraria.

El aprendizaje ha sido doloroso y talvez lento, pero hoy la situación ha cambiado por completo, en la mayoría de las Naciones Latino Americanas, no hay prueba mas evidente del desarrollo maravilloso y del órden político reinante en las Naciones de Sud América que el considerable aumento de su comercio exterior, en el desarrollo de sus ferrocarriles y vías de comunicación en general, y en el crecimiento y riqueza de sus ciudades.

No hay una de las naciones Sud Américanas que no haya doblado y cuadruplicado su comercio exterior y su riqueza nacional en los últimos años. Ferrocarriles se construyen de un país á otro y en breve todas las capitales de las repúblicas del Sud estarán en directa comunicación unas con otras, consolidando así los lazos de paz y amistad que las une.

Las repúblicas de este Continente están basadas en los principios de igualdad y de gobierno del pueblo, por el pueblo y para el pueblo, por lo tanto, la comunidad de ideales y aspiraciones establece naturalmente un fuerte lazo de solidaridad entre ellas y es por lo tanto un deber patriótico de todas nuestras repúblicas de agotar todos los medios para armonizar sus ideas y llegar á una franca y leal unión.

The Lie That Spared Both Living and Dead.

BY FLORENCE MARTIN EASTLAND.

TWISTING her wisp of faded hair into an untidy knob, Mrs. McMickin clapped on a seedy velvet hat ornamented with a dejected purple feather. She wore bunion-marked shoes with run-over heels; but between hat and shoes a green chiffon gown over cerise silk encased her uncorseted figure and showed the muscles in stout arms which had carried a clothes basket to every house of consequence in the mountain village. A step sounded on the board walk.

"Come in, Mrs. Simpson," she invited as the visitor's hatchet face appeared at the half-open door. "Ain't this the stylish thing, though?" Mrs. McMickin inflated her ample bosom. "I couldn't pick betwixt this an' my red messa-lion to wear to Wayne Cameron's funeral till I remimbered his words at the Firemen's ball. Says he, 'Where did yez foind the ramar-rkable costume, Mrs. McMickin? Come an' show me wife. She'll open her eyes at the style.' Whin she says nothin' Wayne whispers, 'Jealousy!' but I don't believe it."

"She always looks well," remarked Mrs. Simpson.

"I ain't sayin' she don't—in her quiet way. But Wayne loved bright things. Whin he used to call Sat'day nights fer his washin' niver did he fergit to ask had I bought anny new 'glad rags.' "It's a good thing for his slip of a bride," commented Mrs. Simpson. "He'd 'a' broke her heart by his scandalous doin's."

"Wayne was all right," Mrs. McMickin defended while a tear slid down her cheek. "A lovabler fellow niver lived. Iverybody'll be at the funeral. Mac tried to git a buggy rig so's we could ride in the percession but the conveniences was all spoke for, the day Wayne died. Poor Wayne!" An earth-quake sigh threatened the green-cerise creation.

"Yes, 'poor Wayne,'" mimicked Mrs. Simpson. "And only last week you told me how he had that girl from Twin Peaks a-ridin' [illegible]"

"Keep that to yersilf," came the savage command. "Mind ye! I let that out whin I was mad at Mac an' had to take it out on somebody—God forgive me. Now's not the time to blacken Wayne's char-racter. They's plenty o' good things to say."

Mrs. Simpson's face took on lines of worry. "Sure," she conceded hastily.

"I didn't know the b'y would die so soon. The little widdy will have her cup o' sorrow 'thout hearin' anny more o' the careless lad's doin's. Don't ye repate that."

It was almost supper time when, after the funeral, the two paused at the McMickin gate. With swollen eyes and hat askew Mrs. McMickin urged her companion to stop for some tea.

"Somethin' hot braces a body afther sich a sad concurrence. Tin years ago I promised Mac I wouldn't take anything stronger than coffee; but today I nade it. That pitiful widdy's dhry eyes an' heart-broken face has got on me nerves. But I sha'n't lose me place in sassiety by touchin' liquor now."

The sympathy and sentiments were not dissipated by strong tea. The next morning Mrs. Mickin made a visit of condolence, but suddenly grown shy through instinctive delicacy she stood dumb when the sorrowful widow opened the door.

"Will you come in, Mrs. McMickin?"

"N-n-no—thank ye kindly," at length she stammered. "I dropped by to—to—" Wildly she searched for a reason. Glancing away she saw her pet rooster which frequently followed her. "I jest called to say that a frish egg's a good appentizer. Nobody but me kapes hins, so I'll put an egg inside yer screen door ivery mornin'."

Her emotions grew so overpowering that she bolted before Mrs. Cameron could reply; but each day she placed an egg in the spot indicated. She made seven morning pilgrimages before again seeing the widow who late one afternoon appeared with an air of distress at the door of Mrs. McMickin. In her hand was a basket containing seven eggs.

"I've brought them back, you see—not because I don't appreciate your kindness, but because they—they would choke me after what you said about my dead boy." She made a brave attempt to control her voice and quivering mouth but groped after a chair when her eyes filled.

"There, dear lamb, there," soothed Mrs. McMickin hurrying forward to place a chair. "Why, bless my soul, I wouldn't say a word against Wayne not for the world. He was one of the lovablest fellows iver lived, as I've often told Mrs. Simpson." She stopped in dismay. The injudicious truth confided to that crony was completely forgotten until she mentioned Mrs. Simpson's name. The speaker's confusion was not lost upon Mrs. Cameron.

"It was about that girl from Twin Peaks," the widow gasped brokenly. "I see it is true. I was afraid so from—from something I discovered, but I wasn't sure and I might have believed I was mistaken. I could even have forgiven him if you had not made that impossible by setting the story afloat for every one to seize and gloat over. I can't bear their pity! They will think I lack self-respect when I grieve for him. And you have robbed me of all happy memories. Now I can never believe he cared for me or that he was sincere."

She sat leaning forward with her gloved hands tightly clasped in her lap. Mrs. McMickin stared while she twisted a corner of her gingham apron. She was weighing matters well before she acted.

"Who told ye I said annything about Wayne an' a girl from Twin Peaks?"

"Mrs. Simpson; the day before my husband was taken ill."

"She thought it her duty?" The visitor assenting she added grimly, "Minnie Simpson's great on seein' her duty loike that. Well, let's see what she's got to say."

"It's useless," sobbed Mrs. Cameron. "Nothing can give me back that precious memory. I have no desire to hear you reproach her for betraying your confidence."

"There'll be no approaches," Mrs. McMickin said gently and soothingly. "It's only justice to Wayne who loved you better than anyone ilse, or fer why did he marry ye?" She was silent yet determined as she walked beside the black-robed figure, across the street and down three houses.

Mrs. Simpson was in. A scared glance at the grave women showed that she guessed their errand. She asked them to be seated, and set her thin lips with an expression of virtuous resolution. Mrs. McMickin stood behind Mrs. Cameron's chair.

"Minnie Simpson," she began portentously, "it seems you repated some story about Wayne an' a girl from Twin Peaks. Did I start it?" She waited with severe eyes fixed on the perspiring Mrs. Simpson.

"You did—the day we went for mountain currants. You can't deny it."

Mrs. McMickin shook her head.

"Strange, Minnie Simpson, that I can't remimber it. Minnie Simpson," she demanded in a voice which made that lady start, "didn't I have along a flat pint bottle?"

"Why—I don't think—" The thin lips parted in astonishment as she saw a brawny fist flourished above Mrs. Cameron's head. "Mebby you did have cold tea along," she stuttered, confused by the threatening signals.

Mrs. McMickin burst into a loud laugh.

"That's the toime I fooled her, Mrs. Cameron. 'Tis a painful admittance I'm obliged to make, but I take a drop too much now an' thin, as Mrs. Simpson knows. 'Twas rum I had that day, an' whilst I don't know what I said about poor Wayne, it was a loie with the divil father to it. A loie, d'ye hear, Minnie Simpson?"

The widow choked, patted the rough hand on the back of the chair and silently left the room. Mrs. McMickin stood staring after her until Mrs. Simpson's sharp nose pierced her line of vision. Dropping into a chair she covered her face with her apron and rocked back and forth, shaken by weeping.

"Whatever in the world—" began Mrs. Simpson, but the sitter flapped down her apron and glared.

"You wouldn't understand if I talked me head off. Mac's slidge-hammer couldn't pound it into yer noodle."

Fishes Can Smell.

[Chicago Herald:] A fish hasn't a nose, but it can smell. Recent experiments have proved this. What is more, these experiments have proved that odor travels through water, just as it does through air. Anglers have laid so much stress on the need of exciting a fish's interest by the look of food that the effect of scent has been overlooked. A shark will bite at a hook containing a piece of fat pork, although the pork does not look like any kind of fish that swims in the sea. Why, then, should the trout be expected to be interested only in an artificial "gray hackle?"

It may be heresy in angling to suggest that a "fly" should smell like a fly. These scientific experiments show how large a part smell plays in the food pursuit of fish. Bait, such as small crabs, was found and eaten by the fish two or three times as rapidly when the shells were broken. Bait placed inside a gauze bag was smelled within three minutes of being lowered in the water, and almost at the same time all the fish began nibbling at the bag. When cotton was stuffed into its so-called "nostrils," the dogfish would seldom observe the food that came near them. If they saw other dogfish eating, those whose nostrils were stuffed would join them and take a share in the feast, but when kept to themselves they starved in the midst of plenty.

Owls Don't Fear Guns.

[Popular Science Monthly:] A German veterinary surgeon has made some curious and interesting observations upon the psychological effect produced on animals by the firing of big guns. He considered the horses and dogs used for military purposes, and the game in the arena of warfare.

Soon after the war began it was noticed that large numbers of horses and especially dogs migrated into countries beyond the seat of hostilities.

The wild boar, the badger, bear, red deer and roebuck followed, but strange to say the hare, whose timidity is proverbial, refused to leave its home. Birds which remained unfrightened were owls, falcons, sparrow-hawks and crows.

GETTING TO KNOW THE OTHER AMERICA

Salesmanship—Trifling Matters Often Overlooked. By William A. Reid.

THE growth of international commerce is creating new careers; the American commercial invasion reaches around the earth; far up the Himalayas I saw the Stars and Stripes waving over tea plantations; American machinery has penetrated the "Vale of Kashmir;" Australia's proposed capital city was planned by a Chicago architect, who surpassed world-wide competition; on Chinese rivers we ride in ancient sampans propelled by modern American motors; the Bolivian Congress sits in chairs made in Michigan; an American rubber syndicate has transported its factory to the jungles of Brazil; South Africa called from Panama our famous conqueror of plagues to save thousands of miners of the Rand; a great Italian scholar tells us that the annual return (normal times) of half a million of his countrymen from the United States is working wonderful civic reforms in Italy; indeed, it is difficult to go beyond the range of American genius and commercial activity.

In the Western Hemisphere, Saxon and Latin have not known each other well. Visits have ever been difficult or inconvenient to make; distances are great and travel facilities have been few. Today, both of these obstacles are being removed by faster ships and shorter routes; indeed, our very thoughts are exchanged through the air. A better understanding is fast approaching; interest is quickened; more intimate acquaintance brings knowledge of each other's requirements.

The Latin-American forests, plains and mountains are teeming with man's necessities. On the other hand, North American factories are busy, but in many lines an over-production is causing concern. Fair exchange, then, is the natural solution of these problems of supply and demand. In the present article attention is called to a few of the minor points in connection with SELLING; the next article will deal with the questions of BUYING.

Salesmanship.

The field of salesmanship is one of the most promising as well as varied in connection with our business development with Latin-American countries. The products which we have to offer those countries are in the main things which they do not themselves produce, and in number they are practically innumerable.

The salesmanship field is open and still uncrowded; and to the skilled salesman its rewards are most inviting; but it should be remembered that the word "skilled" has a far different significance than in the United States. A different race of people requires different trade tactics; the quick-selling methods prevailing in our own country prove disgusting to the prospective Latin-American customer. Our most popular and most successful salesmen in those countries are the ones who know the people, their history, characteristics, language, customs, habits, etc., and whose business-getting methods are above reproach. These qualifications come gradually but surely to those who devote time and energy to the subject. More and more the great manufacturing enterprises and exporters in the United States are demanding experienced men for their Latin-American departments.

Salesmanship has really become a profession, and probably no country has developed more able all-round men for home service than the United States.

In foreign lands, however, much more is exacted of a commercial representative than at home. The prospective customer may know nothing of the firm the traveler represents. His first impressions are gained solely from the bearing and appearance of his guest; and the latter's success depends largely upon his presentation of his proposition. One very important requisite is that the salesman should know the language of the country in which he is operating. In this particular the European salesman is superior to his average North American brother.

At the moment I recall two American salesmen I met in South America; each sold automobiles made in the United States and both gentlemen had spent several months in Argentina. One of them spoke Spanish almost fluently and had disposed of ten machines; the other man had sold only one. Whether the success of the former or the apparent failure of the latter was due to the merits of the respective machines is not known, but I firmly believe that the success of the one was mainly due to his ability to converse with his prospective customer.

The commercial representative acting through an interpreter loses much of his force and spirit; it is rare to find one who interprets the shades of meaning and expressions which the principal wishes to convey.

Of course one may visit Latin countries, and even form most important business connections, without knowing a word of any foreign language; but a familiarity with a country's language, and using it in daily intercourse with the people, gives one a broader view, a more intimate knowledge, and a far better understanding.

Comparative methods of the European and the North American in endeavoring to further develop their respective commercial interests in Latin-American countries is a very broad subject, and one in which both peoples have strong pointa.

The European salesman is found all over the Latin-American countries, and he has been there for years; having followed European capital, which is responsible for many of the railways, steamship lines and numerous enterprises found throughout the southern continent. Speaking very broadly and with numerous exceptions, the North-American traveling salesman is new in the field, and it follows that he is not so well acquainted with the Latin-American business man and his methods.

It is impossible in a short article to enter into details of this important subject. One fact, however, stands out boldly; in dealings between man and man it is quite essential that good feelings exist. The more amicable the relations the closer the business ties; and it is the small things—the trifling matters overlooked—the little courtesies often lacking—I propose to call to the attention of the business man who seeks Latin-American markets. In other words, let us build our commercial intercourse from the very foundation—a foundation based on mutal respect and good understanding.

Our country is in a very high state of commercial development, and when we visit other lands, many sections of which are comparatively new in the fields of business, we are loath to give up the comforts, conveniences and customs which we enjoy at home.

We start for the great continent south of us, well termed the "land of tomorrow." Some go for pleasure or in quest of the unusual; others make the journey purely for business purposes. Alas! some hardships and not a few disappointments often beset the traveler from the United States, and he returns home discouraged and sometimes embittered. Why? Largely because he did not understand the people among whom he sojourned. He carried with him and attempted to apply too rigidly his North-American ideals and customs. He failed to adopt for the time being the manners and life of a different people and of a new and undeveloped country, which is of prime importance when making the acquaintance of the Latin-American men. In many respects the West Coast countries are new and undeveloped as compared with the progress of the North-American States.

Delays Are Common.

Let me illustrate an occurrence that actually took place recently when I boarded a Chilean steamship at Panama bound for Callao. About twenty passengers were aboard and we were only one day late. Several South Americans and a few Europeans were swinging comfortably in the shade in their hammocks, which they themselves had wisely provided. Two men from the United States were walking up and down the decks, the scorching sun making the decks almost unbearable, and apparently every hour's additional delay making them angrier. Note the contrast! The Americans were impatient for the activity and exactness characteristic of their country, and at almost the beginning of their journey were permitting delay—a trifling matter aboard a Chilean steamer—to mar their pleasures. The South Americans and the Europeans, judging by appearances, were prepared for any delay that might arise.

Typical English Salesmen.

At a hotel in Lima I met an Englishman who was traveling salesman for a well-known London house. His sample-trunks had been put off steamship at the wrong port, which fact necessitated his remaining in idleness for at least ten days. I saw him often during this enforced leisure. He secured admission to the leading club of the city and was making himself popular at both hotel and club. Finally, when his samples arrived, he invited me as well as all guests of the hotel to visit his display; he lectured about the manufacture of his articles and gave away souvenirs of the occasion. The delay was probably the [illegible] thing that could have happened [illegible] salesman; it made him many friends [illegible] the business men whom he called [illegible] the club, and, as a consequence, [illegible] factory sales. The territory of this [illegible] man is all South America, the greater [illegible] of which he covers twice a year.

Typical Examples of the Earnest L[illegible]

As typical examples of the [illegible] with which the Latin-American [illegible] man is preparing to handle products [illegible] the United States I have in mind [illegible] business firm in the heart of the [illegible] La Paz. This company is acting [illegible] agent in Bolivia for a well-known [illegible] American manufactured product. [illegible] head of the firm has paid two visits [illegible] United States, and on both occasions [illegible] mained several months; he studied [illegible] manufacture of the goods by spending [illegible] time in the factory; and is now [illegible] this practical knowledge in sales[illegible] in his own country. In conversation [illegible] him in the company's headquarters [illegible] glad to learn that he is having [illegible] success in introducing American [illegible]

Another example: In an Argentine [illegible] a young business man has taken the [illegible] for an American automobile. Before [illegible] so, however, he visited the factory [illegible] United States and spent months [illegible] quainting himself with the various [illegible] partments of the automobile business [illegible] it is needless to say, is authority [illegible] subject in his section of the country.

A native engineer with whom I [illegible] acquainted in Brazil furnishes another [illegible] ample. He completed his professional [illegible] ing in the United States, and is now [illegible] pushing the sale of American [illegible] in various sections of South America.

A Chilean gentleman with whom I [illegible] ed offers still another illustration. [illegible] selling American paints in the [illegible] Continent. He, too, has been to the [illegible] States to study the manufacture [illegible] specialty, and incidentally to observe [illegible] business life and customs.

These examples are only a few [illegible] many that might be cited as [illegible] show how thoroughly in earnest is the [illegible] American business man. He prepares [illegible] business with us by spending [illegible] money to meet and fraternize with our [illegible] ness men. Are we devoting a correspond[illegible] amount of time and energy toward [illegible] vating the Latin-American field?

The Latin-American business man [illegible] dial; possibly a bit more so than [illegible] of affairs in this country when he [illegible] proached by the average salesman. [illegible] fact in a measure may be accounted [illegible] from the other fact that the former [illegible] so constantly preyed upon or even [illegible] as is often the case in the United [illegible] Be that as it may, I am quite sure, [illegible] years of business association with the [illegible] American, that a gentleman with [illegible] credentials will receive a welcome [illegible] these southern countries, and the [illegible] he has to offer will be given a careful [illegible] sideration.

The figures are imperfect and inconclusive, and probably under the revelation of an exhaustive county-by-county census would prove all too conservative. Petroleum, cement and minerals generally, with manufactured products from factories outside the Los Angeles district, but all handled through Los Angeles, probably amounted to $100,000,000 more, to be credited to the "back country" which is so largely the basis of Los Angeles' prosperity.

VII.

THE "CRIME OF THE CENTURY."

"Liberty Under Law" is the sound slogan which has come to be accepted and observed in and by Los Angeles; and under that proud banner she has conquered and is conquering.

The secret of the unprecedented industrial progress of Los Angeles and the hope of future advancement in the industries has rested, and now rests, in the continuous and uninterrupted maintenance of the open shop. Industrial Freedom—the mutual recognition by employer and employee of the rights of each under the law, as well as the rights of the public at large in questions relating to labor, industry, freedom for all lawful operations, and legal protection for the operators, whether owners or workers—has been the strong foundation on which has largely risen the structure of this city's greatness in achievement. While other cities have been torn and harassed by strikes and endless, destructive, needless conflicts between capital and labor, Los Angeles, by putting a firm foot down on this kind of economic and social disturbance, has forged ahead, unhampered, and with ever-increasing momentum.

They have tried by every criminal means conceivable, the harpies who prey on labor and the toilers of industry, to fasten their evil claws on Los Angeles. With fire and dynamite, cowardly twin agencies of destruction and murder, they in 1910 attacked the Los Angeles Times in its grim, gray castle at First and Broadway, vainly believing that in wiping out the physical equipment of this newspaper, and destroying its loyal workers, they could still the voice that had long been exposing their nefarious operations and calling upon the vigilance of the people in warning against them. It was the culminating stroke, the final desperate attempt of the beaten and baffled labor chieftains to bludgeon their way into power over the prostrate industries of the freest large city, industrially, in all America, that they might prey upon the prosperity of its contented workers and institute a rule of graft and blackmail over its employers.

The perpetrators of this "Crime of the Century" were soon made to realize how little they had really known about the temper of the liberated city which they had tried in their bloody way to intimidate. [illegible] struction of The Times Building and [illegible] assassination of twenty of its [illegible] workers at last brought quick [illegible] of the true meaning of the lawless [illegible] slaughts on Los Angeles to the [illegible] citizens who had never before awak[illegible] the truth. New champions arose [illegible] hand to defend the liberties of their [illegible] from the common enemy. SPURRED by the fabulous prices commanded by baser metals while world-war is raging, more than 12,000 men are burrowing like the trolls of the ancient bards in the gravel beds of the California lowlands and into the quartz ledges of the Sierras, bringing to light a mineral treasure that is estimated this year at a value in excess of $100,000,000. All previous records bid fair to be broken before the fabulous mining year of 1916 passes into history.

Never has the demand for mineral products been so varied or insistent, and never in modern times have the prices been so extremely high and the returns so satisfactory to the miner. Mines remembered in name only have been reopened, new bodies of ore have been uncovered, and new processes for hardening and strengthening steel have awakened a demand for a whole category of ores that were once considered practically valueless.

The early California miner knew but one valuable metal, gold. Silver ledges awakened only a secondary interest and copper was disregarded. To him the words chrome, tungsten, magnesite, manganese and antimony would have been simply jargon; zinc was not worth quarrying for. But that was [illegible] years ago; this year the value of the baser metals will exceed by many millions the total gold production and the gold prospectors are far outnumbered by those seeking deposits of tungsten, magnesite and manganese. Agents of the allied powers are offering fabulous bounties for the discovery of manganese deposits; it is to the use of this mysterious mineral substance that they attribute the lightness and durability of the steel used in the German high-power guns.

"The increased demand of war material has awakened an interest in California mining that is without a precedent," said Frederick H. Miller, mining engineer of the State Corporations Department, recently. "The demand for gold never lags, but the prime interest at present is in the baser metals.

If there were Federal corporation laws that would keep these fake companies from incorporating in other States, we could do a great deal more.

"During the last eighteen months applications for permission to sell stock have been reduced by this department from about 600 [illegible] mining corporations. We have sought to protect investors by requiring that the [illegible] portion of the money received from the sale of stock should be actually invested in developing the property. Some of the new companies are already paying handsome dividends. I believe I can truthfully say that the returns to the investors from California mines are greater now than ever before in the history of the State.

"Our gold production continues to grow yearly. A new record was established last year, and I expect to see that record broken by the end of this year. The activity in the Mother Lode counties has been the greatest in two generations; in the placer districts a number of the new $250,000 steel dredgers have been installed, and these will occasion a big increase in the gold output.

"Many of the mines that were formerly worked for gold alone, however, are now made to produce three and sometimes four metals, thus doubling or tripling the value of the ore. Most of the increase in zinc production is occasioned by the new zinc separation processes installed in the Cerro Gordo and Mammoth copper mines.

"Copper production in California appears to be only in its infancy. Some of the ore beds recently uncovered in Shasta county are marvels of their kind. I should not be surprised to see California surpass Montana in copper production within the next ten years. The Sutro ore body of Shasta county, worked by the Mammoth Copper Company, is almost fabulously rich in its combined yield of copper, silver and gold. It recalls to mind the wealth of the Comstock. Then there is the Balaklala copper mine from which Tom Lawson extracts his millions and the Mountain Copper Company, owned by English capitalists. A new copper district is developing rapidly in Inyo county. The big producer there is the Cerro Gordo mine, where the ore is rich in zinc, silver and gold. Prospectors are reporting new ledges in a number of other districts. Last year's copper output was valued at more than $7,000,000. Judging by the reports and samples received by this department, I feel that the era of California copper production is just opening."

New processes for extracting the different metal substances from the same ore body have revolutionized quartz mining in California. Last year's record of the group of copper mines around Kennett, in Shasta county, affords a striking instance. These mines yielded 315,549 tons of ore, from which the following was taken:

$ 477,684	in gold,	averaging $ 1.51	per ton
396,183	in silver,	averaging 1.26	per ton
3,772,218	in copper,	averaging 11.96	per ton
1,022,722	in zinc,	averaging 3.24	per ton
Total, $5,668,807		averaging $17.97	per ton

The average of this same group for 1914 was but $12.70 per ton.

Notwithstanding the fact that gold mining is little influenced by competition, it is becoming yearly more difficult to determine the actual output of the California mines. Owners no longer boast of the fabulous value of their property, in fact there is a constantly increasing tendency to cry values down. For this the assessor, the walking delegate and the income tax collector are to blame; then the specter of a 25 per cent. inheritance tax lurks in the background.

Along the Mother Lode there are probably fifty properties that are owned by private interests, that have no stock for sale and that seek to conceal the actual value of the property. The walking delegate is a growing menace in the mining districts. Whenever a property is reported to be doing well, the walking delegate arrives and starts an agitation for shorter hours and increased pay. The assessor next comes prying round; in the present era of high taxes he seeks but an excuse to boost the assessed valuation. The income-tax man is showing a growing interest in the returns from mining properties, and the State corporation tax experts keep one eye constantly on the Mother Lode. The result is that the mine owners are becoming clever in the art of concealing the actual yield of their properties, and the operation of many mines is shrouded in deep mystery. That is why new discoveries are not heralded as they once were in the days of the Comstock. The estimate of $100,000,000 output this year is based on the reports of the State Mining Bureau, and is very likely several millions below the actual value.

A stringent clause in our Federal mining laws has driven the old-time mining prospector from the hills and the cañons and converted the modern prospector into a veritable Sherlock Holmes. The modern mining laws contain a stipulation that a valuable mineral discovery must be made prior to locating a claim. It is no longer permissible to stake out a claim just because the prospect "looks good;" a specimen of the mineral taken from the property must actually be produced.

So there are no more "prospectors." A man digging in a desert place is sinking a well; the one mussing up a gravel bed is locating a new route for the State Highway Commission. Some actually build their cabins over the place in which they are interested, and work there only at night, devoting their attention during the day to some remote spot where there is not even a trace of valuable mineral.

Until he actually finds a valuable mineral deposit, a prospector is now simply a trespasser on the public domain. Twenty-five years ago it was comparatively easy to make a discovery without doing any preliminary prospecting work. Now it is exceedingly difficult. Horace A. Winchell, a noted mining authority, has recently called attention to this clause of the Federal mining law, asserting that no other country requires a prospector to make actual discovery of mineral before staking out his claim.

Prospecting for tungsten ore has brought back almost a repetition of the Bret Harte days in some sections of California during the last year. This ore is used to toughen steel and has been in great demand in the manufacture of war supplies. Agents of Great Britain and France have scoured the mining districts of California, offering startling bonuses for the discovery of new ore bodies. The most successful find was that of the Atolia Mining Company at the camp that now bears its name. This metal sold in 1913 at $6 a unit. At one time this year it was selling at $105 a unit, or $5.25 a pound. Atolia is but eight hours by auto from Los Angeles, one can make the round trip for $10. The Atolia property was estimated early this year as the most profitable mine in California.

Quicksilver has set many a California brain spinning with its gyrations during the last eighteen months. The prime market for quicksilver is in San Francisco, as California is the greatest producing State. A leap from $37.50 a flask to $300 a flask is something without a precedent in the value of a stable product for which no new use has been discovered. One California property, the New Idria, paid $200,000 in dividends, or more than 40 per cent. on its issued capital. It is estimated that the value of the California quicksilver output this year will be in excess of $1,600,000.

The discovery of precious stones has also attracted attention recently. J. Hufford found a large diamond in the Cherokee district of Butte county, last summer, that has been valued at $450. The Cherokee district promptly became a favorite place for the swains of Northern California to spend their vacations. Picking up a stone for an engagement ring under the trees was much more attractive than paying for one at a dollar a week. Half a dozen finds of nominal value were reported, but not enough to pay for the time expended in the search. Profitable mining for tourmaline and topaz was reported from San Diego county.

Despite the persistent efforts of the State Corporations Commission, the stock of scores of wild-cat mining companies was sold in California last summer. The so-called "blue-sky" law requires that all issues of corporation stock in California must first be approved by the Corporations Commission; but the law cannot block the sale of privately owned stock in companies incorporated in other States. The fake promoters simply file their incorporation papers in Arizona or Nevada, cause the stock to be issued to themselves, and sell it here as private stock. This has been done by a number of companies claiming to operate in the new Goldstone district in San Bernardino county.

"Some good prospects have been reported from that camp," said Engineer Miller the other day, "but there is nothing yet to outline the extent of the ore chutes. It may mean the opening up of a valuable district, or the veins may peter out unexpectedly."

One of the rainbow chases of the last year has been the frantic search through the California mineral districts for the new substance carrying the formidable name of molybdenum. It is a flaky substance, like lead or zinc, and is used to lighten the weight and toughen the substance of steel. This was the most sought-after war mineral of them all. Early in February there came a report that valuable deposits had been discovered in San Diego county. Agents of the British government hastened here from Canada, and for a time the hopes of the allies were pitched high. This is one of the metals used by the Germans in their secret process for toughening steel.

Despite the most indefatigable search, however, the prize metal was found only in infinitesimal quantities. From San Diego county the search extended through Inyo and Shasta counties. Indications were not lacking, but the substance has not been discovered in paying quantities.

Interest has been reawakened by war prices even in lowly silver. It will be recalled that a W. J. Bryan once sought to prove by statistics that the price of silver always follows the price of wheat. After lying dormant in the basement ever since the famous campaign of '96, silver has stirred feebly and is following the price of wheat again, but like most of those who "follow the ponies," it is a long ways behind. Silver has advanced from 55 cents an ounce in July, 1914, to 66 cents in September. The old Calico silver mines have been reopened near Bodie, and the operation is reported to be on a paying basis. Bodie is a part of the old Bret Harte district. "The Bad Man from Bodie" was the title of a song famous in the old mining camps.

The following table shows the yield of mineral substances in California during 1915, as compiled by returns received by the State Mining Bureau, San Francisco, in reply to inquiries sent to producers.

His View Revised.

[Holland's Magazine:] A handsomely dressed damsel entered a crowded tram car. A rough looking fellow, wearing a dilapidated hat and a suit of homespun clothes, rose to his feet.

"Miss, take my seat. I don't look as well as these 'ere gentlemen," he said, nodding to several men, "but I've got more politeness."

Without a word of thanks the young woman sat down.

"Miss," said the old fellow, with a smile, "I believe I left my tobacco pouch on the seat. Will you please get up?"

No sooner was the seat unoccupied than the old fellow sat down again. "B'lieve I'll jes keep sittin' here, miss," he explained. "I've got a little more politeness than these here gentlemen, but I've found out I ain't got nigh so much common sense."

HOW A FRUIT-GROWER HAS WON SUCCES

His Own Conclusions. By E. D. Seaton of Santa Rosa.

AFTER many years of experience with fruit trees and of study and observation of orchards in New York, Michigan and particularly in California, I came to the conclusion some time ago that, if I was ever to grow my ideal of an orchard, the most effective part of my work would have to be under the ground.

Interest in the subject of horticulture took me to many orchards before planting my own. I discovered that in practically every orchard there are to be found a few highly distinguishable trees. No matter how poor or neglected it may be, there are always some noteworthy trees, and from a careful study and examination of such trees much valuable knowledge may be gained.

In a poor 40-year-old prune orchard where the trees were standing 15x16 feet apart, two trees in particular have given me a fund of knowledge. A record of these trees has fortunately been kept for some thirteen years. During that period an average of more than 1000 pounds of fresh prunes per tree has been obtained each year.

Prune trees, 6 years old.

Six years ago I formulated a definite plan for planting a fifty-four-acre field to fruit trees, with the full expectation that they would produce an annual net income of 6 per cent. on a valuation of $5000 per acre, when the trees were in full bearing. At this writing they are exceeding my expectations as to development. Gravenstein apples and French prune trees were selected for the test as being best adapted to the location and the soil. Being unable to obtain any certified nursery trees, budded or grafted from vigorous, heavy-producing, hereditary stock, the ordinary one-year-old grafted nursery trees were used.

The ground was laid off in twenty-eight-foot squares, holes three feet deep and three feet in diameter were dug in each corner. Some minerals were scattered in the holes which were then half filled with soil fully alive with soil-bacteria. The trees were so placed as to encourage deep rooting, and they give evidence today of the wisdom of being so planted. Subsoiling and very deep cultivation have been constantly maintained since the first four months. This has been accomplished with difficulty because our soil is tough and tenacious, and during the wet season runs together and packs.

If anything has been proven by our intensive application and work, by the application of various mineral salts, by varying the seasons for cultivation and by pruning, with careful daily notations, it is this, viz.: Tree development is always in proportion to the development of the soil bacteria.

It is a lamentable fact that we are unable to find in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere, carefully-compiled data as to the advantages and best methods of developing the proper kind of soil microbes. The soil should be made to teem and fairly hum with myriads of the legume bacilli. They keep the soil wholesome and prepare from it the proper food for the roots. They make available the nitrogen of the air. They mull over the earth's mineral salts so that the trees can assimilate them. In this way phosphorus, potash, magnesia, sulphur, iron, lime, calcium, sodium, and who knows how many more, are assimilated, each one (in its proportion) just as essential to the tree's growth and fruitage as the other.

In our rich California valley lands, where the sedimentary soil is of almost unlimited depth, I see no reason why we should not make the feeding zone of the roots of our trees thirty feet in depth or even more.

To the question how to make a tree grow, I should answer: "Just love it, and then give it more love." How can one help loving trees? When you plant a tree with your own hands and later see it responding so gloriously to your care, producing its fruit in generous, even lavish abundance for yourself, your children and even your children's children, has it no claim upon your affections?

It is obvious that the clovers, the vetches, the peas, the beans and other vegetation are dependent for their growth upon their peculiar bacteria, and the growth is in proportion to their (the bacteria's) development upon their roots. Is not such a fact illuminative, and taking our cue from this fact should we not make every effort to supply, as far as possible, these industrious underground workers for all vegetable life?

It is a source of no small satisfaction to me to watch the two, four or six-horse team, or the tractor plowing or cultivating in the orchard, driving down, down, down, making that dormant soil available by oxidization, liberating the stores of nutritious elements which have been so securely locked up for ages and thus furnishing the trees with an ever-deepening feeding zone. That is where the foundation is laid for splendid fruit trees, with sturdy trunks and vigorous limbs. The horticulturist should never forget that it is his part to see to it that this feeding zone, to its utmost depth, is kept in a perfect, habitable condition for our underground workers that Providence supplies, that they may always have a warehouse full of tree food.

There will be no question about the roots pushing down with eagerness to secure the choice morsels specially adapted for the nourishment of the tree.

We are eyewitnesses to the fact that, where choice plant tit-bits have been placed underground within reach of the tree, numbers of root tentacles, with true tree intelligence, have soon found their way down to them, and, weaving themselves about the hard and dense substances, have absorbed the nourishment contained therein.

May we not truthfully say that by deepening the zone of feeding we have increased our acreage many fold, not, of course, in length and breadth, but certainly in thickness?

The accompanying photographs show something of the comparative yearly growth of our trees. It has been made in spite of the fact that the trees did not get the best start possible.

In the first place we could not get trees of known hereditary vigor and productiveness. And secondly, shortly after planting what we did get, business called me East and during my stay there, a period of four months, the ground became so overrun with weeds and grass and so dried out that a large majority of the trees were damaged. By careful attention to the orchard the remainder of the year, and systematic cultivation ever since, this was largely overcome.

Among other records we have kept those of root and branch growth to which we refer with satisfaction. The fourth season's root-growth showed plainly interlacing of roots of trees standing over twenty feet apart. It has been most interesting to watch this development, and we are confident, from close observation, that many roots now extend over forty feet from the tree bearing them.

Gravenstein apple, 6 years old, 24 feet high.

The vitalizing efficiency of this rooting process has made itself apparent in the appearance of the trees and in branch development. Many instances have been noted where the new branch growth has been as great as an inch a day for months at a time.

From a painstaking estimate, which may be considered fairly accurate, we found the growth of the tree to total more than 2500 feet. Using the same care in determining the leaf area of the tree's foliage, it was found that, counting both sides of the leaves, some 6000 square feet of surface was exposed to the air. The height of the tree above the ground is twenty-four feet and the lateral spread about eighteen feet.

VALUABLE INFORMATION IN A NUTSHE

Wisdom in Paragraphs. By Ernest Braunton.

IN EPITOME.

THE present is the best time to dig plants of native shrubs, vines, ferns and other material of this class, and it should be done as soon as possible.

If you allow the present season to pass without growing some Iris Germanica you will make a serious mistake. No family of plants has a wider or finer range in color, and local dealers have the best.

When cleaning up and planting do not forget the backyard. It may be made as neat and attractive as the front garden, and much more interesting in being an outdoor living-room.

The largest flower in the world grows in Sumatra and is known as Rafflesia Arnoldi. It is two to three feet across and weighs about fifteen pounds. The color is pink, the petals are a foot across and three-fourths of an inch thick. A cup in the flower center holds twelve quarts.

The most commendable movement looking to the abolition of billboards, in both city and country, seems to be enjoying a nap. In all local territory Inglewood is the only place free from these blots upon the landscape.

More small neighborhood parks are needed so that all may enjoy rest and recreation without the necessity of taking a long walk or a car trip to reach the spot. In each should be at least a drinking fountain and a comfort station.

The native foothill clematis is fully as ornate as any we get from other lands, and now is a good time to hie away to canyon slopes to dig up a plant or two. Do not get the lowland one found in the lower ravines in damp lands and along watercourses.

Too little attention is paid to railroad gardening in California. Not alone station grounds, but railroad embankments, should be planted to something of a permanent nature, either a close soil cover or shrubbery, or both.

No matter how small your lot, arrange it on some systematic plan in conformity with its shape and contour and in harmony with the house to which it belongs and which it should ornament. First have a well-kept lawn and borders, and if space allows, shrubbery next, and lastly trees.

Shade trees, whether in garden or street, add greatly to the healthfulness of a city by cooling and purifying the air; the foliage evaporates large quantitties of water, reducing greatly the temperature, more especially during the hottest weather. Circulation of air is also promoted.

There are a few who have acquired rural homesites in Southern California who lack appreciation of natural beauty. Hillsides covered with fine growths of native shrubs are denuded to make room for plants from foreign lands of far less garden value. Luckily for us, such obtuse vandals are few.

This is a good clean-up time. The soil, thanks to a copious rain, is in fine condition for weed pulling, plowing and working over in general. Do it now.

To those communities who cannot for any reason control street and other planting over a considerable area or for a long distance on one or more streets, the "block beautiful" plan is recommended. All the owners in a block may possibly agree upon harmonious, collective beautifying.

More harmony and beauty is each generation demanded for all the senses, the effect of a higher culture, plainly manifest to all. Luckily in this land of flowers our sense of sight and smell is fully gratified in all classes. Rich men may store works of art in palatial homes, but works of nature cannot be hidden, and plants and flowers are enjoyed alike by all.

Plant all flowers and shrubs in masses, each kind by itself, in order that a composite or collective effect is attained, so that groups and not individuals are the chief attractions.

The movement for public-comfort stations seems to be taking a nap, though the need is as great as ever, and a crying one, too. The comfort of women and children especially should be looked after.

Los Angeles is to have a gigantic flower and house-beautiful show during the first week in November. (October 31 to November 6.) The location will be in the old Boston Store on Broadway, opposite the City Hall.

Nature study in our schools must not be confounded with botany. Nature study does not dissect plants or seek to analyze them, but regards all plants as living things of interest, with which both adults and children should come in closer touch and about which they should know more.

All cities and towns need rebuilding in one respect: the parkways should be made wider on nearly all streets, to provide a reasonable area for trees, in which they may receive air and water to the roots, to insure ordinary health and vigor.

The secretary of the American Gladiolus Society, Henry Fouell, says the twelve best gladioli are: America, Augusta, Mrs. Francis King, Mrs. Frank Pendleton, Independence, Niagara, Panama, Peace, Pride of Goshen, Kunderi, Glory, Princeps, The King.

A very good spray for mildew on roses is made with one-half ounce of Ivory, Naptha or other good soap, one-fourth ounce of liver of sulphur and one gallon of water. Dissolve the sulphur in cold water, the soap in hot water. Spray on plants when the sun is not shining, preferably in early morning.

In a shady, cool place plant some bulbs of cyclamen at once, and get the best sorts you may find. Commercial growers may also sow seeds of cyclamen now. These flowers are growing in popularity.

The blackwod, Acacia melanoxylon, is a fine street tree on rich, level, moist lands, as it naturally grows under just these conditions. But for hard, dry or shallow soils it is totally unfitted.

For a summer shade tree in the back yard there is nothing better than the oriental plane or sycamore, Platanus orientalis; it is not an evergreen.

For a rather small shade tree for garden, street or park, also evergreen, there is none better than the carob or St. John's Bread, Ceratonia siliqua. It really needs no water in summer to remain in health, but will grow faster if given an occasional drink.

Now that the city zoo has moved to Griffith Park, we should also have there a botanical department, museum, herbarium, etc., with a small but select scientific library dealing with the natural sciences only.

On account of the European war, importation of Dutch bulbs will be late this season. But as heavy rains have soaked the soil, get the beds ready for them. It will prove beneficial to turn up the soil and allow it to remain in the rough to thoroughly aerate.

The elimination of weeds and the removal of all unsightly matter from vacant lots is nowhere officially enforced as it should be. In spite of official control of this work in Los Angeles and elsewhere, local civic organizations find it necessary to take up the matter.

All the more common palms will grow in strongly alkaline soils, so that even in districts where patches of white spots show, and no plants are produced by nature, palms may safely be planted.

A shrub known as the Chinese chestnut, Xanthoceras sorbifolia, is becoming quite popular in local gardens, for when in bloom it is one of the showiest shrubs we grow. It does not thrive in the valleys as it does coastward.

The only true test of our efforts in planting or gardening is the picture. Do we frighten the artist away or do we bring him to see a garden that is worth painting? That is the only true test.

Make the entrance to your grounds inviting, but do not overdo this matter so that visitors will be disappointed after entering. Be consistent, but do not garden for show alone.

For several years schizanthus has been a favorite winter-flowering plant and in increasing demand. Sown now, they will yield a fine flower crop for late winter and spring.

Ornament the home grounds. In California, where plants respond to the most ordinary treatment with most satisfying results, and where all such material is cheap, no possible excuse is accepted by the public for the existence of unplanted premises.

The Encyclopedia Britannica is authority for the statement that some species of palms bear female flowers one year and male flowers the next, and vice versa, and so on to the end. This will be news to most students of the palm family, but if E. B. so states we will have to accept it.

Snapdragons are one of the old type garden flowers that have undergone great improvement during the past few years, especially in size and color of flowers. One may now have a fine clear yellow. Put out young plants now.

Azalea plants are now scarce because of no arrivals from Belgium thus far, and there is no assurance any will come. If you saved your last year's plant or plants, carry them to a good plant nursery for repotting, and grow for Easter flowers. Do not pinch or cut off shoots now, or you will cut off dormant flowers.

Killing frosts have already occurred in the Mississippi Valley and at the southerly end, too, also in locations around the National Capital. Time to come to California if you wish to see outdoor flowers from now on.

At many points in the Southern States drug plants have been given a trial since the European war stopped importation. A belladonna farm at Martinsburg (W. Va.) is very successful. There are many such crops adapted to California, and the present very high prices should stimulate experiment.

The cool summer, brought to a close by a heavy rain early in this month, will give us a fine, full crop of chrysanthemums and fall roses, also violets.

From present indications it appears that Texas is to have a State botanical garden, but California, with greater need, greater natural and acquired resources, and greater wealth, scarcely gives the subject a passing thought.

Keep watch of the latest in water lilies. New sorts are constantly being brought out by plant breeders, even in California, and some chance hybrids of merit are annually produced.

The Mexican tulip poppy, Hunnemannia, will keep longer as a cut flower than any other member of the great poppy family. It is a fine garden plant for California, and seeds should be sown now.

Now is the time to prepare the soil for a winter garden of California native wild flowers. The rains will start weed seeds. When these are up, spade over the ground to destroy them, allow to dry for a few days, rake smooth and water. All remaining weed seeds will now grow. Hoe over and destroy these, rake in your flower seeds and you will have a bounteous crop of native beauties.

Plant more palms, and in greater variety. But two sections of this great country may grow these wonderful plants, and these districts are as far apart as it is possible to get on the same continent in the same line of latitude. The palm-growing parts of southern Florida are restricted. We may grow them everywhere. Let us have them.

PHYSIQUE, STAMINA AND FECUNDITY.

Lessons from Australia. By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

[illegible] Australian Hens.

The October number of the Journal of Heredity, A. A. Dunnicliff, Jr. of New South Wales, has a timely paper on "Fecundity and Stamina in Breeding Fowls," taking the ground that high egg-yields do not necessarily result in any deterioration of breeding stock—a statement that is not only to be taken with a grain of salt, but which needs qualifying. It is quite within the experience of breeders that fecundity up to certain limits may be measurably maintained in progeny provided normal and vigorous males and females are intelligently mated. In so far as the test has been applied it covers about four and five generations; what continuous breeding from prolific layers may tell is of course problematical. But in so far as the experiments have been tried in Australia the results are quite remarkable. In verification, take the pen of White Leghorns which won the second two-years' test at Hawksbury College, with [illegible] eggs in the first year and 1150 eggs in the second year, and that which won the [illegible] two-years' test with 1324 eggs in the first year, and 1045 in the second year. These have proved entirely satisfactory as breeders, both as regards fertility and the constitutional vigor of the progeny. Mated to males of a strain with many years' continuous competition performances, the tendency to weakness which has been pointed out as a concomitant of high fecundity could be looked for in both lines of blood did it exist. On the contrary, even in the fourth and fifth generations the resultant stock shows a high average robustness that leaves nothing to be desired.

Another example may be cited in the White Leghorn hens which won the 1912-'13 competition with 1461 eggs, and the following two-years' test with 1091 eggs in their second year without replacement of a bird. These hens subsequently in the breeding pen reproduced in the constitutional vigor of their progeny the inherent vitality which marked their great laying in the competition. These hens, with other birds of precisely the same blood, achieved a world's record in the 1914-15 single-pen test. The four best hens in that group, with certified official records of 267, 270, 270 and 288 eggs, when used for breeding last season, gave every evidence that constitutionally they had not suffered under the strain of great production, which represented five times their own weight in eggs. The owner and breeder of these exceptionally fine hens emphatically states, "I notice absolutely no deterioration in stamina or constitutional vigor." Mr. Dunnicliff is diametrically opposed to the theory that high fecundity is inimical to stamina and vigor in progeny; quite to the contrary, he argues that prolificness is an evidence of it. This is at variance with the experiences of [illegible] as to be almost startling. It has been the experience of some California breeders that the 180 and 190 egg hen was about the limit for breeding purposes if stamina was to be maintained from generation to generation. In more than one instance the same conviction is quite prevalent in advanced poultry circles in England. Are these authorities all wrong? Or have they "missed" in the selection of individual specimen and mating in the breeding pen? "It is not enough," says this Australian authority, "that the breeding hen should be a good layer or the descendant of a line of high layers; physique is essential. It goes without saying that in economic [illegible] the Australian poultry breeders lead the world; no other country has done so much to improve our races of domesticated poultry. Her students and experimenters have taught the importance of the correlation of type, physique and fecundity, three fundamentals that no breeder can afford to ignore. To what extent each can be carried without reaction is still within the realm of speculation. Prolificness is not, however, the "whole thing" even in far away Australia. But where is the dividing line or lines?

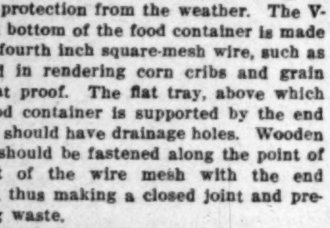
An Economical Dry Mash Hopper.

Poultrymen who practice the dry mash system of feeding will be interested in the following simple plan and description for the construction of a hopper for the purpose which is recommended by the Department of Agriculture, not only for its efficiency, but also for its economy in the conservation of food:

It is constructed of inch boards twelve inches wide. The top may be hinged for convenience in filling, or the entire top may be made removable, affording in this case better protection from the weather. The V-shaped bottom of the food container is made of one-fourth inch square-mesh wire, such as is used in rendering corn cribs and grain bins rat proof. The flat tray, above which the food container is supported by the end boards, should have drainage holes. Wooden cleats should be fastened along the point of contact of the wire mesh with the end boards, thus making a closed joint and preventing waste.



BUILDING DETAIL OF DRY MASH HOPPER.

A substantial advantage in this form of food hopper will be found in that it gives no opportunities for the wedging in and smothering of young chickens, when crowding around the feeder.

The Premium List as a Guide.

As poultry shows go, the premium lists are much alike and devoid of practical information otherwise than the list of poultry classes and the attendant association honors and special awards. It has often been brought to the attention of the writer that a well prepared premium list should be something more than a mere show affair; it should give in brief paragraph form practical suggestions bearing on the selection and preparation of birds for exhibition. In the early days this was a custom observed by the Los Angeles show, which of late has been somewhat neglected. The value of such advisory matter will be recognized in the following meaty paragraphs gleaned from the premium list just to hand from the California State Breeders' Association Show, to be given at Modesto, December 6-9:

Watch out for down or feathers on shanks or feet of all clean-legged varieties, and particularly between the toes. See that your Langshans are well feathered on their outer toes beyond the first joint.

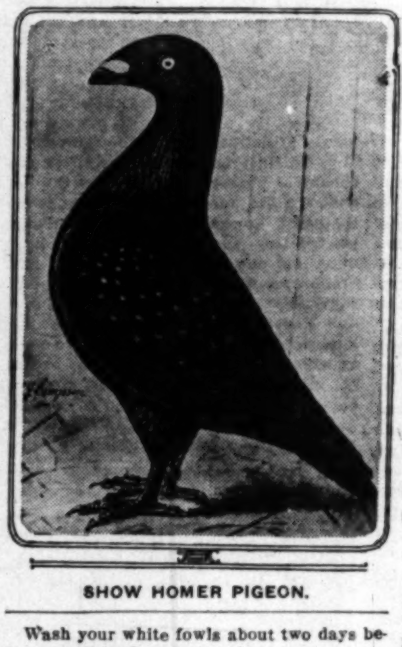
Do not show birds of single-comb varieties with side-sprigs on their combs.

See that the rose-comb varieties have well defined "spike" at end of combs.

Do not exhibit black birds with white or gray in plumage. White will disqualify "black" birds and black will disqualify "white" birds.

Weigh the bantams and see that they are not overweight. Bantams are prized for their "smallness."

Do not send a sick fowl to the show. See that the birds are healthy.



SHOW HOMER PIGEON.

Wash your white fowls about two days before you ship them to the show.

Clean up the legs of your fowls before shipping them. Use sweet oil and sulphur on the yellow-legged varieties and sweet oil without the sulphur on the black or white-legged varieties.

Soap and warm water will clean legs so that they will not be cut in the show room, if you take them in time. After washing apply oil and sulphur.

All birds are usually weighed before judging; be sure and have yours up to standard weight.

Have leg bands on all of your birds. You save the show authorities much worry if you will carefully band every specimen.

Read your American Standard of Perfection carefully (1) for disqualifications and (2) for faults subject to discounts or "cuts." No bird can win that is subject to any of the former, while the specimen that is nearest exempt from the latter usually wins first place.

American Capital Brings Chinese Eggs.

If we are to believe the American Consul at Shanghai (Gen. Thomas Sammous) American money is responsible for Chinese egg products in this country. In his report to the State Department at Washington he says that the American egg-preserving plant (owned and operated by the Amos Bird Company of Boston,) at Shanghai, is now handling 300,000 eggs daily. The product is either frozen or dried, and shipped to the United States, at present via the Pacific Coast. The frozen product is divided into three classes—whole eggs, egg yolks and whites of eggs. The dried product consists of whole eggs and egg yolks. In both instances the eggs are churned or "scrambled." The albumen is largely used in the manufacture of candles in the United States, while there is a demand for the frozen product at bakeries and hotels. American machinery is used in this plant with results which are entirely satisfactory. The eggs are purchased in the Shanghai market, and the price paid averages more than half a cent apiece. Two hundred Chinese are employed, and half of these are girls. Chinese girls break and examine the eggs, handling an average of 3000 a day.

At present ample refrigerator space is obtained on Japanese steamers, the product being handled in the United States in refrigerator cars. In due course it is expected that the product of this American egg plant will be largely shipped via the Panama Canal to the Atlantic seaboard. In the light of these facts is it any wonder that there is a strong sentiment for a protective tariff among the producing classes on this Coast?

The Beautiful Show Homer.

Among breeds of pigeons the Homer occupies a prominent place, particularly in the showroom and the fancy. The result of careful selection and scientific breeding, it has become popular wherever pigeon culture has gained a foothold. Handsome in form, an upright carriage with a bold and fearless expression, it makes a strong appeal to all lovers of bird life. The points essential to represent a perfect exhibition specimen are: Compactly and proportionately built, short in feather, with neatly folded tail, beak stout and set correctly, not to interfere with perfect curve of profile, wattle white and smooth, with a dividing center, eyes white, with neat damson colored cere, like a silk cord encircling the eye. The outline of the head should form an unbroken curve from tip of beak to back of the skull, showing no indentation. A bird with a pinched appearance behind the wattle, hollow top skull, or sharply finished at back of head, is of no use as a show specimen.

October Poultry Dont's.

Don't neglect to fix up all the leaky spots in the houses; the early rains are again with us and dampness is the foe of fowl life and vigor.

Don't keep over the surplus males longer than you can possibly help; segregate the good breeding specimens from those for market and fatten the latter as quickly as possible; then convert them into money.

Don't nail down your perches; fit them into slots. In this way they can be easily removed for cleaning, and also for free movement when disinfecting the chicken house and fighting lice.

Don't neglect the pullets; get them into their winter quarters so that they will become familiar with their environment and commence the winter campaign for producing hen fruit.

Don't make the mistake of locating your houses on low, heavy, wet land; on loose sandy, porous soils the chance of disease is much reduced.

Don't be discouraged on account of the high price of feed; aim to have only good layers, a good article, and so secure more and better product and increased prices. Cheap feed does not always mean big profits.

Don't imagine the poultry business free of care and trouble; if it were, the business would be no good, because every Tom, Dick and Harry would be in it. The fellow who overcomes difficulties is usually the fellow who makes poultry pay.

Don't neglect to attend the poultry shows; they are to the industry what fairs are to general agriculture, viz., exhibits of those things which stand for success. The fellow with a receptive mind can learn much of value at these functions.

Don't allow animal food (beef scrap, etc.,) to lie around exposed to the air; it tends to vitiate its purity. A good plan is to tie it securely in paper sacks until wanted.

THE HUMAN BODY: ITS CARE, USE AND ABUS

Aids to Good Health. By a Medical Man.

Nerve Exhaustion From Shock.

IT HAS been demonstrated, and confirmed by repeated experiments, that an actual physical and chemical change takes place in the cells of the nervous system as a result of shock in various forms. Thus sudden or prolonged fear, muscular exertion, intense mental effort, loud sounds, and a host of other things produce this condition, and in the broader sense constitute "shocks." And as a result of any form of shock certain cells in the nervous system are partly or wholly incapacitated—rendered useless temporarily or even permanently because they are depleted of their activating substance.

No nervous system is so stable that it is entirely immune to the effects of shock; yet there is the widest possible difference in human nervous systems in this respect. The "nervous" type of individuals, particularly those who inherit nervous tendencies, are peculiarly susceptible; and in these persons the effects are prone to become permanent. About 80 per cent. of the soldiers in Europe who are permanently affected by the shocks of bursting shells are said to have "neurotic family histories."

Since the introduction of gunpowder 500 years ago, all soldiers have been subject to the shocking effects of terrific explosions; but hitherto there have been comparatively few instances in which the nervous system has been permanently affected by this kind of shock. But the nervous systems of modern men have become increasingly sensitive and unstable. And this fact, rather than the increased force of the detonations of modern explosions, undoubtedly accounts for the number of soldiers permanently incapacitated by shock in the present war.

Exhausting Effects of Explosions.

A surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, who has investigated this subject in the European war zones, recently described the peculiar effects that are produced by this type of nerve exhaustion. "The devastating effects of the constant bursting of huge shells over the men in the trenches, even when no actual injury is caused by the flying projectiles, is one of the most unexpected effects of modern warfare," he says. "Although not actually hit, some of those so exposed suffer for a varying length of time from loss of memory, from eye trouble, ranging from blindness to dimness of vision; loss of sense of taste and smell, impaired hearing and physical upsets. Some never recover but go on into a marked state of mental decline.

"Various terms have been applied to this condition, such as 'battle shock,' 'nerve shock,' 'mental shock,' and 'wounds of consciousness.' Scores of men, both in the ranks and among the officers, while apparently fit to the outward eye, nevertheless suffer in a marked degree from this condition, which perhaps can best be described as 'nerve fatigue,' as a result of the wear and tear of a war of high explosives. The effects of severe shell fire are very complicated; but it may be said simply that they tend to show themselves in a dazed state which may, on the one hand, be developed with complete unconsciousness or, on the other, lightened till a condition comparable to neurasthenia is observed."

It should be stated that this condition is in no sense indicative of a lack of courage. The victims are often the bravest of soldiers. It is the result of an unstable nervous structure, usually inherited—a physical peculiarity over which the individual has no control.

A Poisonous Garden Flower.

It is not generally known that poisoning may result from handling the garden daffodil (Narcissus pseudonarcissus.) This plant contains a poison which sometimes causes a painful eruption of the skin when brought in contact with abraded surfaces.

The poisonous substance is contained in the bulb as well as the stems and flowers of the plant, and there are several cases of poisoning on record due to mistaking these bulbs for onions. An instance of this is cited in the Journal of the American Medical Association. "An ignorant cook prepared a soup from the bulbs in place of onions, with the result that those who partook of it suffered from nausea and violent vomiting and diarrhea. It was not until after the poisoning had been repeated several times that the error was discovered.

"Daffodil bulbs contain an alkaloid (or alkaloids) whose physiological action differs according to the stage of growth of the plant. If extracted from the flowering bulb the alkaloid produces dryness of the mouth, checks skin secretions, dilates the pupil, quickens the pulse, and slows and weakens the heart contractions. The alkaloid extracted from the bulbs after flowering produces copious salivation, increases skin secretion, contracts the pupil, and produces slight relaxation of the pulse, slight faintness and nausea. Such widely divergent physiologic effects indicate that there must be considerable difference in the nature of the alkaloids at the different times mentioned. Since the daffodil is so common in gardens it might be well to consider it in poisonings of mysterious origin."

Hunger Swelling.

Chronic hunger, or lack of the proper kind of food, is known to produce all manner of diseased conditions, but the disease now afflicting the under-fed inhabitants of Poland is a novelty. The malady is the result of war conditions, and the name "hunger swelling" has been applied to it. The most characteristic symptoms of this disease are edema, or dropsical condition, "debility" and muscular weakness, intestinal disorders, mental depression, and dimness of vision.

"The edema resembles that met with in kidney disease, although, as a rule, it begins in the lower extremities. It may be confined to the lower limbs, but more often spreads over the whole body, involving the face, especially the eyelids, in which it may be so great as to interfere with vision. It sometimes leads to bursting of the skin, and so stretches the skin that pink scars result from it. The swollen extremities usually feel cold to the patient and are cold to the touch. After one or two weeks in the hospital the edema often disappears, but it may persist for months, and even recur again after it has subsided. It usually disappears from above downward, the last place to be free being the feet."

It appears that this disease, although caused by lack of food, is not readily cured by supplying the lacking nourishment, indicating that an organic change has been produced in the system quite unlike ordinary cases of starvation.

Sun Bathing.

California, particularly the mountainous regions of Southern California, offers ideal conditions for sun-bathing; and sun-bathing is an important aid to health. To be most effective sun baths should be taken with great regularity, and this cannot be done satisfactorily in any country where daily sunlight is not assured.

The effect of the sun's rays upon the body is explained by Dr. Charles F. Gardiner of Colorado Springs as follows: "The rays of the sun falling on the skin of one of the white race produce first a congestion, followed by an irritation or burn if continued long enough. This first congestion, if not carried to the point of irritation or destruction of outer layer of skin, is of benefit to the body in several ways. The cutaneous vessels are dilated, internal congestion is relieved, the general circulation of the blood and lymph is stimulated, the heart's action assisted and the kidneys and skin are encouraged to act more rapidly. In this way the metabolism of the body becomes more active, as both the absorbtive and eliminative powers of the cell are increased.

"As the heat rays falling on the skin produce an increased flow of blood to the part exposed, antibodies that combat disease are formed in excess of the normal, hemoglobin is increased and the blood count shows an increase in the number of red cells. These effects can often be observed by the use of different baths or massage, which tend also to cause a superficial congestion; but in using the solar energy on the skin there is another force which, perhaps, is more potent and far-reaching in its effects on man than all the other rays together, and these are the actinic, or ultraviolet rays, called also the dark or chemical rays. Although these rays from the sun cannot be seen, they exist in the sunshine and have a powerful effect on cellular life."

Device for Locating Splinters.

Locating thorns, splinters, or small fragments of metal such as needle points which are embedded in the fingers is often a difficult matter. It can be done with an X-ray machine, of course, but most people do not have access to such elaborate devices. Moreover, there is another way, according to Dr. Roscoe C. Webb, by using a simple device which he describes as follows:

"Location in a busy clothing manufacturing district gave rise to the necessity for a simple method of determining the presence and location of foreign bodies, such as needles and splinters, in the fingers. A piece of black woolen cloth eight inches square was fastened to a piece of adhesive plaster of equal size, and in the center an oval opening was made measuring five-eights by one-half inch. By placing this over an electric light supplied with a reflector and placing the finger over the hole, excellent transillumination is obtained, and by making pressure with a pointed instrument over the suspected area, the object can be brought out more clearly. Daily use for the past six months by several workers in the accident room has proved its efficiency."

[London Opinion:] Doctor: Remember, nurse, you must keep the patients cheerful, and not let them get downhearted.

Nurse: But what can I do, doctor? Six of them have proposed to me already this morning.

[Detroit Free Press:] "Do you believe circumstances alter cases?"

"I certainly do," said the lawyer.

"Then you've got to dig up a few circumstances that I can use or my case is lost."

[Yonkers Statesman:] Redd: How do you suppose all these stories got started about Villa having died?

Greene: Oh, perhaps he has a grandson who likes to get off to go to baseball games.

How to Cook Cabbage.

There are very few people who know the proper way to cook cabbage so as to destroy the rank odor which makes one wish to move out of the neighborhood while the vegetable boils away merrily. Cut the cabbage in halves or quarters, as preferred, and with a sharp knife remove the little curl or center in the cabbage. All of the strength seems to be in the bud and if removed before cooking it will do away with most of the unpleasant odor.

LITTLE HOME CONTRIVANCES.

Fills Lamps Without Spilling.

[Ladies' World:] As we live on a farm, we have no lighting system as yet, and it has always been my duty to attend to the oil lamps. All who have had that duty to perform know what a bother it is to fill nickel or brass lamps without having them run over. This is the way I have learned to do it, and there is no possible way for it to run over; I weighed the lamp when full and with the funnel in it, and then marked the weight on the scales. Now, every time I fill it I place it on the scales and pour the oil in until the hand reaches that mark.

The Bellows Duster.

I have found a little bellows about ten or twelve inches long a great convenience in doing my housework. Under and behind the bathtub, all around and between the steam coils, behind heavy pieces of furniture, inside the kitchen range, in fact there is no room in the house where the little bellows will not get the dust and lint out of the places that cannot be reached with a vacuum cleaner or broom. I have seen many women blow out corners, etc., which is a very unhygienic practice. The little bellows removes the necessity for doing it.

FIGHT AGAINST INSECTS.

Cleanliness and Sanitation.

[Woman's Home Companion:] In many homes the roach, water or "Croton" bug is indeed a pest. Two steps are necessary to check this insect—one, the absolute removal of all food from the floor or around the sink; and the other is, absence of water or sloppy conditions. Usually faulty plumbing or unsanitary sinks are largely to blame. But untidiness and careless handling of food supplies is also a cause. The remedy is a scrupulous kitchen, sink, and table; also a glass roach trap, baited each night, left on the sink, and the roaches killed by immersion in boiling water.

Mosquito and Fly Killing Device.

For some time we have used for killing mosquitoes and flies a device similar to the one described by Mrs. J. H. K. in the May issue of the Companion. Our device is similar, but effective: Take the sawed-off handle of an old broom and fasten to it, with a large tack, the inverted lid of a tin baking powder can. Pour into the lid about one tablespoonful of kerosene oil—no water is necessary—and raise it to the ceiling, covering the mosquito or fly. The fumes of the oil will cause it to fall into the lid, and the quantity of the kerosene is sufficient to kill it: The best time to catch the mosquitoes is in the early morning while they are settled upon the ceiling; but the flies are more easily caught in the evening.

CARE OF YOUR HAT.

When Packing.

[Chicago Record Herald:] Hat packing is a problem unless one owns a well made hat box built to withstand the wear and tear incident to traveling.

In packing a hat in the regular trunk or ordinary box care should be taken that the brim edges are not curled up and that the crown is filled with soft paper to form a substantial resistance against hard knocks and continued pressure to which one's luggage is subject during the vacation season.

It is easier to pack fine straws and soft felts than those of satin or coarse straws. Of course if the crowns or brims are cracked nothing can be done to restore them to their pristine beauty. If, however, there are mere dents in the hat these will sometimes respond to the application of a damp cloth and a hot iron.

Dark Paper Bags or Boxes.

After all the best way—after getting a real hat box—is to provide oneself with large black paper bags into which the extra chapeaux may be put and carried along by the traveler herself. In Europe one does not object to the carrying of the immense hat boxes, particularly if they bear the insignia of some famous milliner; but in this country there seems something too conspicuous and almost ostentatious in thus burdening oneself with great boxes which serve as much to advertise the maker as the owner.

TREATMENT OF THE HAIR.

After Summer Vacation.

[Lewis B. Allen in Ladies' World:] When vacations are over and the summer girl goes back to town she may wonder why her hair is straggly, brittle and difficult to manage. Sun and wind, dust and salt water have all contributed to this condition, and it will be necessary to give the hair careful treatment to bring it back to normal condition.

To begin with, a thorough cleansing is the first thing after a railroad or motor trip. For this, it is well to begin the night before the shampoo, if possible, and rub either olive oil or a petroleum derivative jelly throughly into the scalp. This will soften the scalp and any dust or dandruff lodged on it. Any favorite soap or shampoo preparation which does not contain free alkali may be chosen for the shampoo, but whatever is used should be throughly rinsed out before drying the hair. If possible, the drying process should be done in the sun, rubbing the scalp gently upward, with a rotary motion, and brushing the hair with a clean, rather stiff brush.

If Split at the Ends.

If the hair is split at the ends, it will be well to clip it or have it clipped. For the next month it may be well to repeat that rubbing of oil into the scalp and shampooing each week, although under ordinary circumstances it is not wise to wash the hair oftener that once in three or four weeks.

HEARTSEASE.

Pleasure in Well-doing.

Pleasure has a way of coming indirectly—where least you look for her and when least you expect her. She lurks in the happiness of work well done. She lingers in the consciousness of honest book-keeping with life, and she always is to be found in the joy of growth and progress. In all these ways honest pleasure is to be found.

This isn't meant to be a dull preachment against anything but work. But it does mean to say that happiness lies in doing and the consciousness of well-doing.

Whatso We Share.

The Holy Supper is kept indeed
In whatso we share with another's need:
Not what we give, but what we share—
For the gift without the giver is bare;
Who gives himself with his alms feeds three,
Himself, his hungering neighbor, and Me.
—[Lowell.

HEARTSEASE.

Love Begets Love.

[Delineator:] "What are you going to do when you have a daughter-in-law?" a fond mother of an adored and only son was asked.

"Love her," she replied promptly.

"But suppose she dislikes you and won't let you love her? What will you do then?"

"Just keep right on patiently and silently loving her until I win."

Love's Fare.

You cannot live on kisses,
  The sages wisely say,
And lovers who are young and poor
  Should learn that, right away;
For kisses are too light a food
  To keep the hungry fed.
You cannot live on kisses,
  And so you shouldn't wed!

You cannot live on kisses;
  But, sweetheart, don't you care!
They lend ambrosial flavor to
  The very humblest fare;
They make a fairy place of
  The simplest little cot;
You cannot live on kisses,
  But they brighten things a lot.

You cannot live on kisses!
  Well, maybe that is true;
But work and love and tenderness
  Will see us safely through.
And we shall get new courage from Each kiss we take and give.
You cannot live on kisses,
  But they make it sweet to live!

to be spent in keeping the waterways clear of weeds and trash.

Just what an Angora goat is worth is something difficult of determination, an estimate based upon many features of breeding, fleece quality and age. Fair grade animals sell for as little as $4 a head, with better selections a couple of dollars more. One authority gives $50 as the average value of registered bucks and $25 of registered does. Good grade bucks should sell for $20.

An excellent feature of the Angora industry is the co-operation of the breeders in the interchange of choice animals sent from State to State, taking with them the best features of each locality. An instance of this was a late shipment of a large band of choice, selected young does from the J. T. Cooper flocks, near Prescott, Ariz., to be placed upon wooded feeding grounds on the foothills of the south side of the San Fernando Valley in California, within sight of the famous State Highway.

[The information contained in this article has been gathered from many reliable sources, though it has been impossible to make use of more than a small quantity of the facts supplied, and only a tithe of the superb illustrations which have been sent to the editor. The article is written upon the merits purely, and not in the personal interest of any individual grower or body of Angora-goat growers.]

GOAT'S MILK AND MEAT.

F. T. Heintz, editor of The Goat World, has, upon request, supplied the Illustrated Weekly with the following pertinent and timely information about milch goats, now coming into favor:

In recent years we have learned a very valuable lesson; we find that goat's flesh is a food of very fine quality and of excellent flavor, and, most important of all, through experiments conducted by the United States government we find that the goat is practically immune (if not entirely so) from that most terrible disease known as tuberculosis.

But the meat question is of small moment when compared to the real good that the goat is doing: I speak of the milk problem. There are many fine, healthy, strong children going to school, also some of our popular California business men, that would not be with us today were it not for goat's milk. Why? Because goat's milk is nearer to the human mother's milk than any other milk we have, and in some cases is even superior to mother's milk, inasmuch as goats are free from tuberculosis, and all human mothers are not. As far as cow's milk is concerned, it would be an insult to the real milch goat to have cow's milk compared with the milk of the goat. Read the new dairy laws that point out clearly what a filthy animal the cow must be to require such stringent laws! Think what you have been feeding your baby, and it will make you shudder.

In and around Los Angeles there are in the neighborhood of 3000 goats kept for milk purposes. Of course all these goats are not real milch goats, some of them not giving more than one quart per day, but quite a number of them are high-class milch animals, giving as much as six quarts a day, though a goat giving three quarts a day when fresh and milking for nine or ten months, with an average of two quarts a day, is considered an excellent animal.

The three best breeds in this country are the Saanan, Toggenburg and the Anglo-Nubian. The most popular is probably the Toggenburg on account of its fine milking qualities and its great beauty, being a very decided chocolate color, with white stripes down each side of its face, and having legs that are white up to the knees. The Toggenburgs as a whole are the heaviest milkers. The Saanans probably come next. They are a pure white goat, and are a little larger than the Toggenburg. They are splendid milkers, and as individuals have the largest milk record. The Anglo-Nubian is also a goat with an enviable milk record, and it is claimed that these give the richest milk of all. They have no regulation color, being black, brown, white or spotted.

The Toggenburg comes from the Toggenburg Valley in Switzerland, and the Saanan from the Saanan Valley, also in Switzerland, and I am told there is great rivalry between the dairymaids of the two different valleys as to which raise the best milch goats.

MILCH GOAT.

The Anglo-Nubian is a goat that had its origin in England; it is a cross between the native English goat and the pure Nubian imported to England from Nubia; also the Indian Nubian, imported to England from India. There are no pure Nubians in this country, as the animals originally imported would not stand this climate, and died; but the Anglo-Nubian thrives here, and is a splendid type of milch goat, regardless of its cross-breeding.

A goat can be kept for 10 cents per day where all feed has to be bought; allowing $20 per ton for hay and $30 a ton for grain. There is a splendid and growing demand for goat's milk at 25 cents per quart; it is being recommended by the doctors for tubercular patients, other invalids and children, and by the housewife as the finest milk ever used in the kitchen or dining-room.

Since the European war there has been a steady and growing demand for different kinds of cheese made from goat's milk, commanding a price of 50 cents to $1 per pound.

How any man or woman (who uses milk) owning or renting a house having a small back yard, and wanting to help cut down expenses, can overlook the goat is beyond me, when you stop to think that by owning two goats you can have from three to four quarts per day of the finest milk, the year round, at a cost of 10 cents per day. A good grade goat can be bought for $40 to $100. A pure-bred doe will bring from $100 to $300.

Invasion of Mexico.

zona, at Tucson, and presented with a handsome sword.

As I said, there are several lessons to be learned from this campaign of thirty years ago. Prominent among these lessons are two. First, the value of Indian scouts. It is doubtful whether Geronimo would ever have been forced to surrender had it not been for the work of the Apache scouts from the San Carlos Reservation; second, the absolute necessity of stamina and endurance on the part of men and horses. Well-fed and pampered American cavalry horses are of little use in the mountains of northern Mexico. They will break their hearts, if they do not break their legs. As to the men, preliminary training is absolutely necessary. When the Seventh California Regiment was mobilizing at Sacramento, I read that nine men went to the hospital after having to go without a hot breakfast. Perhaps, however, this was partly due to the injection of an assorted variety of serums.

The experience of Gen. Leonard Wood should prove invaluable at this time.

Influence of First Year Voters.

[Philadelphia Public Ledger:] "Uncle Joe" Cannon told the Five O'clock Clubbers the other evening that it took the United States Census Bureau two months to answer a question he asked. This was the question:

How many of the voters who cast their ballots for McKinley and Bryan in 1896 are now living?

The answer: Only forty-nine out of every 100. That means that one-half the voters pass out every twenty years. This fact is well to keep in mind because remarks like this are often heard: Remember that 6,000,000 men voted for Bryan and free silver.

But ex-Speaker Cannon's quest for facts shows that only three of the six million are here to vote at the next Presidential election. Indeed, the youths who will cast their first Presidential ballot in November will greatly outnumber the combined old-soldier vote, hyphen vote and negro vote.

Yessiree, the first-year voter decides virtually every election.

An Ambiguous Offer.

[Chicago News:] An Irish vicar, having advertised for an organist, received the following:

"Dear Sir: I noticed you have a vacancy for an organist and music teacher, either lady or gentleman. Having been both for several years, I beg to offer my services."

Hubsands to Mend.

"Phyllis, dear, I hate to think of leaving you alone tonight, but I promised to conduct the meeting of 'The Married Men's Club' in the absence of the president. I scarcely see how I can refuse—"

Phyllis pushed back her plate of untasted food and when the blue eyes lifted to his a great tear splashed from the long dark lashes. "Oh, don't leave me home alone, Bobbie. If you must go take me with you and hide me in some corner. Please, Bobbie."

When Phyllis said, "Please," and pouted up her tiny rosebud mouth, Mr. Robert was not the man to resist her. He ran around the table to kiss away the tear and the pout, declaring she should go some way or other. They arrived early at the clubhouse and succeeded in finding a corner for Phyllis well screened from view. A pleasant thrill of anticipation came over her and she suddenly felt like a little girl enjoying a forbidden pleasure.

When the members began to arrive the representative of the "Happy Wives" sat unseen and unknown with wide eyes and open ears. How clean and manly they looked as they extended welcoming hands to one another! How true their greetings rang, with none of the affectation of the high hand-clasp, the rustle of fine feathers that characterized the meeting of women! No startling costumes, no latest thing out, distracted the attention. They immediately fell to talking business, politics, or club, things of vital interest in their lives. The eavesdropper really felt sorry for Old Man Weather—he was not once mentioned! Then Phyllis remembered the disclosures of the afternoon and chided herself for admiring the creatures who appeared so well as men and failed so miserably as husbands.

In quick business-like manner the acting president disposed of the business before the house and faced his audience with a little smile:

"Friend Husbands,"—his glance encircled the room and rested a fleeting moment on the corner where Phyllis sat watching—"it is our custom to discuss a selected topic at every meeting. A certain editor has requested me to put this subject before the members:

"'Is marriage a success?'

"Now, ahem! As the ladies (bless their hearts!) are not present we may feel free to give our unbiased opinions and feel sure that no record of our utterances will be carried home to roost. In the article to be prepared for the editor no names will be mentioned and the reporter present is unacquainted with any member. Now let us have a free and profitable discussion."

The one feminine heart in the room beat fast in desperate dread of the secrets about to be disclosed. She had no desire to view the family skeletons a second time that day. Why had Bobbie let her come? When a gray-haired man stood in his place and addressed the chair she studied his ruddy countenance and keen eyes anxiously. His voice was pleasantly deep:

"Gentlemen, I feel that I may speak with authority on this subject, having been in the yoke of matrimony for forty-five years. Now I have just one thing to say about my wife—[here Phyllis's heart thumped painfully]—she has kept my heels and toes in order and for me and to me. She has made our marriage a success. For nearly half a century she has kept my heels and toes in order and now she stands ready to save my soul and show me the way to heaven. I say marriage is the nearest thing to Paradise on this earth!"

Amid the burst of applause that greeted this speech two little white hands flew together in noiseless approval. He had not complained—perhaps this marriage was the exception to the rule of failures.

The next speaker was the youngest member of the club, having been admitted only a few months before.

"I am new at the game of marriage, I'll admit. But I want to say that I never knew what happiness and success meant until I had a little silent partner at home to share the day's doings. I say 'Here's to the wedding belles! May the young men continue to ring them!'"

Phyllis almost forgot herself and joined in the laugh that greeted this youthful enthusiasm. By this time she was enjoying the evening immensely. Others rose and spoke briefly and chivalrously. One told of a crisis safely passed through the help of a loyal wife. Another spoke of the great happiness of children and home presided over by a capable mother. But final

GOOD LITTLE POEMS.

The Mocking Bird.

Perched upon some chimney corner,
Or on treetop swinging free,
Sits a saucy little gray bird,
Just as pert as he can be;
And his song is full of gladness
Which is meant for you and me.
Cheer up! Cheer up! Cheer up!
Sweet! Sweet! Sweet!

Or perhaps in midnight's stillness
Out upon the air will float
A bright burst of fairy music,
Thrilling from his joyous throat.
Or, when morning comes too quickly
We will hear his note.
Get up! Get up! Get up!
Lazy! Lazy! Lazy!

Sometimes tasks seem much too heavy
For our shoulders still to bear;
And we say with bitter passion
Life to us has not been fair.
Then our messenger from heaven
Sends his song out on the air.
Give up? Give up? Give up?
Never! Never! Never!

Happy bird of sun and moonlight
Sent to us from God above,
With a message straight from heaven,
Telling us of His great love;
Teach us by thy wondrous singing
Never from God's path to rove.
Look up! Look up! Look up!
Love! Love! Love!

ROSAMOND NORMAN.

"Now I Lay Me."

"Now I lay me"—low and sweet,
Said the prayer, with lisping tongue;
Tired little baby feet
Cease from toddling—day is done.

Day is done; yes, night is here;
Darkness follows hours of play;
Gowned for bed, each little dear
Learns at mother's knee to pray.

"Now I lay me"—soft the hymn,
Falling sweet from baby lips;
Eyelids drooping, light grows dim,
Soft cheeks warm the pillow slips.

"Down to sleep;" so soft they lie;
Safely, fear they naught of ill.
Angels guard them, from the sky,
Glad their watches to fulfill.

"Now I lay me down to sleep;"
Each is glad the day is done.
"Pray the Lord my soul to keep;"
Tired of day—this day of fun.

Yes, 'tis a day of play-time now,
Of romping, laughing singing fun.
But evening shadows come not slow;
E'en babes are glad the day is done.

"Pray the Lord my soul to keep;"
Lightly now, they say the prayer,
Heedless of the meaning deep;
Free of sorrow, free of care.

The day is done—the day of fun;
The day of worry, toil and strife,
Comes with the west'ring of the sun,
The welcome eventide of life.

Tired of day, we welcome night;
Glad we hail its quiet and sleep.
Yet, fraught with ill and dark its flight,
We pray Thee, Lord our souls to keep.

shadows grow so dim.
n't it be happy, if he'd got her

After all these years of waitin' while he sang a bit to men,
And stayed here sendin' sunshine all around him day by day—
For the ones that still survive him and the ones that went away!

She'll know his footsteps yonder when she hears 'em on the street,
And won't the flowers be bloomin' when they both look up and meet;
And won't her tears flow softly, and his gentle bosom swell,
As they stand there in the glory of love's everlasting spell!

The way he wrote about her makes us all so sure that he Had a sweetheart, really-truly, in the days that used to be;
And that's why I'm a thinkin' as I sit here—
maybe they Have joined each other yonder, after many a weary day!

I bet there weren't no mornin' in that land of heavenly light
As glorious as the mornin' when she saw him come in sight
An' she knew at last he'd slumbered and on wings of lovin' care
Had been borne by God's good angels to be given to her there!

Oh, if ever sweethearts trembled in an ecstacy of joy
It must have been when Riley and his old sweetheart again
Were united by the angels, and turned back to girl and boy,
Forgot in heaven's goodness all the sorrowing years of men!

For, oh, she must have loved him to have brought from him that song;
And how he must have missed her, for she'd been away so long;
And now tonight he's got her, and they're happy and they're fine
In the memory of the story of an old sweetheart of mine.

The Park.

The lake lies gleaming in the park,
A looking-glass wherein are seen
Fond lovers smiling while they "spark,"
Blue sky, gray clouds and foliage green.
With o'erhung branches filtering,
The sun's bright rays are made to fall
In gentle warmth, while songbirds sing—
God's magic wrought into it all.

A boy rolls down the grassy slope,
Girls hand-in-hand skip merrily.
A weary heart is filled with hope,
Renewing plans of things to be.
Old folks are children once again,
As memory recalls the time
Dear to all hearts—the sweet time when Youth makes the world appear sublime.

CHARLES H. MEIERS.

The Great White Way.

A million lights like a million stars
Flame at the close of day;
A million souls forgetting their cares
Enter the great White Way.

The path is sweet with the breath of flowers
Bought for women to wear,
And glasses clink through the long night hours,
Gold is the scepter there.

The dances delight and the sirens lure,
Life seems a dream again;
But dreams for an hour at most endure,
Magically change and then—

A million lights like a million stars
Pale at the break of day;
A million souls face life with new scars
Won on the great White Way!

VERA HEATHMAN COLE.

[Detroit Free Press:] "Dearie," asked his wife at the ball game, "what is that man running for?"

"He just hit the ball."

"I knew, but is he required to chase it, too?"

HUMOR.

[Panther:] Daughter: Father, our domestic science professor is teaching us how to spend money—

Parent (interrupting:) Why doesn't he teach fish how to swim?

[Puck:] Sage: Don't be petty, young man. Try to think of big things.

Ordinary Guy: That's all right, but I'm not particularly interested in elephants, mountains or skyscrapers.

[Pittsburgh Post:] They were at a distant resort.

"I don't like it here," declared ma. "We don't know anybody."

"Suits me," asserted pa. "We don't owe anybody, either."

[Judge:] "Life is one grand sweet song with us. Isn't it, dear?"

"Yes, wifey."

"One grand sweet song. And this morning I want a few $10 notes."

[Washington Star:] "You don't stay home as much as you used to."

"No," replied Mr. Meekton. "Society has its rights, as well as the individual. It seems rather selfish of me to linger around the fireside and monopolize the conversation of so able and erudite a woman as Henrietta."

[Facts and Fancies:] "Has the furnace gone out, Bridget?"

"It didn't come through here, mum."

[Boston Transcript:] Teacher: What is the capital of Florida?

Bright Boy: The money they get from us northerners.

[Puck:] Jones (in Prohibition town:) Where can I get a drink?

Native: Of what?

Jones: Not prussic acid! I've only got to stay here two hours.

[Kansas City Journal:] "Women seem successful in business."

"They have advantages. A woman can keep a set of books and a card index in her head."

[Judge:] "Why is a job in the financial district in this country considered so desirable?" asked the foreign tourist.

"Because," replied the New Yorker, "the work for the day is over in time to go to the ball game."

[St. Louis Republic:] "I observe," said the friend, "that Mr. Rockefeller says he owes much of his success to golf."

"It was my notion," said the lowbrow, "that most men owe much of their golf to success."

[Lampoon:] Doctor: Col. Fuller de Rhumm is dead.

Physician: Weak kidneys?

Doctor: No; fast liver!

[Puck:] Obnoxious Suitor: Angling, eh? And have you caught a fish yet?

Dolly: Only one—and he looked so much like you that I threw him back!

[Transcript:] Spenditt: I say, old chap, if you would lend me $50 I could make $75.

Smart: How would you make the other twenty-five?

[Life:] Goggles: Going to take a motor trip through New England.

Woggles: Ideal tour?

Goggles: Well—I am going with my wife's relations.

[Yonkers Statesman:] Patience: And did any one cry at the wedding?

Patrice: Did they? Why, there were fifty men outside of the church crying, "Taxi!"

[Kansas City Journal:] "Blacksmiths seem to have a reputation for honesty."

"Deservedly so, but due partly, perhaps, to the nature of the business. Nobody encumbers a blacksmith with trust funds. There is nothing to adulterate in his line. Compared with some of us, a blacksmith has few temptations to resist."

[London Saturday Journal:] Miss Hogarty: Oi see a sign in yer winder sayin' ye presairve skins. Can ye do anything fer mine?

Taxidermist: I'm afraid not, madam. I might if you were a lion or a hippopotamus.

[Washington Star:] "Why do you call Bliggins an expert accountant? He isn't up on figures."

"No, but there isn't any phenomenon in the universe that he doesn't assume to be able to account for."

[Dallas News:] "Is your new motor a good hill climber?"

"Fine," replied Mr. Chuggins. "I only wish it would draw the line at hills. Sometimes it wants to try a tree-box or a telegraph pole."

[Washington Star:] "You don't care much about the menu at the training camp?"

"I don't complain," replied the rookie. "The people who have been inviting our hostilities have to eat chile con carne and tamales."

[Judge:] A messenger rushed into the financier's presence with the breathless exclamation: "Your wife tried to start the fire with gasoline, and—"

"Great Caesar!" ejaculated the startled husband, "and gasoline 40 cents a gallon!"

[Burr:] Soph: Say, it was so dark out last night that you couldn't see your hand three inches from your eyes.

Fresh: Huh! that's nothing. It was so dark night before last that the coal pile in our back yard looked like a snowdrift!

[Richmond Times-Dispatch:] "What makes Jinks so proud of his ancestors? I never heard any of them did anything."

"That's exactly the point. So many persons' ancestors did do things which got them into trouble with the police.

[Today:] Lady Visitor: Well, Mrs. Johnson what do you think of your husband getting the D.C.M.?

"It's the first I've heard of it, ma'am, but I ain't a bit surprised. Suppose it's his nasty temper that's been the cause of it."

[Puck:] Visitor: I observe you have ten daughters.

President of Concern: How do you know?

Visitor: From the mental caliber of the heads of your ten departments.

[Facts and Fancies:] Jones: I suppose, merely as a matter of parental duty, I shall have to take that boy to the circus.

Mrs. Jones: But I don't want him to go this year.

Jones: Then I shall have to go alone.

[Kansas City Star:] "Do you know that the mercury now stands at 107 deg. in the shade?"

"Eh-yah!" he indifferently answered. "But the kind husbandman for whom I toil does not compel me to stay in the shade. Hi-lo! Hi-lee!"

[Sydney Bulletin:] Recruiting Officer: Any previous training?

Billjim: My oath! Y'orter see me killin' pigs.

[Kansas City Journal:] "What's the matter with you?"

"My business has slumped."

"Bah! You look so gloomy I thought it might have been the home team."

[Birmingham Age-Herald:] "Dubwaite has a handsome tiger skin."

"Yes. He bagged it himself."

"Surely not in the jungle?"

"No. At an auction sale."

[Detroit Free Press:] "There's one thing I will say for that fellow whose mistakes cause so much trouble."

"What is it?"

"He doesn't claim that his intentions are good, anyhow."

Helping or Harming the Filipinos?

By Manuel L. Quezon

Philippine Delegate In Congress

THE Filipinos gain in important ways under the terms of the bill just passed by Congress, making provision for more complete self-government. In the first place, the electoral franchise has been extended to all who write and speak a native dialect. Heretofore, the requirements for voting were the ability to speak and write Spanish or English, or the ownership of property. As a result of the change the electorate will be increased from two hundred and fifty thousand to about eight hundred and fifty thousand voters. This is in accord with the doctrine of offering as wide an opportunity as possible for self-education in the art of government.

Secondly there is an end to the Philippine Commission, which has been in charge of the affairs of the islands since their annexation. In its place there is set up the Philippine legislature of two houses, both elected by the native people. General legislative control will be exercised by this body. Henceforth, the electorate will choose twenty-four of the twenty-six members of the upper house, or Senate.

The new legislature will have entire control of the executive departments of the government, with the exception of the Bureau of Public Instruction, which is to be supervised by the Vice-Governor. That official, together with the Governor-General, Auditor, Assistant Auditor and the Justices of the Supreme Court, will be the only officers to be appointed by the President of the United States.

The Governor-General has the same veto power over the native legislature as that enjoyed by the executive in any American form of government. All acts of the Philippine Government are subject to the jurisdiction of the President, Congress and Supreme Court of the United States. This applies particularly to all legislation dealing with the currency, immigration and the tariff. Otherwise the Filipinos will make their own laws.

THE effect of the provisions just cited means, of course, that the gold standard will obtain in the Philippines, and that alien races cannot gain a foothold there. Furthermore, the inhabitants of the islands need give no concern to a foreign enemy, as the United States will protect them from invasion and conquest, if necessary, with its military and naval forces.

Perhaps most significant of all, according to the native point of view, is the pledge in the preamble of this act of Congress, setting forth the intention of the United States to grant the Filipinos independence when a stable government has been established.

From the position of the inhabitants of the islands, the enactment of this measure is a signal victory for the cause of human liberty and justice, and constitutes a long step toward the emancipation of the Filipino people. For this we are grateful to the people of the United States, to the Congress and the Administration. And when the scheme of government provided for is set up, our aim will be to so conduct the affairs of the islands as to show the world that we are capable of fulfilling our obligations to ourselves and others.

The attitude of the Filipino people towards America was never better than at present. It was Mr. Taft who popularized the McKinley doctrine of "the Phil for the Filipinos." But it has remained for President Wilson and Governor-Ge Francis Burton Harrison to bring about fuller co-operation, union and harmony be the governing Americans and the people of the islands.

A NOTABLE achievement of the Harrison administration has been the perfec the insular police organizations. Perfect peace and order obtain throughout archipelago. The army has ceased to perform any function there other than carries out in the states of New York or Nevada.

Today the Moro province,— and Sulu, enjoy civil government the rest of the islands.

Agriculture is the mainstay of the Philippines. Many of the most insular problems are of an agri nature. The Governor-General placed an able and earnest adminis tor, Dr. Adriano Hernandez, at the of the bureau of agriculture, and im tant steps are being taken to the condition of the workers of the land.

A new impetus has been given sugar industry, and business of all is flourishing in the islands. There steadily increasing output of gold, total for 1915 being the greatest recorded under the American flag.

These conditions are in strong with the situation prior to 1897, when Spanish colonial administration trarily made the tariff and fixed prices of products, including imports.

The bureau of health has been ganized, and today under a gifted ican health expert, Dr. John D. aided by leading Filipino medical the inhabitants, young and old, the sanitary officers to make the the healthiest spot in the orient.

PERHAPS the most notable the advancement of the Filipinos be found in the appointment of de Luna, a former member of Assembly, as Governor of the Province. This is inhabited by so-called wild tribes, or Head chief of which are the Igorrotes, are just emerging from savagery, lead nomadic lives. Although district will retain its American Governor, Governor Luna will have authority.

The policy of the American ernment is to gradually retire people from the subordinate positions order to make place for Filipinos, the latter receiving of the regular salary of the vacated, the remaining third paid each year for three years to the tiring Americans.

I am thoroughly convinced that Filipinos will be able to maintain orderly and just Government to the question of maintaining dependence as regards other I will say that we could not. We not fight Japan; we could not fight Germany; we could not fight France; we could not fight the great powers not fight any of the great if we are given an opportunity of paring ourselves for that we can make it a hard enterprise for nation to come and conquer the pines.

"NICKERSON says the cost of keeping a car is merely nominal," continued Waterman.

"But he doesn't have a couple of kiddies to support," Mrs. Waterman reminded him.

She knew when to argue and when not.

"Yes, Sam," she admitted.

"They're almost giving away second-hand cars this spring," he went on. "I'm going through the papers today and see what I can find."

This was farther than he had ever ventured. It marked a dangerous crisis in his disease and Mrs. Waterman knew it. Waterman went to the window and watched the process with envious eyes. When he came back there was an expression of exaltation and determination in his face.

"Goody! Goody! Goody!" exclaimed Eleanor doing a butterfly dance in her nightgown.

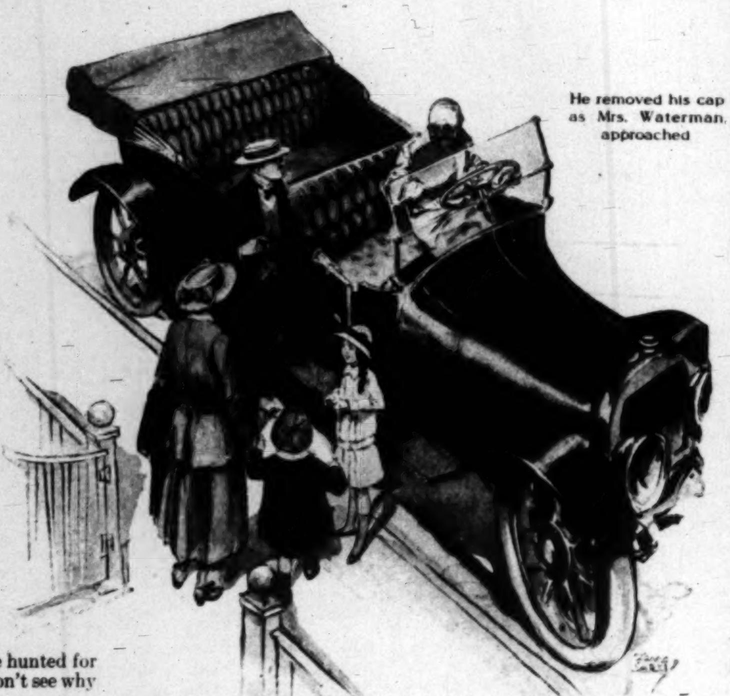
"Yes, Sam," she answered. "But—well, you know

The Sunday morning breakfast was always to Mrs. Waterman, who asked for little here below, one of the enjoyable features of the week. It was the one day when she did not have to hurry in order to get the children ready for school; it was the one day when her husband did not have to hurry to catch the eight-five.



He removed his cap as Mrs. Waterman approached

They seldom seated themselves until nine and then made a long, leisure meal of it. After that, she rather looked forward to the preparation for church, because once a week she liked to dress the children in their best, liked to see her husband dressed in his best—she thought him quite the most distinguished looking man in the neighborhood, in his English cutaway and gray trousers and top hat—and, truth to tell, liked to dress herself immaculately from head to toe. It made her feel five years younger. Then the drowsy sermon and the music were restful, and following that, the nods and handshakings equally exhilarating. She even enjoyed the walk home by her tall husband's side, with the two children walking demurely in front of them. It gave her a great feeling of respectability and security which lasted well into the week

BUT this morning her husband had his Sunday paper at the breakfast table as daily he had his morning paper. He glanced at the front page headlines, passed lightly over the sporting columns, and then settled down to the automobile advertisements. From the moment she served his cereal and poured his coffee he was as far away from her as though back in his office. With his eyes glued upon the small lettered columns he ate mechanically and fumbled blindly for the handle of his coffee cup. Only occasionally he spoke and then in a language she did not understand—of horse-power, and self-starters and wheelbases, the jargon of the factory. The fish cakes which he always enjoyed so heartily grew cold upon his plate.

"Your breakfast is spoiling," she reminded him gently. "Can't you let the paper wait until afternoon?"

"Here we have it," he exclaimed. "What's the matter with this?" He folded the paper in front of him and read:

"'Practically new, six-cylinder machine. Just completely overhauled and repainted. Owner will sell at half cost. No brokers need apply. Telephone Courtland 3346 for a demonstration.' That's what I've been looking for, a new machine at half price. What do you think of that? Nickerson's is only a four."

"What do you suppose he wants to sell for?" inquired his wife.

"What does a man want to sell anything for?" replied Waterman somewhat snappily for Sunday morning.

"The children, dear," she cautioned. "Won't you have a cup of hot coffee?"

But Waterman glanced at his watch.

"It's only half-past nine. I'll bet you if I rang him up now, he'd take us all out this afternoon."

"But we were going to call on the Brown's this afternoon."

"Hang the Brown's," he exclaimed, pushing back his chair. "If he'll take us, we'll go."

Once again Mrs. Waterman ventured a suggestion.

"Sam dear, half price doesn't mean much, does it, if we don't know what the original price was?"

"The first thing to do is to see if we like the machine," he declared.

HE hurried out into the hall to the telephone while the children applauded. But Mrs. Waterman leaned her head upon her hand and listened anxiously, hoping against hope that the man might be out. But he wasn't, and was willing to come around to the house within an hour.

"Fine," assented Waterman. "We'll be ready."

"Hustle up, old lady," exclaimed Waterman as he returned. "He'll be here in an hour."

"Then we aren't going to church?" she asked weakly.

"When there's a chance to get a ride on a day like this?" answered Waterman in amazement. "Just you get into your togs while I decide where we'll go. Wish to Heavens I had a road map."

Mrs. Waterman rose from the table at once without waiting for her second cup of coffee and for the next hour found her hands full. It was one thing to dress the children for church, because their things were all laid out, but an auto ride offered an entirely new set of conditions which meant going to the bottom of various bureau drawers. She left herself scarcely ten minutes in which to slip into a street dress and do her hair. She depended upon a rain-coat and a veil to make up for the inevitable deficiencies, but even before the veil was securely tied she heard the toot of a horn outside and her husband's impatient voice below.

"Aren't you ready yet?" he called irritably.

"Yes, Sam," she answered as she tied a frantic knot.

The rather vague Courtland 3346 turned out to be an agreeable enough apparition dressed in a long automobile coat, colored goggles, and visored cap. He removed his cap as Mrs. Waterman approached and she judged from the somewhat sparse crop of grayish hair revealed, that he must be a man of past middle life. His name was Enderman and he appeared nervous and in a good deal of hurry. She was scarcely seated with a child either side of her and Sam on the front seat—she had hoped that he might see his way clear to ride beside her—before he had pressed a lever and they were off.

Mr. Enderman's apparent object was to get somewhere in time to get back somewhere else. He hurried out of Edgemere as though afraid of being overtaken by someone and so into the country. It was a pleasant day for a ride and the broad fields were in fresh green and the trees in blossom, but Mrs. Waterman brought back with her only a sort of cubist picture made up of green and pink streaks. The rest of the trip consisted of a number of narrow escapes. It lasted without a pause for four hours which brought them home a half hour late for dinner. During the entire excursion Waterman never spoke to her, although once or twice he did turn to smile ecstatically. Cramped, thirsty, hungry, tired and dusty, she made her way into the house leaving him in earnest conversation with the visored cap and goggles. She feared the worst, but was too utterly disheartened to protest. Her one thought was to get the children clean with a possible opportunity to get clean herself before dinner.

WATERMAN bought the car for fourteen hundred dollars, though he had to sell some telephone stock to do it and he did not have much stock of any kind at that. The bargain included the full equipment—self-starter, fire extinguisher, extra tire and other articles too numerous to mention, as the auctioneers say. Perhaps the most interesting feature was a box full of greasy but mysterious looking tools. At the last moment Enderman threw in his coat and goggles—almost eagerly. He declared the outfit had cost him over three thousand dollars and he gave as his reason for selling, pressure of business.

"She's perfect in every respect and you can get sixty miles an hour out of her," said Enderman.

"Fine," nodded Waterman.

Fourteen hundred dollars was considerably more than Waterman had planned to spend, but, as he told his wife, "After all, it pays in the long run to get the best and we'll save enough in other ways to make up for it."

"In what ways?" she asked mildly.

"Why," he returned uneasily. "We won't want to go to the theatre as often, and then we'll save car fares and—and——"

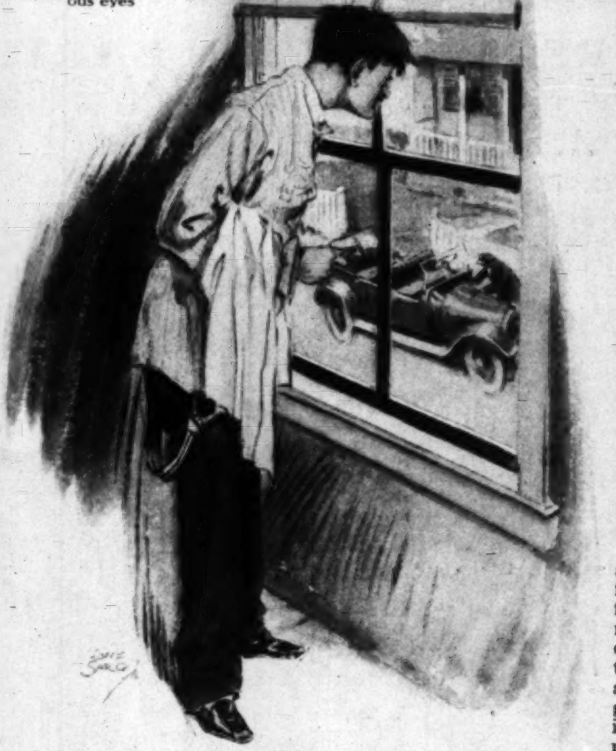
"Yes, Sam?" she waited.

"Hang it all, you'll see."

This was on Monday morning.

"I may not get home to dinner tonight," he informed her. "I'm going around to the garage and take my first lesson. Now that we're going to get her, I want to use her as soon as possible."

As a matter of fact, it was after ten before he came home and for three hours Mrs. Waterman had sat up, white about the lips, expecting any moment to receive a report of an accident. He was not in any way injured but he was dog tired.



Waterman went to the window and watched the process with envious eyes

"Believe me, it's no cinch to run one of those things," he declared. "But I'll get it. The trouble is, there are a lot of confounded fools who don't know enough to get out of the way."

The next night Mrs. Waterman had a new source of anxiety; if he was not killed himself, he might kill someone else which would be almost as bad, because then he would be locked up in jail. Considering the fact that he could not drive a nail without hitting his finger, she did not have as much confidence in him as she would have had, had he been like Nickerson who was always tinkering about his place and who actually built a lattice for his roses to climb on. Waterman who was nothing, if not courageous, also built one, but it did not add anything to his reputation for sobriety and she condemned it. Sitting alone these long evenings she sometimes recalled that episode and was sorry she had not kept it in order—in case anything happened—the children might have [illegible] to remember their father by. IN ordinary matters Mrs. Waterman h world of faith in her husband. When children were sick or she was sick, she will trusted him with their lives. And yet though he knew less about medicine about gasoline cars, she now took her p by his side in abject fear. She refused to him credit for having even the ordinary of sight and hearing. Perhaps this was cause she scarcely recognized him in his and goggles, and partly also because of marked change that had come over Often he came into the bed at night without even inquiring about the children. At rate, she persisted in warning him of every proaching machine she saw, even though might be a block away; and again and she placed her hand upon his arm to warn of pedestrians who had not the slightest of crossing the street.

"Don't keep touching my arm," he finally burst out. "First thing you know wreck us."

After that she merely whispered, but this also distracted his attention. So she was forced to sit and suffer in silence in a sort fatalistic trance. To cap the climax Waterman lost his way, so that it was after half eleven before they reached the garage. Then they had to walk home. But that was an inconvenience and involved nothing dangerous to life, limb or personal liberty. Still it had its effect upon Waterman the morning. He resented his wife's attempt get him up at seven and declared it was nothing but persecution on her part.

Mrs. Waterman began to look forward to the evenings, even though they did irritate Sam, and discovered a new diversion. This consisted of over a collection of road maps covering at first New York and its suburbs, but which eventually took in the whole state and finally New England. Sometimes he even mentioned casually as a source of future joy, the (Continued on page

WHAT THE BARONESS FORGOT

By TUDOR JENKS

THE Reverend John G. Gregory was opening his mail on Monday morning. Monday was for him a day of rest, meaning a brief surcease from the heavier of his parish duties, just as Sunday should have been a rest for his parishioners, and a day given to the contemplation of the higher life.

But Mr. Gregory had his suspicions that those of his parishioners who were his creditors—a growing list—spent at least part of their Saturday half-holidays, if not some of their Sunday mornings, in writing him letters about their "little accounts," for the Monday mails were only too apt to bring him dunning letters.

His salary was small, his wife economical, and his living simple; but he was optimistic, full of faith in a Providence that works fewer miracles than many of us would like to see. Prices were high, and the Reverend Mr. Gregory liked to see his wife and child comfortable. Too often he had quoted to himself, "the laborer is worthy of his hire," and persuaded himself into expenditures that might have been avoided by a skimping soul.

So, on this Monday he had at least three missives that made him nervous. One suggested that he had "undoubtedly overlooked" a growing balance due—which in reality had hardly been out of his mind; a second declared, "We shall expect a substantial check by return mail"—a bit of optimism that was evidently false; and the third "regretted that we shall be forced to take steps."

Mr. Gregory rubbed his hair perplexedly, and with a sigh filed the three letters with a growing pile of their fellows, and turned to take up the fourth epistle—a plain letter in a feminine hand which he at once knew to be that of Mrs. Galvaney. He shook his head slowly as he slit the envelope, wondering "what was bothering the old lady now"; for it was her habit and diversion to send him puzzling little queries on personality after death, the true definition of faith, as used in the Pauline Epistles, or the best answers to the assertion of the primacy of St. Peter—all according to what theological magazine she had last read.

But he received the surprise of his life.

Mrs. Galvaney's husband, Christopher, of the Produce Exchange, had been in a successful corner, had come out with a handsome balance to his credit, and had had the idea of doing "something for St. Ann's." But his wife, grateful for the letters of the young clergyman, had intervened and deflected the gift. She wrote:

> Dear Mr. Gregory:—Mr. Galvaney and I are sending you a check in the hope that you will use it in taking the vacation you need.
> Dear Mrs. Gregory has been indiscreet enough to let us know her anxiety about your health, and it will be the greatest favor to us if you will let our little gift be the means of guarding your health that means so much to the parish, and to us.
> Your most sincere friends and parishioners,
> Christopher Galvaney,
> Norah Galvaney.

Well—the Special Providence had at last taken up his case. The Reverend Mr. Gregory was sincerely grateful to heaven, to his two good friends, and to his wife's somewhat indiscreet tongue. He fingered the crisp check, feeling as if he were a boy again, and it was Christmas time.

He went to the foot of the stairs, and called: "Sophia, come down a minute, can you?"

When his wife arrived he put the letter and check into her hands, and shared her delight. Then she asked: "You'll take your vacation—won't you, John?"

"Yes, dear," was his reply. "I think I really need it. I shall work the better afterwards, I know. while I'm away, I shall complete my book on Finance. It is nearly ready, you know."

Mrs. Gregory clapped her hands softly but fervently, saying, "Oh, I am so glad, John!" and the die was cast.

The check was deposited, the gratitude letter written, approved by his wife, and mailed, and the preparations for the vacation began.

Knowing how easily money melted under the fervent heat of back debts and daily needs, Mrs. Gregory gave John no rest until he had bought the tickets for his long-planned journey, and a articles of dress needed for the trip. Then came need for leaving a certain amount of cash with wife to cover the period of his absence, and to sure of her comfort. This was managed with possible economy—and then came the unexpected.

One of his creditors—either the butcher, the the candlestick-maker, or the water-rates man wind of the proposed trip, and concluded that must have his little account settled—or at least substantially reduced. He called personally, and bullet-headed bluntness worried a sizeable check the badgered clergyman. Then he must have the word, either accidentally or designedly, friend, the coal-and-wood man, for that followed suit, and also squeezed a check out

When a third creditor followed, the Reverend saw it was a case of "Stand, the ground's your own, braves!" and flatly refused to be held up for any payments until his return. And that gave breathing-spell, during which the steamer sailed conveyed the tired clergyman away to a milder

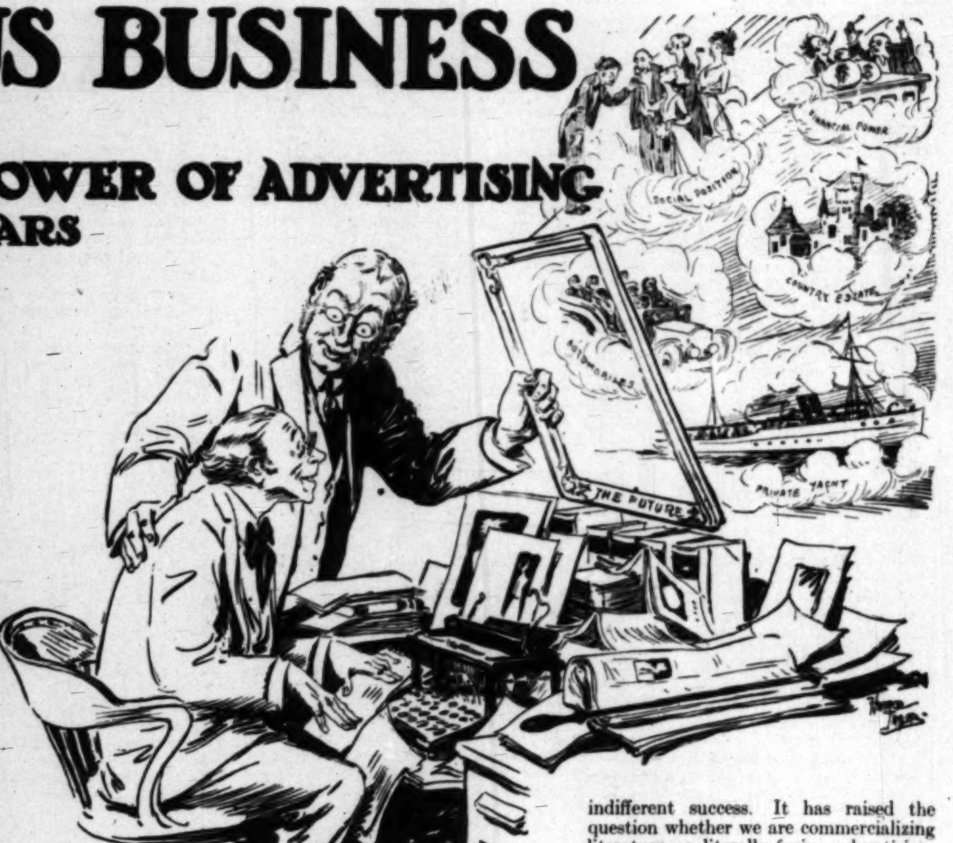
FRIVOLOUS BUSINESS

THE SCOPE AND POWER OF ADVERTISING

BY CHARLES W. MEARS

Illustrations by HORACE TAYLOR



The general manager's hand-painted vision of a prosperous future

EVERY ADVERTISER knows more about advertising than any other advertiser, and there are college professors who never bought fourteen agate lines in their natural lives who know still more.

Unfortunately, however, those who have the best inside dope are invariably the least communicative on the subject, with the result that when you hear an address, or read an article, on advertising (the present instance not excepted), make a note in your scribble book that what you have just heard or read is not the real thing at all and is to be avoided in your practice.

In that way and by keeping mum about it, you will acquire a reputation as one of our keenest and foremost advertisers, and that reputation will get you talked about quite as much as though you ran your own photograph in the newspapers.

A two-dollar book on the subject informs us that there are twenty-five different species of advertising copy, ranging from the Eye Killer and Bell Wether varieties to the Heart Throb and College Yell types. But if you are not fussy as to labels and would know the truth without undue hesitation or lingering by the wayside, learn, gentle reader, that in all the world there are but two classes of advertising copy, the which being (1) the kind that brings home the bacon in the form of sales, and (2) the kind that does not.

All you have to do, in order to make money on your advertising, is to use Kind No. 1.

Not everybody can be a pennant-winning copy writer, notwithstanding, that everybody is sure he can. The reason for this is that some people are not supplied with paper and pencil. If anybody have these requisites, he can qualify without any effort, if he can only think what to say.

This may seem surprising; for, no doubt, you have read many an advertisement the writer of which surely devoted no time whatever to thinking. But appearances are sometimes deceptive, and the writer's purpose in writing the apparently thoughtless advertisement may have been to make you think that he did not think, and when you conclude that he did not think, you think exactly as he thought you would think. This is the Very Acme of Kind No. 1.

Advertising writers, like advertising copy, are divided into two classes: (1) those who bring home the bacon in the form of fat salaries for themselves, and (2) those who do not.

But from this you must not infer that Advertising Writer No. 1 is in the habit of producing Advertising Copy No. 1. The two classes may have no relation [illegible] landscapes with them wherever they go

Just because a writer produces the kind of copy that impels sales, is no indication that he receives a princely salary for his product. Far from it. Many a man writing brilliant and successful copy receives his principal compensation in the general manager's hand-painted vision of a prosperous future that, somehow or other, always remains in the future.

And it is not unusual for a copy writer to receive big wages and even to be let into the stockholding fold, not because he writes the kind of copy that makes sales and, is therefore profitable to the house, but because he is gifted with that rare insight into human nature which irresistibly actuates him to use his space, telling the public what a wonderful man his general manager is.

That this same general manager may be the same individual that fixes the copy writer's salary, is sometimes merely a coincidence.

ONCE a copy writer gets infected with this disease, there is no stopping him until the expert accountants discover how many million dollars the company has sunk in the hole of misdirected energy and enthusiasm. After a meeting of the board of directors, the copy writer looks about for some other company having a general manager that he thinks he could learn to admire.

Advertising copy is a form of literature that has but one more pinnacle to climb. It has yet to be set to music.

True, there are advertising songs already extant, but a song can be a song without being even distantly related to music.

By music I mean something by—say Puccini.

When Puccini discovers that he has been wasting his time around the Metropolitan Opera House, and that True Fame, to say nothing of ample compensation, awaits him in one of the advertising agency offices, then, if not before, we shall have real advertising set to real music, sung by Caruso, and recorded on the indestructible circular discs of the Umpty Umpty Record Company of New York, Paris and London.

So much money is even now expended annually in advertising that the cost of the New York opera season is less than equivalent to the cash discount of advertising bills. That being so, certainly it is not money that stands between advertising and Puccini.

Many literary giants have felt the call of preferred position next to pure reading matter, but with only indifferent success. It has raised the question whether we are commercializing literature or literally frying advertising, and nobody dares answer.

BUT one thing is certain—when literary giants undertake advertising writing, other literary men admit that at least they are advertising men, whereas the common variety of advertising writers considers them very good at literature. But it is hard to please everybody.

Advertising has its chief habitat in North America, south of the great lakes, east of the Rockies, and north of 30° latitude. It was discovered by Robert Bonner, of the New York Ledger, dragged into captivity by P. T. Barnum, tamed by Charles Austin Bates, reduced to reason by John E. Kennedy, and commercialized by Claude C. Hopkins.

And it will not reach its honorary degree until somebody comes along with the dynamite force and descriptive power of Rudyard Kipling, the seductiveness of Arnold Bennett, the enthusiasm of a progressive, and a knowledge of human life second only to Solomon's, and shows us through his copy that the best copy writer we had previously known merely prospected around the edge of a diamond mine more profitably than Cecil Rhodes ever tapped.

That gentleman will be some copy writer. And, meeting the fate common to geniuses, his best copy will be poo-hoo-ed from Kennebunk to The Needles as faulty in psychological aim, freaky in English, and three glances removed from the optical center. It was ever thus.

AS soon as Mrs. Waterman learned that Waterman's management of the machine did not necessarily involve either total annihilation for her family or some other family, she began to take more comfort in these trips. She was forced to admit that through June, July and August it was rather pleasant touring about and that she saw a great deal more of New York and its vicinity than was possible in any other way. Country towns and seashore resorts which had been scarcely more than names to her, now became associated in her mind with certain tangible, concrete facts. They were so many hours run and contained this or that good hotel. For Waterman no longer was content to take a luncheon with him and stop by the side of the road. If he had had a seven hundred and fifty dollar machine, that might have been possible, but it was not in keeping with a three thousand dollar "six." Of course, that added considerably to the expense of the trips. Mrs. Waterman ventured to suggest as much, but Waterman waved it aside with a sweep of his leather-gauntleted hand.

"We're a long time dead," he said airily.

That was undoubtedly true, but it was equally true that it would be a sad fact to dwell upon if they could not look forward to a long time alive. And while, as far as anyone knows, being dead is an extremely inexpensive condition, being alive is not. Once Waterman stepped into his machine, he seemed to forget completely the routine expenses of their little home which had formerly so fretted him. It was as though he had left behind him all such matters as mortgages, insurance, provision bills, wages for Mary Ann, who was having such an easy time of it, clothes and shoes for the children. He came home to sleep and that was all. It was as though with the machine Enderman had given him a three thousand dollar car salary, which as a matter of cold fact, was considerably more than Waterman was actually earning.

HAD he been a little more moderate, all might still have been well. There seemed to be no need of going out every Sunday and every fair evening, but Waterman did not agree.

"Now that we've got the car we want to use it," he declared. "I can't let it stay idle in the garage eating its head off. That wouldn't be sense, would it?"

According to him it cost more not to use it, than to use it. Given three or four rainy days and he fretted all the time figuring out what he was losing.

Besides that, he was no longer content at home. It was with a pang that Mrs. Waterman realized this. In the house he was as uneasy as a man waiting for an overdue train. He did not know what to do with himself. After exhausting the road maps he had turned to automobile catalogues and she found him surreptitiously studying the attractions of the new "eights." Long since she had been doing little odd jobs around the house rather than run the risk of asking him. He had lost all interest in such things. This she attributed partly to lack of sufficient sleep.

On week-days he was seldom in bed before one and then slept only fitfully. On Sundays he was up at five and down to the garage before breakfast. He brought the car back with him and expected her and the children to be ready as soon as he had swallowed a cup of hot coffee. When he came back at the end of a hundred or hundred and fifty mile drive she made it a point to get the children away from him and up to their rooms as soon as possible. Most of the time they came back as irritable as he. And yet they had been pleading of late to be allowed to go out on the night drives. They took it to be a form of punishment to be forced to remain at home at any time now.

As for Mrs. Waterman herself, she felt as though the house had been closed that summer and she had been away on a long tour—not the leisurely restful kind of which she sometimes dreamed, but something more in the nature of the coast-to-coast trip of a commercial traveler. And the little house itself carried out the illusion. Waterman had not planted that year his usual garden and the front lawn had not been mowed half a dozen times. It had grown up to dandelions and weeds, and a rotting board on the front piazza had finally caved in. Had it not been for the item of coal, she would have looked forward eagerly to the winter.

It was one Saturday afternoon in September that Waterman came home with a worried look. For a wonder he had come direct to the house, instead of going first to the garage and bringing around the car. Mrs. Waterman, dressed in her linen duster, met him at the front door.

"Why, what's the matter, Sam?" she inquired.

"Things haven't been going very well at the office," he answered uneasily.

"Then we aren't going out this afternoon?" she asked hopefully.

"No little woman. I—I—well, I want to talk it over with you."

Mrs. Waterman removed her linen duster—removed it as a workman removes his overalls at the close of work.

"Come upstairs, dear," she said.

Up there Waterman told his story—a thousand dollar note to meet and nothing to meet it with. She listened until he was through. He was sitting disconsolately with his elbows on his knees and she went over and began to stroke his black hair.

"I don't see anything in that to worry about," she said gently.

"Don't?" he exclaimed. "It's enough to force me into bankruptcy."

"How, Sam dear?" she asked.

"Because Eisenbaum holds the note and he'd rather see me go to the wall than not," he answered bluntly.

"When is it due, Sam?"

"In three days. There's money enough coming in later to pay it four times over, but I can't collect."

She continued to stroke his hair in silence and then she said:

"If I told you of a way to get the money, would you do it?"

"Would I?" he exclaimed.

"Then, Sam dear," she went on hesitatingly. "Why—why don't you sell the machine?"

"Sell the machine?" he answered in a daze.

"Put an advertisement in the paper tomorrow morning," she nodded quickly. "Surely, there's someone who—who hasn't ever had a machine who'll want it."

"But look here, little woman, I bought that car for you and the children. And now—why, it would be almost like selling you!"

She placed her head against his.

"We won't mind—honest we won't," she said. "And winter's coming on and—well, it will seem kind of cozy to stay home for a little while, won't it?"

Waterman rose to his feet and took his wife in his arms.

"Maybe it will," he answered slowly. "Honest, I've sort of missed the old place. Anyhow—you're a trump."

It was a man by the name of [illegible] who rang up Waterman the second day the advertisement appeared.

"She's a beauty," Waterman told him over the telephone. "Yes, practically new, six-cylinder machine with full equipment. My reason for selling? Well you see—you see, it's pressure of business. Sure, I'll be around in an hour."

HE sold it for a thousand dollars and threw in his cap and goggles.

On the following Sunday Waterman awoke at four-thirty as Nickerson was tuning up his machine for an unusually early start. He was half way out of bed when his wife put out her arm.

"Don't you know you haven't got to go to the garage today?" she whispered excitedly. "You've sold the machine and this—oh, this is Sunday morning."

Waterman's head sank back wearily on the pillow.

"Poor Nickerson," he muttered and fell asleep again.

At nine o'clock Mrs. Waterman stole into the children's room with her finger upon her lip. But they, too, were sound asleep. So she tip-toed downstairs to Mary Ann.

"You may leave the breakfast on the stove and go out," she said. "I'll see to it myself, because—we're all resting this morning."

What the Baroness Forgot

various games played every evening, and all the world resorted there soon after dinner. Mr. Gregory gained rapidly in health, strength, and tone—and became (incidentally and through natural advantages) extremely good-looking. He worked faithfully at his book and made excellent progress—during rigidly fixed working hours. But, in the evening, like all the rest, he went to the Casino, and watched the gay world.

There was one game—roulette—that fascinated him. He found himself drawn to the table by the pleasure of watching the eager players; and for the life of him, he could not see any serious harm in it. The guests seemed merely to play for fun. Though large sums changed hands, good-nature prevailed, and losses or winnings were accepted with fair equanimity.

One player that Mr. Gregory found especially interesting was an aristocratic old lady, with brilliant black eyes and snowy hair. She was full of vivacity, seemed to know everybody, and talked with equal freedom to croupier, banker, boy or girl, man or woman—all of whom thawed into comradeship in a moment. Once she dropped a goldpiece, which the Reverend John picked up, and that brought him at once within her sphere of influence.

"Oh, thank you!—a thousand thanks upon you! Now that you have sanctified my coin, Monsieur l'Abbé, you shall see me coin thousands! Tiens! Observe, I shall place the coin upon—Dites moi—vous parlez Francais, sans doute?"

"Mais oui, Madame," Gregory answered, in some confusion. "C'est——"

"Sept! Tres bien. Ca va—" broke in the vivacious French lady; and before he could explain, the goldpiece was deposited on 7, and the whirl of the wheel brought up that number a winner—bringing to the Frenchwoman a return of thirty-five times her stake.

"Voila!" she exclaimed. "See! You have won for me. I shall have luck all ze evening!"

And so it seemed. She did not break the bank, it is true; but she won enough to give her a kindly interest in her "mascot, l'Abbé" as she persisted in calling him. Before the evening was over, he learned that she was a Baroness, and played the game only to banish ennui—that enemy of age. Then she sought him out one afternoon on the hotel piazza, and proved a most delightfully clever and talkative woman, interested in everything—even in Parish Finance.

So ran the days till the Reverend John Gregory saw the date of his departure looming upon him. And this brought thought of his hotel bill—which had already given him some uneasy moments. When the clerk gave it to him, he took it up to his room and opened it.

A cold chill slowly ran up and then down his spine. The figures were half as much again as his worst fears had written them.

How did it happen? Well—partly extras, and partly a misunderstanding of rates as to monthly and weekly taking of rooms. Also, the unhappy man found that he had figured wrongly the amounts drawn on his letter-of-credit—and, in brief, the Reverend John Gregory found himself in the cheerful position of being entirely unable to pay his hotel bill.

Even his slender jewelry—a clergyman's neat sleeve-links, watch, fob and so on—would not serve to ransom him.

And he was a stranger far from home.

He ate his dinner with the feeling that he was swindling the management, and then wandered over to the Casino through sheer force of habit, and automatism.

Soon he found himself standing, a woebegone figure behind the chair of the Baroness, listening absent-mindedly to her lamentations over a run of ill-luck. At length, seeing him, she begged that he would touch a goldpiece for her. He smiled deprecatingly, but laid a finger on the coin.

It was staked and lost.

"Ah—it makes nothing!" exclaimed the Baroness. "The Devil is in it! Even my mascot fails me! It must be that I am the Madame Jonah. Here, Monsieur l'Abbé, place the coin yourself. See, it is not mine but yours. My luck is no more. You please try your luck!"

She placed two or three coins in his hand, and while he groped for an excuse she grasped his hand and elbow, and pushed his arm toward the painted layout. At the same moment, the clergyman tried to release the coins. The result caused the coins to drop upon the cloth, some on numbers, some upon the lines between.

"Le jeu est fait—rien ne va plus!" came the cry, and the wheel started, while the Reverend John Gregory's head whirled also.

In a moment he was aware that the Baroness was pushing a pile of gold toward him, her eyes shining with anticipation.

"You win, Monsieur l'Abbé!" [illegible] the Baroness. "You win. And now you have taken off the curse—and I shall win. You shall see!" And she returned so eagerly to her play that the [illegible] clergyman found no chance to come to an explanation.

He even waited until the hour for closing, but it was no better then. The Baroness poohpoohed his attempts to renounce "his" winnings; declared that the money was now "devoted" to the church—and, in short, flatly refused to take back a single coin—saying she had gained so much already that she would have "to pile the plate high in the church to save her conscience."

So, he gave up in despair, bade the Baroness goodnight, and went off with a sneaky wish that he could offer up a prayer of thanksgiving for his winnings at the gaming-table!—which reminded him of Macbeth's wonder that he could not say "Amen!"

In the morning the Reverend John

Frivolous Business

Little wonder then that many advertising writers write what will please the G. M. rather than take the bull by the horns and compose the kind of stuff that rings twelve on the cash register. For even copy writers are sensitive to criticism and pay day.

ADVERTISING has not been set to music, but it has been set to art. Indeed, it has been fully and efficaciously wedded to art. And immediately after the wedding, art went directly to work for a living and began rendering a useful service to mankind.

A picture that merely pleases is like a doll-faced girl that can't cook. But a picture in an advertisement that helps to keep a plant running, helps to keep a factory force employed and out of mischief, helps labor to meet its grocery bills and pay the rent—art thus employed is art indeed. Those artists who were permitted to practice on magazine front covers, are now chiefly engaged in making automobiles seem to carry beautiful landscapes with them wherever they go.

Over the main entrance to a Chicago theater is this inscription:

All passes: Art alone endures.

This is altogether erroneous. In the first place, this inscription is misleading in that it has nothing whatever to do with complimentary tickets. And in the second place, it misinforms with respect to art.

Art has endured many things in the past, and the patrons of art have endured even more. But now have come the heydays, and henceforth art will endure, but not alone. Art will endure hand in hand with advertising. The power of advertising is beyond the wildest comprehension of the wildest comprehender. By means of advertising one can make his two-horse factory look like all out-of-doors and fill a double page spread. And it can create a fire sale where the fire department never made a call.

It is the power of advertising that puts the strains of perforated music in homes that previously knew only the cadences of the baby's weeping. It is the power of advertising that makes us speed night messages home to the dear ones who previously had to wait for dubious picture postals.

So, too, it is the power of advertising that makes us snapshot our beloved and the scenes we visit. It is the power of advertising that makes men safety shavers, that puts books into our sectional cases, fountain pens and watches in our pockets, bath tubs in our homes, and breakfast foods in our stomachs.

Due to advertising, we know more than we did, and the more we know the more we want. Whereupon, we hustle the more to get sufficient additional income to satisfy our increasing wants. Advertising, therefore, is an incentive to speed, endurance, cleanliness, health and a breadth of life and enjoyment that Methuselah never stumbled upon in all his 969 years.

But some advertisers do not care whether their advertising pays or not. Many a man whose business is established, wants his name to live after he has passed away, and begins to advertise while he is yet here, so that he may know for himself whether the right kind of obituary is getting into the papers.

On the other hand the real advertising of this decade is being done by business men who want, not to die, but to live. These men advertise in order to increase sales, to the end that they may have a livelihood on which to continue this mundane existence.

But publishers began to realize a certain responsibility in their business. They could not conscientiously permit otherwise dignified men to act in print like a cellar full of hungry tigers. The combatants had to be tamed down.

Business men are wise. That is evidenced by the rapidity and freedom with which they can change their minds. Barred from the paper that had brought them good results, they cooled off and changed their minds. True, they had made the publisher rich, this same publisher who had grown so dictatorial. But also, they had made themselves rich. And so they headed in, as the publisher had suggested. They felt like the man who had cured the rheumatic hind legs of his mule, only to have the mule's cured legs lift him over the fence into the next orchard.

But, never mind, advertisers like to advertise. What people want, they even put themselves out to get—a summer vacation, for instance.

MAN WANTS rest and he buys it at any cost. He puts in two or three weeks or more at some almost accessible place where it rains five days in seven and freezes the other two. Today's city papers reach there day after tomorrow.

Laundry sent on Monday comes back in the evening of next week, perhaps. The vacation cottage has a wood fire in the parlor to keep out the damp and a leaky bath tub on the third floor to let it in. The sojourner eats more than is good for him, has a smoky oil lamp in his room, and lays him down at night on the velvet side of something that feels like a road scraper.

Here he stays because he knows that if he went elsewhere he would be worse off. This same man would raise merry Cain if, on his regular business trips at the expense of the house, he could not get a room with bath, shaving papers, electric reading lamp, immediate service, and a downy couch properly turned down for him before eight o'clock nightly.

But he wants a vacation, and he takes whatever goes with it and excuses, or forgets what does not go with it, and is as mild-mannered all the time as though the kingdoms of this earth were his alone.

So with advertising. Advertisers want to advertise, and no handicap deters them. And this is the cue to successful advertising: you need only make the readers of your advertisements want what you have to sell, so that, with all its shortcomings (like a vacation cottage), readers will grab for it eagerly.

FOOD DEPARTMENT

By Phoebe Burbank

Preserves, Marmalades, etc.

WITH most fruits, sugar and fruit juice are used in equal proportions. This, with correct boiling, gives a delicious, tender jelly. If too much sugar is used the jelly will be syrupy, the color will be bad and the flavor of the fruit will be spoiled. The time allowed for boiling varies. For grapes, currants and crabapples, eight to ten minutes will be sufficient, but for raspberries, strawberries and apples, twenty to thirty minutes must be allowed. The boiling must be rapid or the jelly will be tough.

Prepare the jelly glasses by first washing them and putting them in a kettle of cold water. Set the kettle on the stove and allow it to come gradually to the boiling point. Remove the glasses and drain. When filling place the glasses on a towel wrung out of hot water. After filling cover with melted paraffin or with strong white paper, which has been cut a little larger than the top of the glass so that the edges can be fastened with mucilage. Where this paper cover is used a circular piece of heavy note paper dipped in brandy is laid on top of the jelly before the larger cover is adjusted.

Plum Conserve

10 lbs. plums
10 lbs. sugar
2 lbs. seeded raisins
2 oranges

Stone the plums, add a little water, the sugar, grated rind and juice of oranges and cook for forty minutes. Add the raisins and cook fifteen minutes longer. —Miss B. P., 722 Gholson Avenue, Cincinnati, O.

Lemon Preserve

1 doz. lemons
4 pounds sugar
1 cup water
½ cup chopped raisins
¼ cup almonds

Peel and cut the lemons in slices and soak for a day in cold water. Boil the sugar and water for twenty minutes, stirring constantly to keep from burning. Add the lemons, chopped almonds and raisins and let thicken slowly. This is a very good sandwich filling.—Mrs. W. P. B., Cleveland, O.

Winter Marmalade

1 pound dried apricots
1 quart apple sauce
Scant quart sugar
Juice of 1 orange

Wash apricots thoroughly, cover with hot water and soak overnight. Make a quart of smooth apple sauce. Rub the softened apricots through a sieve to remove fibres, and stir the pulp, the sauce, sugar and orange juice thoroughly together. Cook very slowly, with asbestos mat under the kettle to prevent scorching. About forty-five minutes will be required. Put in jelly glasses, and when cold, cover with paraffin.—Mrs. C. E. H., 3667 Shenandoah Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Lemon Honey

1 pound granulated sugar
6 eggs
¼ pound butter
4 lemons

Put the sugar into a saucepan, add the yolks of six eggs and the whites of four, the juice of four lemons and the grated rind of two, and the butter. Stir well over a slow fire until the mixture is as thick as honey. Pour into glass jars and cover tightly. Keep in a cool place. Use as a sandwich or cake filling.—L. M. F., Bradford, Kentucky.

Orange Marmalade

1 orange
1 lemon
1 grapefruit
Water
Sugar

Shave the fruit very thin, rejecting only the seeds and cores. Measure fruit and add to it three times the quantity of water. Let stand in an earthenware dish overnight and next morning boil for ten minutes only. Let stand another night and then add an equal quantity of sugar to the fruit and boil steadily until it jells. Watch carefully that it does not burn. —Mrs. A. E., 3734 Conklin St., E. San Diego, Cal.

Orange and Fig Marmalade

3 pounds ripe figs
4 oranges
1 lemon
1 pound seeded raisins
½ cup chopped walnuts

Peel and slice thin the figs and oranges. Add the juice of the lemon, cover with cold water and simmer one half hour. Add an equal measure of sugar and the raisins chopped. Cook until thick. When cool stir in the nuts.—Miss J. G., 238 S. Bunker Hill Ave., Los Angeles, Cal.

Kumquat Marmalade

2 lemons
1 quart kumquats
Sugar
Water
½ pound English walnuts

Quarter the kumquats and remove the seeds, slice the lemons. Combine the fruits and leave for twenty-four hours in twice their volume of water. Put on the stove and boil gently for one hour. Cool, drain, and chop the fruit rather coarsely. Return to the liquid and measure. For each pint of fruit add two cups of sugar and boil gently until clear and thick. Add the walnuts, chopped, not too fine. Pour into glasses, and cover.

Orange Bread

Dissolve ¼ yeast cake, broken in pieces, in ¼ cup of lukewarm water, and add one egg well beaten, 1 tablespoon of melted butter, 1 tablespoon melted lard, 1 tablespoon salt, 2 tablespoons sugar, grated rind of 2 oranges, and ¾ cup of orange juice. Beat thoroughly, using a Dover egg beater. Add flour to make the right consistency to move, the amount required being about 3 cups, and beat until smooth. Turn on a slightly floured board and knead until elastic. Cover and let rise overnight. In the morning shape into loaves, put in buttered bread tins, cover and again let rise. Bake in a hot oven 45 minutes.—Mrs. J. A. P., 7311 University Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Sweet Pickled Canteloupe or Citron

Pare the melons and remove seeds. Cut into convenient lengths. Let stand overnight in water to which has been added three tablespoons of salt and two teaspoons of powdered alum to each gallon. In morning drain and boil until nearly tender, drain and put into the syrup. Boil fifteen minutes, then store in jars in the syrup. Syrup—boil thirty minutes two quarts of vinegar, six pints of sugar and a half ounce each of stick cinnamon and whole cloves tied in bags. —Mrs. M. G., 2195 Doswell Ave., St. Paul, Minn.

Blackberry Jam

Clean and wash ten pounds of blackberries or black raspberries. Put on stove with enough water in them to keep from burning. Boil half an hour, then add two pounds of raisins and seven and one half pounds of granulated sugar. Stone raisins and cut fine. Boil until thick. Very rich.—Mrs. E. P. W., 29 Eames St., Ashtabula, Ohio.

Pear Conserve

Five pounds of hard pears cut in half-inch dice, five pounds of sugar put on pears. Let stand overnight. Next day add one pound of raisins, rinds of two oranges cut into small pieces, juice of three oranges and two lemons. Boil slowly till quite thick, and just before taking from the fire add a half pound of broken walnut meats. Can like any other preserves.—N. M. S., 3647 West 64th St., Chicago, Ill.

Fruit Gelatine

½ cup stoned dates
8 figs sliced
1 cup raisins
1 cup sugar
2 oranges grated and squeezed
12 English walnuts, cut fine

Soak a box of gelatine in a pint of cold water, mix all together and let come to a boiling point. Then add 1½ pints of boiling water. Serve with whipped cream.

Fig and Date Pudding

½ lb. dates, ½ lb. figs (put through a grinder)
3 cupfuls of dry bread crumbs
2 eggs (whites and yolks beaten separately)
½ cup granulated sugar
A little nutmeg
1 teaspoon vanilla
½ cup milk (scant)
4 tablespoons melted butter
2 teaspoons cinnamon pinch salt
1 teaspoon baking powder

Steam in pudding mould for 2 hours and serve with any soft sauce desired. Mix sugar, butter and yolks of eggs, beating thoroughly. Flour the fruit just a trifle to keep from sticking, and rub together with the bread crumbs. Add to this the baking powder, cinnamon, etc., and lastly the milk and whites of eggs.—Mrs. G. O., Buchanan, Mich.

A Bogey Game

By Thomas L. Masson

THE first thing Hopeson noticed as he drove up to the country club, was that there were two caddies in the caddy paddock, which rejoiced his soul, because he had chosen the morning of a week day to play his game, liking to be alone, and this was the time when the caddies, as a rule were in school. The second thing he noticed was another runabout in the shed, which gave him the distressing feeling that it might after all have contained a single player, and that he might be forced into playing with this single person, when his principal object was to play alone. Hopeson had indeed cultivated the habit of liking to play alone. He was trying to brace up his game, and wanted practice.

There was no one in the men's locker room, and he thought himself perfectly safe, therefore, as he stepped out of the lower floor onto the turf, up to the first tee.

"It's only a woman after all," he said to himself, with a great spasm of relief. For in truth it was a woman, with her back turned toward him just getting ready to drive off. He watched her for a moment idly, thinking there was something about the figure that was familiar. Then she turned, as one aware of a presence—she turned and faced him and he saw that it was she.

IT might have been awkward if both of them, experienced as they were, had not been on the same plane of self-control. People nowadays do not seem to lose their balance as much as they did. Perhaps the war has given us a sense of our own littleness. Individual tragedies are enacted quietly.

"Why, how do you do?" she said smiling.

"Why, how do you do?" he echoed, also smiling. He was about to add that it was quite an age since he had seen her, but he restrained himself in time. For that last evening in which they had met —Ah! was it not the evening she had turned him down!

That terrible moment rose before his mind's eye now, like a flash—like the fleeting glimpse of a past one gets sometimes in a moving picture. He had loved her. She had pretended to love him; or at least he had thought she pretended. And then in his foolish confidence, he had proposed and she had turned him down—scorned him—told him she never even dreamed of such a thing. And he had reproached her with the encouragement she had given him, and she had, almost derisively denied that he could take it in any other way than upon the ground of friendship. And so he had flung himself away from her. That was two years ago and they had never met since.

"Won't you go through?" she was saying politely. "I'm bound to be slower than you are."

"I'm not in the slightest hurry," he replied. "I assure you—really—unless you would feel more comfortable."

"I think I would."

A singular impulse seized him; perhaps it was a subconscious vanity. He was all over his love for her now. And there was, after all, not the slightest reason why he shouldn't. And so he did.

"Perhaps we might play together," he suggested urbanely. He saw that she was startled at the thought. Then the sense of adventure appealed to her.

"That's awfully good of you," she replied. "I'm afraid——"

"Nonsense! It will be a great pleasure. You drive off."

She made rather a good drive, and he sliced.

"I suppose if there had been a gallery" she said, "I would have made a dreadful failure."

At the third hole she suddenly volunteered:

"I am enjoying this immensely. I don't think I ever played so well."

"That is because you are not thinking too much about it," he replied.

At the sixth hole she said:

"This is really delightful. I feel, somehow, perfectly easy playing with you."

"I never played a better game my-

1 Safety Razor Blade does the work of 4

When magnified, the cutting edge of a razor blade looks like a saw. After shaving, no matter how well you wipe the blade, moisture still clings between the microscopic teeth.

As a consequence, very tiny particles of rust form and the blade becomes dull and "pulls".

Put 3-in-One on your blade before and after shaving. Then rust can't possibly form. A little 3-in-One on your strop keeps it soft and makes the razor "cling" when stropping.

Try it and see. Your blades will last twice as long and shave cleaner. Send for our booklet "A Razor Saver" and FREE generous sample of 3-in-One Oil.

A Bogey Game

self," he replied. "I think you are the only woman I ever played with who didn't get me off my game. It's refreshing."

ALL good things come to an end. As they walked up the fair green to the eighteenth hole, which was just in front of the club house, by a common impulse they both paused. Leaning on their clubs they gazed into each others' eyes and smiled. The fresh air, the outdoors, the exercise, has blown away from them everything but the grand sense of being alive. Besides, the situation was frankly amusing.

"I wouldn't have believed it possible," she said, "that I could have enjoyed playing golf so much with a man. Why with Jack it's terrible! He is always telling me how to hold my clubs. In fact, I have refused to play with him."

"That's precisely the way I feel about Dollie," he replied. "I never attempt to show her, although I am bound to say her game doesn't improve; and then she accuses me of never taking any interest in it. We have practically agreed never to play together again. Why, there they are now, waiting for us."

Sure enough! They looked up towards the club house. Two figures stood there. One was his wife. The other was her husband.

"Dollie won't mind my playing with you" he said. "She's not a bit that way."

"And Jack won't mind my playing with you; only——"

She measured her midiron thoughtfully in front of her ball. Then, with a smile, she looked up.

"I wonder what it proves?" she said.

"You mean why you and I get on so well at golf?"

"Yes."

This time he laughed.

"Proves!" he repeated. "One thing above all others."

"And that?"

"That no husband and wife who really love each other, can ever play golf together. It proves that you were right—that we ought never to have been married."

What the Baroness Forgot

Gregory made one more approach to the Baroness. But she made a moue and said, "Monsieur l'Abbé, you have no right to become a bore!"

Perforce, and with a sternly repressed joy, the clergyman accepted the decree of fate, and paid his hotel-bill with an ease that seemed to him a long step on the downward road.

* * * * * * * *

"Oh, how well you look, John dear!" was his wife's greeting, and the Reverend Mr. Gregory there and then made up his mind to let bygones be bygones—and Baronesses be lost in oblivion. Restored, renewed, and with a goodly payment in advance royalties for his book, Parish Finance, the young clergyman entered upon a new lease of hopeful confidence and assured usefulness in his field. And none took more genuine delight in this result than Christopher and Norah Galvaney—whose prosperity continued.

* * * * * * * *

And then, one Sunday, in the middle of his great sermon on Whoso Toucheth Pitch—suddenly the eyes of the preacher caught those of the Baroness—yes, she, of the roulette-table—twinkling up at him from a prominent pew. He stumbled, stammered, came to a stop. Then he rallied himself and went on in a daze to the end.

She awaited him after the service.

"It was a fine discourse, Monsieur l'Abbé. Oh, but you are the lucky one! Whatever you touch—must win. N'est-ce-pas?" and she laughed mischievously. Then, seeing he was silent, she went on: "Ah, but Monsieur l'Abbé, you seem decomposed. Tiens, there is no need! Believe me—I have forgotten everything—everything! Come—present me to your wife!"

N. J. Sinnott, member of Congress from Oregon, once won an important lawsuit by making his final address to the jury all in verse.

One other man in the caboose cupola was thrown clear of the wreck and escaped injury. The trains in collision were sections of a regular stock train. Lack of lights and warning signals is given by survivors of the collision as the cause of the accident. All the victims are residents of Nebraska towns of western and central parts of the State, most of them farmers or stockmen.
